CIVILIZATION

People who are courios to see the effect of sumarine warfare such as has been carried on by European adversaries almost within sight of the American coast will be given an opportunity to see this in the Idle Hour theater Saturday, June 22, for in this mamoth prodnction is shown the actual operation of a submarine under water, the firing of a torpedo and the sinking of an ocean liner loaded with women and children.

This spectacular scene, staged months ago by Mr. Ince with the aid of the United States government, came as a great prophesy of what is actually occuring along the Atlantic coast these days.

In "Civilization" the spectacular goes to the bottom of the ocean in a submarine and sees just how it is managed. He sees the death dealing torpedo forcing its way through the water, beholds the awful crash as it strikes the big liner, sees the big ship and hundreds of men, women and children hurld into the ocean It is a spectacle in itself worth the price of admission to this big production.

A letter from Over Seas

May 5, 1918

Dear Sister:-

As I have a little time to-day, in my new place, which is different than it use to be, as all the other places were snowing, or not a blade of grass But now it is different since my feet landed on this ground. This certainly is a dandy appearance aroudd here, as the first I saw, Saturday afternoon, May 4th, was green fields. The fields and trees are nice and green around here, the flowers are blooming and the whole appearence is nice to my eyes at least so far it certainly was some scenery to see here

I am certainly glad that I am here where I am to-day, altho, at the same time I'd just as soon have my milage go west, or your way, instead of east. Altho, I don't mind the scenery and what I learned so far as it is to my good. It certainly is some education for a person. Don't think I'd like to miss it now just the same.

Well I'm a few miles from home now, but we never want to look back, always look ahead for the news that is coming. We needn't figure the fare or grub rates, as that is all free in this life of mine, and a good salery besides. So we shouldn't kick, for many don't get that, at least there are quite a few that have not the Liberty we have right here.

I'd like to write you more, but as I am not in the Camps where I use to be I don't need to seal my letters nor stamp them anymore, so you can imagine I'm saving some truble here, as you will be the second one to read my letters from now on. Well it's alright I guess, it realy is a good thing the way it is explained.

Well I just don't know any news, yet maybe I can tell you more of the country next time. The climate is warm here, altho we are having a lot of rain so far. Well I don't wont to wait on turns for letters now as I haven't received any mail for two weeks, of course I've been transfered so many times, which makes some difference. Well it may come from all the places at once.

Well I Don't know any news any more. I wrote a letter to mother today, but I don't know whether it gets there or not, I suppose it will tho This letter should find you folks better than ever before, at least I hope so, as I am just fine here.

My address is now—

GOOD FISHING THE PAST WEEK

The past week has been the best fishing we have had this season. Nearly every day a bunch of nimrods have gone forth in quest of the finny natives of the deep. The best fishing has been at the Twin Sisters Lake west of Belmond. In a few hours a person can catch enough cat-fish in that lake for several meals. The fish are good size and bite lively. The past few days a number of people have fished in the river and are bringing in some fine catches.

INVEST IN HUMANITY

By JOHN OLIVER LA GORCE
Associate Editor, National Geographic Magazine.

"SUFFER Little Children to come unto me," declared the compassionate Christ.

But never since He dwelt in flesh upon the earth have there been so many "Little Children" in need of compassion as now.

There are the "Little Children" who have gone to France for you and me and for Christendom and by going have given their all. Can you do less? Shall you keep from your boy or your neighbor's boy that which is symbolic of the Compassionate One by neglecting the call of the Red Cross Mother?

Then there are the uncounted "Little Children" of our allies who have fallen wounded and ill in defense of their home fires. Who but the Red Cross Mother can know the suffering, the anguish, of the shell-torn, thirst-stricken soldier who lies upon the ghostly bed of No Man's Land? Will you deny him the life-giving cup?

Think also of the "Little Children" of devastated lands. Some are "Little Children" in size and tender years. Others, alas, are mature in stature and age, but none the less "Little Children" in their helplessness—their abject need. Can we in our plenty withhold from them the bare bread of existence? Can we still our inner voice with the thought that others will bear our burden, when in our heart we must know that there are no others?

The Red Cross helps no one who does not need help a hundred times more than we need the money. Therefore, let us give, give until we feel it, give until it pinches. Then and only then we shall know that we have indeed offered the "Little Children" of the war the tender compassion of a nation.

When the Austrians last October routed the Italian Army by trickery and drove before them half a million refugees, the part which the American Red Cross played in this stupendous tragedy will go down in the history of Italy and the world as one of the most magnificent dashes of relief work that has ever come to light.

Listen to what the Italian Premier said of this work in his address at the opening of Parliament early last December:

"Our soul is stirred again with appreciation and with admiration for the magnificent dash with which the American Red Cross has brought us powerful aid in our recent misfortune. We attribute great value to the co-operation which will be given us against the common enemy by the prodigious activity and by the exuberant and consistent force which are peculiar to the American people."

And this, mind you, was only a little over a month after the American Red Cross made its triumphant dash into Italy!

By T. J. EDMONDS,
Director of Civilian Relief of the Potomac Division.

I.

"Well," said Smith as he walked into my office, "I've wound up all my business interests."

"What for?" I said as I rose to greet the man I had known in my home city years before.

"So I could offer myself if I'm worth having. I've got to get into the game. Anything useful and human. I'm ready for marching orders."

"Worth having?" I echoed. "You've dropped like a God-send. We've got the biggest man-sized job you ever tions. You're going straight with the Home Service. Something useful and human? Why, in a week this thing will be gripping you so that you'll eat and sleep it!"

II.

The Home Service Section of a big Red Cross chapter was in session As Smith and I arrived they were discussing the problem of a soldier's wife and six children found living in two tenement rooms in a building that rad been condemned because of a leaky roof, mouldy floor and lack of fire protection. They had sold most of their furniture piece by piece for current living expenses. The children had no change of clothing. There was no income and, because of the mother's condition, no possibility of one, except the expected allotment and allowance, which even when it came would not entirely meet the cost of living in the city. The Home Service worker had given a generous sum of money to meet the urgent needs, and now the committee was planning to rent better quarters, move the family, secure medical and nursing attention for the woman, outfit them all with clothing and furniture and keep regularly in touch with the family.

III.

In Smith's next case the Home Service Section and the tuberculosis society had arranged hospital care for a man discharged because of tuberculosis contracted "in the line of duty." Some attorney had told him he would get compensation for him on a fifty-fifty basis, but the lawyer-member of the Home Service Section helped him fill out the proper form which the Red Cross office supplied and assured him that no discharged soldier or soldier's beneficiary should ever pay for collecting either compensation or insurance.

IV.

A member of the women's uniformed corps drove us in her machine out to a camp where there are 30,000 men.

Here we met the Red Cross Home Service man. We didn't take his time—we just watched him. One moment he was helping a man to fill out duplicate allotment blanks; the next he was arguing the merits of insuring to the limit; the next he was wiring a Home Service Section to visit a man's family; next he was going with a boy who had received a tragic telegram from home to see the commanding officer about a leave of absense; then he was speeding on his way a poor fellow discharged because of permanent injury; then we saw him talking to a soldier and a girl wife at the hostess' house; and as the shadows fell he was closeted with a worried chap, who was telling him about an impending mortgage foreclosure and an expected baby.

V.

Later the same evening we saw him stand up in the Liberty theater and, his eyes glowing with the service picture in his own mind and his voice ringing with the conviction of his own enthusiasm, tell a thousand young fellows what Home Service is. He painted homes made happier by Home Service—told of friends for fighters' families found by the Red Cross—pictured devoted Home Service workers fighting the country's battles this side the trenches. When he ended some fellow struck up "Keep the Home Fires Burning."

We were silent for a long while on the way home, Smith and I. Finally Smith broke out:

"Can I do it? The sort of thing—camp service, you call it? Why, that's where I want to be—at the point of first contact with those living problems. Pershing was right when he said, 'The thing most needful to the American fighting forces overseas is anything and everything that will contribute to the morale of the men in service.'

"Home Service—I see it now—means morale. When can I go to work?"

THE PREACHER AND THE COW

(A true story in one chapter)

You have all heard the story of the "Preacher and the Bear." How the preacher went hunting on a Sunday mor and was chased up the tree by the bear. This is not a bear story this time. This time the preacher takes a spin in his car Sunday evening and was riding joyously along when suddenly he was confronted by a big red animal. Of course he could not climb a tree with his car, so he climbs over that animal with his car and sent it to the happy hunting ground. When the car and the said animal were finally separated from each other it was discovered that it was only a cow. Now the cow must have been out on a hold up trip, for why should a good peaceful cow be prowling around on the public highway at night? Anyway the cow "kicked the bucket," the preacher got shook up and some scared. If the cow had lived he could have sued her for damage and for being on the left side of the road.

LIMING—REED

Wedding bells rang again last Wednesday at noon in the English M. E. parsonage when the writer united in Holy Bonds of matrimony Mr. Clifford Liming and Miss Eunice Reed.

Clifford is a son of Mr. and Mrs. Joe Liming, of Wesley, and is among the best and most noble of young men that it has been our privilege to meet. He belongs to that class of deeply spiritual characters that the world is so much in need of today. Oh, that the church of God had more spirit filled young men.

Eunice is a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. James Reed, formerly of Corwith, but now of University Park, Iowa. She also belongs to the Marys who have chosen that good part which shall not be taken away from them. She is one of Corwith's fairest daughters. A purely Christian young lady that ought to make a home what a home should be, heaven on earth. With these two characters so beautifully blended together in the spirit of the Master, we predict a very happy journey. We join their relatives and friends in wishing them many years of prosperity and bliss.—By J. M. Howdeshell, Pastor of English M. E. church, Klemme, Iowa.

The Hancock County Farm Bureau has secured the assistance of a farm management specialist for meetings at Britt, on June 24th, to work with us in figuring our cost of production, and also to take up any line of farm accounting and bookkeeping that may come up.

The first meeting will be held at 9:00 o'clock and is for anyone who may be interested in the work and would care to know more about general farm accounting and the methods of figuring cost of production. The second meeting will be held at 1:00 o'clock and is for those who would care to go into the work more in detail and keep. in co-operation with the state, a set of books on the cost of production of corn, hogs, dairy cattle and beef cattle.

Reliable information on the costs of food production is urgently needed at this time. Congress has been seriously handicapped in matters pertaining to Agriculture because it has not had available accurate statements of economic conditions on the farm. It is the patriotic and economic duty of the producer to supply this information when needed, so that the public interest may be safeguarded in matters pertaining to agriculture.

This work is being done by the Farm Bureau and any further information may be gotten from the County Agent.

HOW MRS. BOYD AVOIDED AN OPERATION

Canton, Ohio.—"I suffered from a female trouble which caused me much suffering, and two doctors decided that I would have to go through an operation before I could get well.

"My mother, who had been helped by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, advised me to try it before submitting to an operation. It relieved me from my troubles so I can do my house work without any difficulty. I advise any woman who is afflicted with female troubles to give Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound a trial and it will do as much for them."—Mrs. MARIE BOYD, 1421 5th St., N. E., Canton, Ohio.

Sometimes there are serious conditions where a hospital operation is the only alternative, but on the other hand so many women have been cured by this famous root and herb remedy, Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, after doctors have said that an operation was necessary—every woman who wants to avoid an operation should give it a fair trial before submitting to such a trying ordeal.

If complications exist, write to Lydia E. Pinkham Medicine Co., Lynn, Mass., for advice. The result of many years experience is at your service.

KEROSENE LAMPS IN INDIA

Illuminating Agencies Used in Smaller Cities Were Originally Imported From the United States.

India is making slow but steady progress in introducing more modern lighting methods, Popular Science Monthly states. All public lighting in the large cities of India is by electricity; but in the smaller cities the methods of lighting, public as well as private, are still very primitive.

For native festivals—and there are a great many of these—large kerosene lamps of an elaborate pattern are much used. They are known in many localities as "Washington lights" and were originally brought to India from the United States. At various religious processions and especially at wedding processions as many as 20 or 30 of these lamps are carried on the heads of bearers, who are engaged for the occasion and paid a fixed fee.

These lamps are high-pressure kerosene lamps constructed upon the principle of the kerosene torches used in the United States. The light is protected by a mica chimney and is very brilliant. Colored globes are sometimes used. These lamps are no longer imported from the United States, but are manufactured in Bombay. The "Bombay lights" cost about $5 or $6, while the imported kind cannot be bought for less than $65 apiece.

Nothing to Do but Wait.

Jones was a raw recruit just arrived. The second day of his army life he was put on the picket line grooming horses. The stable sergeant, having given the command to groom, sauntered around to see how the work was progressing. He found Jones with an anxious and expectant look on his face.

"Well, Jones, have you groomed your horse?"

"Yes, sir," he replied obediently.

"Have you cleaned out his hoofs?" Jones hesitated.

"No, sir—he's been standing on them sir, and I've waited over ten minutes for him to lie down."—Judge.

Logical.

"There is something funny about that bill."

"Naturally. It has a joker in it."

THE TEETH OF THE TIGER

BY

MAURICE LEBLANC

TRANSLATED BY

ALEXANDER TEIXEIRA DE MATTOS

CHAPTER NINE. (Continued.)

The hum of the engine and the sighing of the trees, which bent down at the approach, he murmured incoherent words. The recollection of the two lovers clasped in each other's arms made him cry aloud with jealousy. He wanted to be revenged. For the first time in his life, the longing, the feverish craving to kill set his brain boiling.

"Hang it all!" he growled suddenly. "The engine's misfiring! Mazeroux! Mazeroux!"

"What, chief! Did you know I was here?" exclaimed Mazeroux, emerging from the shadow in which he sat hidden.

"You jackass! Do you think that the first idiot who comes along can hang on to the footboard of my car without my knowing it? You must be feeling comfortable down there!"

"I'm suffering agonies, and I'm shivering with cold."

"That's right, it'll teach you. Tell me, where did you buy your petrol?"

"At the grocer's."

"At a thief's, you mean. It's muck. The plugs are getting sooted up."

"Are you sure?"

"Can't you hear the misfiring, you fool!"

The motor, indeed, at moments seemed to hesitate. Then everything became normal again. Don Luis forced the pace. Going downhill they appeared to be hurling themselves into space. One of the lamps went out. The other was not bright as usual. But nothing diminished Don Luis's ardor.

There was more misfiring, fresh hesitations, followed by efforts, as though the engine was pluckily striving to do its duty. And then suddenly came the final failure, a dead stop at the side of the road, a stupid breakdown.

"Confound it!" roared Don Luis. "We're stuck! Oh, this is the last straw!"

"Come, chief, we'll put it right. And we'll pick up Sauverand at Paris instead of Chartres, that's all."

"You infernal ass! The repairs will take an hour! And then she'll break down again. It's not petrol, it's filth they've foisted on you."

The country stretched around them to endless distances, with no other lights than the stars that riddled the darkness of the sky.

Don Luis was stamping with fury. He would have liked to kicked the motor to pieces. He would have liked——

It was Mazeroux who "caught it," in the hapless sergeant's own words. Don Luis took him by the shoulders, shook him, loaded him with insults and abuse, and, finally, pushing him against the roadside bank and holding him there, said, in a broken voice of mingled hatred and sorrow.

"It's she, do you hear, Mazeroux? it's Sauverand's companion who has done everything. I'm telling you now, because I'm afraid of relenting. Yes, I am a weak coward. She has such a grave face, with the eyes of a child. But it's she, Mazeroux. She lives in my house. Remember her name: Flaurence Levasseur. You'll arrest her, won't you? I might not be able to. My courage fails me when I look at her. The fact is that I have never loved before.

"There have been other women—but no, those were fleeting fancies—not even that: I don't even remember the past! Whereas Florence——! You must arrest her, Mazeroux. You must deliver me from her eyes. They burn into me like poison. If you don't deliver me I shall kill her as I killed Dolores—or else they will kill me—or—— Oh, I don't know all the ideas that are driving me wild—!

"You see, there's another man," he exclaimed. "There's Sauverand, whom she loves. Oh, the infamous pair! They have killed Fauville and the boy and old Langernault and those two in the barn and others besides: Cosmo Mornington, Verot, and more still. They are monsters, she most of all—— And if you saw her eyes——"

He spoke so low that Mazeroux could hardly hear him. He had let go his hold of Mazeroux and seemed utterly cast down with despair, a surprising symptom in a man of his amazing vigor and authority.

"Come, chief," said the sergeant, helping him up. "This is all stuff and nonsense. Trouble with women: I've had it like everybody else. Mme. Mazeroux—yes, I got married while you were away — Mme. Mazeroux turned out badly herself, gave me the devil of a time, Mme. Mazeroux did. I'll tell you all about it, chief, how Mme. Mazeroux rewarded my kindness."

He led Don Luis gently to the car and settled him on the front seat.

"Take a rest, chief. It's not very cold and there are plenty of furs. The first peasant that comes along at daybreak, I'll send him to the next town for what we want—and for food, too, for I'm starving. And everything will come right; it always does with women. All you have to do is to kick them out of your life—except when the anticipate you and kick themselves out. * * * I was going to tell you: Mme. Mazeroux——"

Don Luis was never to learn what had happened with Mme. Mazeroux. The most violent catastrophes had no effect upon the peacefulness of his slumbers. He was asleep almost at once.

It was late in the morning when he woke up. Mazeroux had had to wait till 7 o'clock before he could hail a cyclist on his way to Chartres.

They made a start at 9 o'clock. Don Luis had recovered all his coolness. He turned to his sergeant.

"I said a lot last night that I did not mean to say. However, I don't regret it. Yes, it is my duty to do everything to save Mme. Fauville and to catch the real culprit. Only the task falls upon myself; and I swear that I shan't fail in it. This evening, Florence Levasseur shall sleep in the lock-up!"

"I need nobody's help. If you touch a single hair of her head, I'll do for you. Do you understand?"

"Yes, chief."

"Then hold your tongue."

His anger was slowly returning and expressed itself in an increase of speed, which seemed to Mazeroux a revenge executed upon himself. They raced over the coble stones of Chartres. Rambouillet, Chevreuse and Versailles received the terrifying vision of a thunderbolt tearing across them from end to end.

Saint Cloud. The Bois de Boulogne * * *

On the Place de la Concorde, as the motor was turning toward the Tuileries, Mazeroux objected:

"Aren't you going home, chief?"

"No. There's something more urgent first: we must relieve Marie Fauville of her suicidal obsession by letting her know that we have discovered the criminals."

"Andthen?"

"Then I want to see the prefect of police."

"M. Desmalions is away and won't be back till this afternoon."

"In that case the examining magistrate."

"He doesn't get to the law courts till 12; and it's only 11 now."

"We'll see."

Don Luis lunched somewhere close by; and Mazeroux, after calling at the detective office, came to fetch him and took him to the magistrate's corridor. Don Luis's excitement, his extraordinary restlessness, did not fail to strike Mazeroux, who asked:

"Are you still of the same mind, chief?"

"More than ever. I looked through the newspapers at lunch. Marie Fauville, who was sent to the infirmary after her second attempt, has again tried to kill herself by banging her head against the wall of the room. They have put a straightjacket on her. But she is refusing all food. It is my duty to save her."

"How?"

"By handing over the real criminal. I shall inform the magistrate in charge of the case; and this evening I shall bring you Florence Levasseur dead or alive."

"And Sauverand?"

"Sauverand? That won't take long. Unless——"

"Unless what?"

"Unless I settle his business myself, the miscreant!"

"Chief!"

"Oh, dry up!"

There were some reporters near them waiting for particulars. He recognized them and went up to them.

"You can say, gentlemen, that from today I am taking up the defense of Marie Fauville and devoting myself entirely to her cause."

They all protested: was it not he who had had Mme. Fauville arrested? Was it not he who had collected a heap of convicting proofs against her?

"I shall demolish those proofs one by one," he said. "Marie Fauville is the victim of wretches who have hatched the most diabolical plot against her, and whom I am about to deliver up to justice."

"But the teeth! The marks of the teeth!"

"A coincidence! An unparalleled coincidence, but one which now strikes me as a most powerful proof of innocence. I tell you that, if Marie Fauville had been clever enough to commit all those murders, she would also have been clever enough not to leave behind her a fruit bearing the marks of her two rows of teeth."

"But still——"

"She is innocent! And that is what I am going to tell the examining magistrate. She must be informed of the efforts that are being made in her favor. She must be given hope at once. If not, the poor thing will kill herself and her death will be on the conscience of all who accused an innocent woman. She must——"

At that moment he interrupted himself. His eyes were fixed on one of the journalists who was standing a little way off listening to him and taking notes.

He whispered to Mazeroux:

"Could you manage to find out that beggar's name? I can't remember where on earth I've seen him before."

But an usher now opened the door of the examining magistrate, who, on receiving Don Perenna's card, had asked to see him at once. He stepped forward and was about to enter the room with Mazeroux, when he suddenly turned to his companion with a cry of rage:

"It's he! It was Sauverand in disguise. Stop him! He's made off. Run, can't you?"

He himself darted away followed by Mazeroux and a number of warders and journalists. He soon outdistanced them, so that, three minutes later, he heard no one more behind him. He had rushed down the staircase of the "Mousetrap," and through the subway leading from one courtyard to the other. Here two people told him that they had met a man walking at a smart pace.

The track was a false one. He became aware of this, hunted about, lost a good deal of time, and managed to discover that Sauverand had left by the Boulevard du Palais and joined a very pretty, fair haired woman—Florence Levasseur, obviously—on the Quai de l'Horloge. They had both got into the motor bus that runs from the Place Caint-Michel to the Gare Saint-Lazare.

Don Luis went back to a lonely little street where he had left his car in the charge of a boy. He set the engine going and drove at full speed to the Gare Saint-Lazare. From the omnibus shelter he went off on a fresh track which also proved to be wrong, lost quite another hour, returned to the terminus, and ended by learning for certain that Florence had stepped by herself into a motor bus which would take her toward the Place du Palais-Bourbon. Contrary to all expectations, therefore, the girl must have gone home.

The thought of seeing her again roused his anger to its highest pitch. All the way down the Rue Royale and across the Place de la Concorde he kept blurting out words of revenge and threats which he was itching to carry out. He would abuse Florence. He would sting her with his insults. He felt a bitter and painful need to hurt the odious creature.

But on reaching the Place du Palais-Bourbon he pulled up short. His practiced eye had counted at a glance, on the right and left, a half dozen men whose professional look there was no mistaking. And Mazeroux, who had caught sight of him, had spun round on his heel and was hiding under a gateway.

He called him:

"Mazeroux!"

The sergeant appeared greatly surprised to hear his name and came up to the car.

"Hullo, the chief!"

"Look here, is it for me that you and your men are hanging about outside of my house?"

"There's a notion, chief," replied Mazeroux, looking very uncomfortable. "You know that you're in favor all right!"

Don Luis gave a start. He understood. Mazeroux had betrayed his confidence. To obey his scruples of conscience as well as to rescue the chief from the dangers of a fatal passion, Mazeroux had denounced Florence Levasseur.

Perenna clenched his fists in an effort of his whole being to stifle his boiling rage. It was a terrible blow. He received a sudden intuition of all the blunders which his mad jealousy had made him commit since the day before, and a presentiment of the irreparable disasters that might result from them. The conduct of events was slipping from him.

"Have you the warrant?" he asked.

Mazeroux spluttered:

"It was quite by accident. I met the prefect, who was back. We spoke of the young lady's business. And, as it happened, they had discovered that the photograph—you know, the photograph of Florence Levasseur which the prefect lent you—well, they have discovered that you faked it. And then when I mentioned the name of Florence, the prefect remembered that that was the name."

"Have you the warrant?" Don Luis repeated, in a harsher tone.

"Well, you see, I couldn't help it. * * * M. Desmalions, the magistrate——"

If the Place du Palais-Bourbon had been deserted at that moment, Don Luis would certainly have relieved himself by a swinging blow administered to Mazeroux's chin according to the most scientific rules of the noble art. And Mazerouz foresaw this contingency, for he prudently kept as far away as possible and, to appease the chief's anger, intoned a whole litany of excuses:

"It was for your good, chief. * * * I had to do it * * * Only think! You yourself told me: 'Rid me of the creature!' said you. 'I'm too weak. You'll arrest her, won't you?' Her eyes burn into me—like poison!' Well, chief, could I help it? No, I couldn't could I? Especially as the deputy chief—"

"Ah! So Weber knows?"

"Why, yes! The prefect is a little suspicious of you since he understood about the faking of the portrait. So M. Weber is coming back in an hour, perhaps, with reinforcements. Well, I was saying, the deputy chief had learnt that the woman who used to go to Gaston Sauverand's at Neuilly—you know, the house on the Boulevard Richard-Wallace—was fair and very good looking, and that her name was Florence. She even used to stay the night sometimes."

"You lie! You lie!" hissed Perenna.

All his spite was reviving. He had been pursuing Florence with intentions which it would have been difficult for him to put into words. And now suddenly he again wanted to destroy her; and this time consciously. In reality he no longer knew what he was doing. He was acting at haphazard, tossed about in turns by the most diverse passions, a prey to that inordinate love which impels us as readily to kill the object of our affections as to die in an attempt to save her.

SENSATIONAL DECLARATION BY DON-LUIS PERENNA.

MME. FAUVILLE IS INNOCENT.

IMMINENT ARREST OF THE TWO CRIMINALS.

"Yes, yes," he said aloud. "The drama is drawing to an end. Florence is about to pay her debt to society. So much the worse for her."

He started his car again and drove through the gate. In the courtyard he said to his chauffeur, who came up:

"Turn her round and don't put her up. I may be starting again at any moment."

He sprang out and asked the butler:

"Is Mlle. Levasseur in?"

"Yes, sir, she's in her room."

EXPERT'S TRIBUTE TO WESTERN CANADA

That there is good reason for the wonderful crops of grain in Western Canada, which have thousands of former residents of United States wealthy, is not given the thought that it does quite apparent. But that there be a reason is quite evident, probably more than one—but the one requires emphasis—is that the soil of the nature that will produce crops. It was not long since the farmer selected his land in the haphazard way. He need not today. He will select it on the analysis plan. Soil from Western Canada was submitted to Prof. ens, soil physicist of the State of Washington, at Pullman, Wash. report should no doubt further age settlement in Western Canada reads as follows:

"We have analyzed this sample and that it runs high in lime, high in potash, phosphorus and trogen; that it has a splendid of organic matter and is in the of physical condition. There is ing wrong with this soil from standpoint of crop production, am satisfied that it will give results wherever put under cultivation."

It is soil like this properly and on scientific lines, as is rule today, that gives the opportunity to quote the experiences of farmers who have increased their from $500 to $30,000 in two and whose story would read as follows:

"I have threshed altogether bushels of No. 1 Northern wheat 200 acres, which went from 24 per acre—sod breaking 24, plowing 36, back setting 56 bushels the average being 35 bushels per

The newspaper giving an account this man's experience says: "Who disposed of his 1,600 acres from of Brooks, Alta., to four Oak Hall men, he was worth $30,000. Two ago he came here with $500 and a horses."

It is the soil of Western Canada and the knowledge of what it will that brings to Canada the hundreds settlers that are daily arriving at border. A growing enthusiasm for fertile prairie lands of Western Canada is spreading all over the continent. This enthusiasm is the recognition the fact that sufficient food could produced on these prairie lands feed the world. From the south, and west, hundreds of men, too old military service, are pouring Western Canada to take up land to work on the farms. A great of the incoming settlers have arrived at such central points as Calgary, monton, and Lethbridge, Alberta, at Regina, Moose Jaw, and Saskatoon Saskatchewan. Judging from the of their household effects, the number of their horses and cattle, and quantity of implements they are bringing with them, most of the new rivals also seem well blessed with world's goods.

Reports from North Portal, Saskatchewan; Coutts, Alberta, and Kingsgate, British Columbia—the principal gateways into Western Canada from the United States—indicate that the present influx of farmers is in volume as has not been witnessed for many years. From Vancouver, British Columbia, people are going to the prairies for summer farm work, many with the intention of taking up land themselves at the end of the summer.

The influence of this tide of farm settlers on greater food production will be more readily appreciated when it is considered that the average settler takes up at least twice as much land as he has hitherto been farming—land which, acre for acre, produces better and larger crops.—Advertisement.

Zone of Quiet.

The black-whiskered, unkempt stranger had been wandering about for some time watching the swarming workmen engaged on the Tower of Babel.

"How's that?" asked the foreman, eyeing him sharply.

"I say," repeated the stranger, "how quiet and orderly everything is here. Everything running along smoothly, no disturbances, everybody doing just what should be done, just the right time. Such an ideal running place, this."

"Say, where are you from?"

"Oh, me? Why, I just dropped down from Petrograd."

LOT SALE! LOT SALE! LOT SALE!

25 Choice Resident Lots 25

In the Beautiful Barz Addition at

KLEMME - IOWA.

Will be sold at Public Auction, without reserve, to the highest bidder on WEDNESDAY, June 19th, 1918

Rain or shine every lot will and must go. Sale to begin promptly at 11 A. M. (New time.)

The Barz Addition

Is that beautiful tract of land lying just north of the original town of Klemme, which was platted and dedicated to the Public by August Barz, some 23 years ago.

Twelve houses were built, and then, for years no more could be built because a few of the parties had bought up all the remaining lots and selfishly kept them for garden and pasture purposes.

But luckily, several weeks ago, the Barz Addition Sale Co. was organized and purchased all of these garden and pasture lots.

We have opened up and graded other roads, and put in nearly six blocks of cement walk, so that no matter where you buy you will have a direct walk to church, school or town.

This addition is just old enough to have a few large shade trees scattered here and there and the land is well drained and "hangs to the south," with a wind break of willows north of the addition to keep out the chilly winds of winter, and taken all together it does make an ideal place for building homes.

Watch Klemme Grow!

Mrs. Lena Schroeder
Geo. Gruetzmacher
Clif Schwartz
Joe E. Johnson
Ben Swalve

These homes will be modern throughout and some of them will cost up to $8000, and our Klemme contractor, Mr. M. C. Croner tells us that there are several others who expect to build this fall.

There has not been a vacant house in Klemme for years—this spring about March 1st several families wanted to move to Klemme, but they came too late, the houses and rooms were all taken. Parties wishing to move to Klemme will have to speak for a house 6 months in advance, for the town is continually full to overflowing

We could use 12 more houses right now to accommodate the growth of our Little City and when the Boys come back from France we will need 25 new houses again.

Klemme is a live town and it seems everybody wants to live here.

And then, see the big new store going up this season, 2 story brick, 51 x 100 and the new garage just completed.

Klemme is a live town and it is "A GOOD PLACE TO TRADE," and everybody seems to know it.

The above is just every day growth, but when the war is over we will ask you to watch Klemme Boom!

The manufacture of slippers with wooden soles and cloth tops is a wartime industry which has sprung up in Holland, reports the United States department of commerce. The upper and inner parts of the slippers are formed of two corduroy and woolen stuffs. All these materials are relatively cheap and yet make comfortable and durable slippers. The cloth parts are made by hand and the wooden soles by machinery. In view of the mounting prices of leather footwear these combination slippers, which retail for the equivalent of $1 a pair for the best quality, are selling rapidly.

Including those now in office, there have been four cardinals of the Roman Catholic church in this country. The first was archbishop John McCloskey, of New York, who was made cardinal March 15, 1875, and died in 1885. The second, in order, Archbishop Gibbons, of Baltimore, was ordained cardinal June 7, 1886; Archbishop O'Connell, of Boston, was ordained cardinal November 27, 1911, and Archbishop Farley, of New York, was made cardinal in 1911. The three last named are no win office.

It is not generally known that the banana is an annual. The fruit comes to maturity about a year after the shoot is planted, the trunk of the tree subsequently attaining a height of from eight to 10 feet and a girth of 36 inches. From the root of the tree several shoots or suckers sprout, each of which in turn becomes a fresh tree. The life of the banana tree, however, is not unusually long, for it is felled after the fruit is gathered and sometimes indeed during the operation.

The world discarded 183,000 tons of automobile tires during 1916. Adding to this the large number of bicycle tire thrown away every year by their owners, it appears that the world spends every year at least $600,000,000 for pneumatic tires alone Nearly 5,00,000 automobiles are now in use in the United States. To supply these with tires nearly 80,000 tons of India rubber are needed every year, and the American automobile owners pay every year as much as $200,000,000 for tires.

Then he tried to force his way out through the chimney and stuck.

HOARDED FLOUR IS FOUND IN LEMARS

Food Administrator Eastman Made Long Search and Was Finally Successful.

LeMars, Ia., June 10.—Three hundred pounds of high patent flour, the kind that makes the whitest kind of white bread, purchased last October was found by Food Administrator E. E. Eastman after a strenuous search of the residence occupied by Henry Gaudian. The flour was purchased by Mr. Eastman for the government and turned over to local grocers.

A tip from someone who knew of the flour hoarding sent Mr. Eastman to the home, armed with his papers of authority. He was allowed to search the house, and made a thorough one. He was beginning to think the fellow who gave him the tip had been playing a practical joke when he noticed the trap door to the attic. Cobwebs and dust made no difference to the food administrator and he soon stumbled over the pile of sacks containing the flour.

AN IOWA SOLDIER NAMED FOR CONGRESS

Des Moines, Ia., June10.—One young Iowa volunteer soldier instead of going to war may go to congress. He is Corporal Buell McCash, of Bloomfield, Ia , now stationed at Camp Dodge.

McCash was nominated by the democrats in the Sixth district at the Monday primaries although his name did not appear on the ballot and had to be written in. His friends brought him out, organized the district, advertised him effectively in the newspapers and nominated him over Mayor Pat Leeny, of Ottumwa, and L. T. Richmond, of Albia .

It is predicted that if McCash makes a campaign in the Sixth district it will be an effective one, which may make Congressman C. W. Ramseyer, of Bloomfield, look to his laurels.

"Vote for him for the love of the boys" was the way the friends of McCash put it up to the democratic voters down in the Sixth district. They pointed out that he is a soldier and not a politician, was not seeking the nomination and is now in the military service. He is 30 years old, is a graduate of Drake university and of the law department of the University of Michigan.

DAKOTA STATE NEWS.

INDIAN WOMAN SAYS FAREWELL TO SOLDIER

Miller, S. D., June 10. — With tears streaming down her swarthy face, she grasped the boy's hand and in the guteral language of her race she bade him farewell and God-speed on his mission to fight for liberty. And the boy, a rugged specimen of border youth, answered in her own language with a cheery smile and a friendly handshake.

She was only a squaw, dressed in a colored skirt too long for the modern style, and a red shawl about her shoulders, with her straight black hair pressed smoothly down upon a bare head, and her feet encased in the primitive moccasin of the Sioux Indian.

But she stood in the line with hundreds of white people who were shaking hands in a last farewell to the 43 drafted men of Hand county. In the row of soon-to-be soldiers was one sun tanned boy of the prairies, a cow boy to the border born who had spent his life in the saddle near the Indian reservation that touches the southwest corner of this county. Their farewell and momentary communion in the Sioux language was a touching bit of human interest to those who saw it.

The boy was Elmen Enger, whose father was a government employe at Ft. Thompson when the boy was a barefoot youngster playing about the government buildings with the Indian children. The squaw was a friend of this youth who had helped to take care of the lad and taught him her language. She came to bid him goodbye with the wholehearted sincerity of her undemonstrative race—and it is safe to say that her memory of that boy's farewell will remain with her long after others have forgotten.

HURON—While 140 Beadle county boys, who have reached the age of 21 years since June 5, 1917, registered for military service with the local exemption board here, orders were received from Adjt. Gen. W. A. Morris, of Redfield, that Beadle county must be prepared to furnish 229 men in draft calls to be made this month on Class 1 registrants.

PIERRE—The 10-year-old son of Thomas Doyle, of Onida, was killed when the pony he was riding on a fast run collided with another pony, both being thrown. The pony ridden by the Doyle boy rolled over on him twice and then dragged him after it regained its feet.

AUTOMOBILE THIEF NOW IN THE ARMY

Sioux Rapids Man Recovers Property—Thief May Be Brought to Bar.

Sioux Rapids, Ia., June 8.—J. W. Lauman, who operates a clothes cleaning plant here, had his auto stolen last August 29, and although he made a diligent search and advertised he heard nothing of the missing car until a few days ago, when he received word that the car was in Cedar Rapids, Ia. He promptly left for that place and identified the car. It had changed hands seven times, and was in bad condition. The person who committed the theft, has joined the army and steps are being taken to bring him to trial.

DRAINAGE SYSTEM IS FOUND TO BE DEFECTIVE

Sioux Rapids, Ia., June 8.—The new drainage system which was put in last fall could not take care of the water which has fallen in torrents the past few days, and the ground was flooded, gardens were destroyed and cellars flooded. Fall at Baseball Park at Indianapolis, Ind., Last Sunday Afternoon.

The plane was circling above the diamond at a height of about 500 feet when Captain Webb stood up to throw the first ball to the players. It is thought that a streamer attached to the ball became caught in the propellers, causing Major Gearhart to lose control temporarily. The plane shot to the ground and Major Gearhart was thrown from his seat, striking on his face and shoulders. Captain Webb was pinned beneath the wreckage, the engine fracturing his skull.

Major Gearhart was known as a careful and skilled aviator. Until a short time ago he commanded the aviation post as Fort Sill, Okla. His injuries are serious and it is not known whether or not he will recover.

Maj S. B. Philpot is in command of the new recruits, and it is reported that upon reviewing the Arizona men he expressed himself as saying "they are all a tough looking bunch."

To prove that their object in coming to camp Cody was to learn how to fight, one of the men took exceptions as regards their looks and landed a blow on the major's "frontispiece" with the result of a broken nose and a visit of several days to the base hospital.

The major stands about 6 feet 4.

DOUBLE GRIEF IN THIS LEMARS HOME

Head of Family Killed By Accident and Now Soldier Boy Killed In France.

LeMars, Ia., June 7.—Mrs. F. E. Huxtable was notified late yesterday that her son, Wayne E. Huxtable, had been killed in action in France. Huxtable, a carpenter, was killed about three weeks ago when he fell from a two-story building on which he was working at Galva, Ia.

Wayne E. Huxtable was 21 years old. He enlisted in Company K, Second Iowa infantry a year ago and went with that organization to Camp Dodge. SEND AMERICAN TROOPS TO RUSSIA, TAFT SAYS

Cedar Rapids, Ia., June 7.—It will be necessary for the United States not only to send an army to the western front, declared former President William H. Taft in an address here, but this country also will be obliged to send an army into Russia.

Mr. Taft spoke here under the auspices of the Red Cross and will also give the graduation address at Coe college. His other engagements will carry him to towns in this vicinity where he has been engaged for dedicatory addresses.

"We must send an army to Russia soon," said Mr. Taft. "We must prevent Germany from developing all the man power and the mineral and agricultural resources of Russia to enable her to carry on this war."

The purpose of Germany, he declared, has been made plain by her conduct in Russia. Every allied nation now realizes that it must be a war to the death. Her policy of conquest and the breaking of every peace agreement and covenant she has made with the Russians has convinced the world that there can be no peace except that shall be dictated by the allies.

Governor Harding, also a speaker at the Red Cross meeting, in explaining his recent proclamation barring other than English from public speech in the state, declared that he signed that proclamation to back up the order which he signed sending 3,507 Iowa boys over the sea to fight.

"As long as I am governor," he stated, "I am going to do all that I can to protect those boys from the propagandists and the traitors who would stab them in the back."

TIMELY AID OF MARINES SAVED PARIS

Americans Closed Two Gaps Huns Had Opened In French Army and Hurled Them Back.

CAME IN NICK OF TIME

Roused From Sleep at Midnight, Marines Rush 10 Miles and Stop 2½ Mile Gap In French Ranks.

BY FRED S. FERGUSON,
United Press Staff Correspondent.

With Americans on the Marne, June 10—American troops cooperating with the French this morning hold all gains of the last two days fighting on a 4 mile front northwest of Chateau Thierry. There is a temporary lull as this is cabled, but the battle threatens to break out anew at any moment. The Americans and French now hold a line extending northwest from Vilny, through Bussiares and Belleau southeast of Bouresches. This represents an advance ranging from less than a mile at some points to nearly three miles at other points

The American's advance adds another chapter to the accomplishments of our troops, which are playing the role of General Gallieni's famous "taxicab army in this second battle of the Marne.

The official report of the commanding general reveals the feat is fully as impressive as first reported.

Traveled 100 Miles.

Receiving orders to move from the region of Gisors at 5 p. m. on May 30, they departed by rail and motor truck. At 5:30 a. m. the next day the first of them had arrived in the rear line. Gisors is an important railway junction 35 miles north of Paris and 75 miles west of Chateau Thierry, in an air line. The journey by rail and highway probably was more than 100 miles.

Late that afternoon the situation was most critical. The French urged that the Americans be sent into the line immediately, as the enemy was marching along the road to Paris

Our men went into the line at midnight, taking up positions at Chateau-Thierry. At 9 a m on June 1, 1,800 Americans were barring the road. Every man carried two days' rations and ammunition.

On the night of June 1 the French reported a gap of four kilometers (two and a half miles) in the line near Gandela (10 miles west and north of Chateau-Thierry and northwest) and northwest of Neuilly-La-Poterie. An attack was expected any moment.

Closed Gateway to Paris.

A regiment of machine gunners and engineers were aroused from their sleep and filled the gap. Then came an urgent call for artillery ammunition. A truck train made a 45 mile trip and returned with ammunition in a few hours, bringing in 32 truck loads.

On June 4 and 5 came the German attacks, previously reported. On the 5th all artillery was in position and firing on the enemy

Following the repulse of attacks the Americans delivered their own offensives on the 6th and 7th, taking numerous prisoners and considerable territory, inflicting heavy losses on the enemy.

The general's report concluded with the statement that, considering the movement involved, the repulse of these attacks and the successful conclusion of two counter attacks, all within six days "the men conformed to the best traditions of the army and are meeting all demands made."

COUNTER BLOWS FAIL

Paris, June 10— French troops co-operating with the Americans northwest of Chateau-Thierry, continued their advance in the northern portion of the front, the French war office announced today.

Two violent German attacks on the southern portion of the line in this region were repulsed with heavy losses.

"South of the Ourcq the French progressed, pressing the Germans back"—the communique said.

"The French lines now reach the west borders of Dammard, east of Chezy and one kilometer north of Neuilly-Lapoterie. Fifty prisoners were taken.

"Futher south, two violent German attacks against Bouresches and Lethiolet were broken up with heavy losses.

(Bouresches is five miles west of Chateau-Thierry; Lethiolet is two miles southeast of Bourseches, on the main highway leading westward from Chateau-Thierry.)

"On the Aisne front there was fairly heavy cannonading near Faverolles (12 miles southwest of Soissons".

"Southeast of Ambleny (six miles directly west of Soissons) French positions were improved".

BRITISH RAIDS SUCCEED

London, June 10.—Successful British raids and active German artillery fire were reported by Field Marshal Haig today.

"A few prisoners were taken in last night's successful raid in the neighborhood of Hulloch", the statement said.

"Patrols inflicted casualties and captured a machine gun in the Strazeele sector.

"North of Albert and southeast of Arras hostile artillery was active".

NEW GERMAN SUBS ARE NOT SO TERRIBLE

Paris, Friday, June 7.—The new type of German submarines cruisers accomplishes little, according to an official note commenting on German undersea boats. Exact information relative to the operation of two of these boats which left Germany at the end of 1917 cruised as far as the equator and were absent for four months, shows that they accounted for only 900 tons of shipping This was equal to only one day's total loss from submarines in April of the same year.

he purpose of the German to Turkish population as the which to build a grandiose reaching from Constantinople ad and thence to Basra and India. Another German dream the march of German armies, filled with Turkish troops, to y Suez and thence southward ast all the African continent reached the Boer territories in ony and the Transvaal Africa, a German colony like India, and the cornerstone of this imperial arch was to be Asiatic Turkey.

Now Great Britain and not Germany is remaking this corner of the near east. The result is that the whole picture is just reversed and Indian and Egyptian troops, under British command, are rapidly pushing north to gain control of all of Syria all of Mesopotamia, and prevent the [illegible] Turkish armies in Persia. As an incident in this reign revolutions in Mecca and Medina have been encouraged and an Arab army is moving north along the Hedjaz railroad and has already reached the shores of the Dead Sea and joined hands with [illegible] about Es Salt. Turkey has thus lost her Arabian provinces. South of Palestine she has lost most of Palestine and the greater part of Mesopotamia. Bagdad, Jerusalem, Mecca and Medina no longer recognize the rule of Constantinople, and Damascus, Aleppo and Mosul are already [illegible] the next campaign in the [illegible] the British keep the offensive as seems likely.

What this all means [illegible] enough if one looks backward [illegible] years. No single dream of the Germans was more talked of in the preceding the outbreak of the war that which was constructed about the Bagdad railway. German [illegible] German policy alike centered upon [illegible] lines which slowly but surely crept south from the southern shores of the Bosporus to and beyond the Cilician gates. By this railroad the Turkish empire was to be made a German colony. By this line and its southern extensions, through Syria to Suez and through Mesopotamia to Bagdad and Basra, Germany was to approach Britain's two great colonies, Egypt and India.

The German dream [illegible] appeal to the Mahometan populations of Egypt and of India, which were to rise against British rule when the kaiser should give the sultan the signal to proclaim the "Jehad," the holy war, against the infidel. And the odd fact is that although it was impossible to disguise the extent of German ambitions, a British secretary of state for foreign affairs, Sir Edward Grey, was still signing away British rights and British bulwarks against the German when the present war broke out.

After the war broke out the German moved with great promptitude. In the first winter there were [illegible] Suez; a Turkish army was [illegible] Palestine, and raiding parties containing German officers and detachments crossed the desert to assail British troops stationed behind the canal. It was the boast of Berlin that a Turkish army would presently [illegible] Cairo and a German army [illegible] the Germans called the Brass Wall of Achilles," namely the Suez canal.

Huns Hit at Suez First.

But the arrow missed its mark. The dash for Suez failed and Russian successes in Armenia and the British campaign in Mesopotamia drew Turkish attention elsewhere. Henceforth the Egyptian situation remained without peril for the British, the only question was whether there should be a defense of Egypt at Suez, that is a passive defense, or whether the British should follow the old precedents and invade Palestine and conquer Syria, thus building up a real barrier against invasion.

The disaster which overtook Townshend at Kut-el-Amara in [illegible] necessitated new British efforts in the valleys of the Euphrates and the Tigris. In a reckless effort to win a success which should in part retrieve the prestige lost at Gallipoli a British and Indian army was pushed rapidly north without proper preparation or support and was compelled, after a brilliant action at Ctesiphon, near Bagdad, to retreat to Kut-el-Amara and then to surrender, after a gallant but hopeless resistance.

Thereafter the problem was plain. It was necessary to begin again and following the old Kitchner model, get Bagdad, as "K. of K." had taken Khartum. All of this took time and it was not until the spring of 1917 that Bagdad at last fell and General Maude was able to regain what prestige his predecessor had lost. Once in Bagdad as I have said, the British found themselves deserted by the Russians and compelled to prepare for new perils instead of immediately pushing forward to complete the campaign as planned while Russian defection was not yet dreamed of.

Last autumn there began to be reports of new activities on the Egyptian front. A British railway was pushed east from the Suez canal along the desert shore of the Mediterranean and a new army, commanded by General Allenby, who has gained western laurels at Arras, replaced a general and a smaller force which had suffered a severe check on the frontier between Palestine and Egypt. Thenceforward we had the reports of slow but sure progress, until December saw Allenby in Jerusalem and the whole Christian world hailing the deliverance of its holy places from the Mohammedan yoke.

Since that time Allenby has pushed northward considerably, established himself north of Jaffa on the Mediterranean and above Jericho in the Jordan valley. He has raided eastward and cut the Hedjaz railroad, and he has completed his own railroad communication with Cairo. He is now ready, given men and material, when the weather again makes campaigning possible, to resume the advance toward Aleppo, with Damascus as his next objective east of the mountains and Beirut his goal along the coast west of the mountains. Not until he gets Beirut, too, will Allenby acquire any harbor which can serve as a base for his forces, since all the other ports along the coast from Suez to Beirut are but open roadsteads. But if he can get Beirut and its railroad leading inland to Damascus, Allenby need have little fear of Turkish menaces.

To Defend India and Egypt.

And when Allenby moves north from Jerusalem Marshall is certain to move northwestward from Bagdad. Both will be aiming for Aleppo; if they can arrive together at this town then there will be an end of Turkish rule. German dreams of using these provinces as the "jumping off" places for attacks upon Egypt and India will also disappear. cAtually, and it is well to remember this in the midst of all the bitter debates over eastern and western strategy, the campaigns in Palestine and in Mesopotamia are campaigns for the defense of Egypt and of India, both of which have been gravely menaced by German intrigue and Turkish operations in the near east.

So far the resistance of the Turks has been surprisingly weak after the first successes against the Mesopotamian attack in 1916 and against the Palestine thrust in 1917. All winter long there has been a general expectation that there would be a serious thrust from Aleppo either against Bagdad through Mosul or against Jerusalem through Damascus. But, on the contrary, it has been the British who have done the thrusting and the Turkish troops have fought, on the whole, not badly, indeed. At the outset of [illegible] that is, of the season when [illegible] is possible in this region there was no little apprehension in British quarters over the possibilities in Mesopotamia.

Recently the push toward and to [illegible] drew off troops intended for operations in Mesopotamia, while the subsequent activities toward Mosul led the Turk to abandon all thought of [illegible] Jerusalem. Now, before a [illegible] opens, it seems safe to conclude that the British will be [illegible] both in Bagdad and in Jerusalem, while their commanders will far surpass those of the Turk. In a word it would seem as if the English had come to stay both in Palestine and in Mesopotamia. If this be true then the Bagdad railroad [illegible] will be British not German [illegible] will start at the Mediterranean not at Bagdad or at Alexandretta [illegible] at Constantinople or its [illegible].

Such briefly is the story of the great [illegible] side shows with its two fields of operation one in Mesopotamia [illegible] the other in Palestine, and its [illegible] Aleppo. Has [illegible] tion which [illegible] the present [illegible] far too little [illegible] without [illegible] answer [illegible] about which we really [illegible] Mesopotamia upon [illegible] in the [illegible] otherwise be [illegible] meeting [illegible] German [illegible] campaign in [illegible] win the war. In other words when the British successes in the near east will not permit [illegible] to block the German [illegible] India. All [illegible] evidence [illegible] of the smaller [illegible] of the larger, [illegible] Napoleon who [illegible] Asia at last crumbling [illegible] Germany destroys the British [illegible] France as she has undertaken to do then her supremacy on the continent will temporarily insure her supremacy in the Balkans and in the Asiatic provinces of Turkey.

All Hinges on "Big Show."

But on the other hand if Germany fails to win the war decisively if she does not achieve a German peace, if she is compelled to accept a draw, although escaping a real defeat then the British troops holding Mesopotamia and Palestine will be guaranties against a [illegible] by Germany [illegible] to penetrate Asia [illegible] troops now in [illegible] to mount [illegible] German foray [illegible] be [illegible] the gates of the British empire. If the German threat to the British empire is not to be abolished by the defeat of Germany in the war it must be at the utmost impossible for [illegible] hold the sides to be [illegible] forces as strong [illegible] possible. Bagdad and Jerusalem are [illegible] outposts of India and Egypt.

[illegible] this possibility, there was [illegible] and hope for—the [illegible] of Germany [illegible] the campaigns in Syria [illegible] Mesopotamia will give Britain the [illegible] of the keys of the near east and [illegible] in accordance with her agreements with France to bring to an end the hideous nightmare of Turkish rule in Syria and Mesopotamia [illegible] even open the way to the liberation of Armenia to the north far from Moslem road runs clear to Erzerum.

Syria from here north will [illegible] Aleppo Damascus and Beirut will come under French protection if the [illegible] able to carry out their agreements. Palestine will be [illegible] declared its independence [illegible] by many nations but it will [illegible] to fall naturally under British influence. Mesopotamia will remain in British hands while Persia, now that the Russians have abandoned their claims will certainly drift under British influence. And for all these changes the British armies in the east have prepared the way. In the main these armies are made up of native troops although a few British divisions are still counted in the two armies.

It is plain that no victory of Marshall or Allenby will affect the great decision which must come in the west. It is clear that a German victory in the west, a decisive victory might and probably would ultimately undo the work of both British commanders in the near east. If the battle in the west is lost because of the absence of British divisions and guns which are occupied in the holy land or the garden of Eden, the complaints of the "westerners" will be thoroughly justified. But, on the other hand, if Germany fails in the west British policy in the east will unquestionably be vindicated.

But for the collapse of Russia last year the crushing of the Turk in Asia might have been accomplished this year and British and Russian armies might be crusading in Anatolia before the fighting season of 1918 was over. Nowhere were allied plans more completely destroyed by Russian revolution than in the near east. Yet, despite the unforseen these two side shows have made interesting progress in the latest campaign and now furnish admirable foundations for another campaign which may close the door to the east in the face of the Germans not this time at the Danube or the Bosphorus, but on the northern frontiers of Syria and Mesopotamia.

Huns After Sunken Treasure.

A. Russell Bond in Scientific American.

Altogether, the prospects are very bright for the recovery of many ships, or at least of a large part of their cargo, even though they may lie in water 300 feet deep. It behooves us to devise means for conducting such deep water salvage, for if we do not do this work we may be sure it will be undertaken by the enemy.

The Germans have not been carrying on their submarine warfare without a thought for the future. Last May when the U-boats were making frightful inroads into allied shipping, there was an item in a German newspaper calling attention to the rich treasure that was being piled up in the sea and stating that the German wrecking companies were planning to recover this treasure on a large scale after the war. It was not a matter of chance then that most of the U-boat victims have been sunk at the very tantalizing depth of 300 feet. German salvage companies are making unusual preparations for deep water diving operations.

Clearly, Germany is making great preparations for peace and intends to be so far ahead of other people in salvage methods that after the war most of the treasure in the sea will fall to her lot. She feels confident of winning on land and then she fondly believes that the sea will be hers as well. But we are not asleep. We are doing some inventing ourselves, and in a contest of ingenuity as well as in that of powder and steel, the Yankees when thoroughly aroused, may be counted on to come out ahead.

American Accomplishment.

F. A. McKenzie, of Canada, in the Daily Mail, London.

What are the Americans doing? "Before England was in the war a year she had fought four great campaigns. The Canadians were war veterans before a year was over. What have the Americans done?

I have just returned from a long visit to the American lines in France, from the bases on the Atlantic coast to the outposts in No Man's Land in the shell swept sectors of Lorraine. I have had opportunity to examine their work and to discuss their future preparations with their leaders. The best answer to the question is a simple statement of facts.

First let us understand the difficulties of the Americans. They were hampered at the beginning by an almost complete lack of organization and by a very scanty war personnel. Trained soldiers were few. The regular army was small and the state militia was not equipped for modern war. The government had refrained from making preparations before war was declared lest it should seem to be guilty of ill faith.

The American problem was very different from that of England or even of the dominions. England could work from her base at home for her operations a few score miles away in France. The dominions sent their men over to England to [illegible] prepared establishments. But America was sending her troops from an average distance of 4,000 miles. She had to prepare a countryside in Europe to receive them, carry them from end to end of France, build docks at which they could land, build railways over which they could be carried, build vast warehouses to hold their supplies, ordnance factories where their guns could be rerifled, motor works where motor cars by the scores of thousands could be assembled and kept in order, and hospitals when 100,000 men could be tended at once.

Must Feed Two Million.

She must thread France, from the Atlantic coast to the German border with her own telegraph lines. Vast cold storage plants were necessary for the food of the army, lest some unhappy turn might bring 2,000,000 men face to face with starvation. For every two men in the front lines there must be three behind the lines keeping up supplies, repairing the wreckage of war, caring for the wounded.

They had to lay the foundations. These foundations have been laid with a solidity and with a speed of which the world at large has no idea. I have seen some of the most beautiful countryside of France turned mile after mile, into a region of warehouses to store food for the army, old cities of mid-France transformed by the pulsing life of the vast numbers of Americans that have come to train among them.

The American troops in the fighting line are more numerous than many English people seem to imagine. If it were not for the extravagant forecasts of last year we would be pleased with their numbers. One section is holding a considerable part of the Lorraine front and another section is with the Anglo-French fighting army farther north. The numbers in the fighting line are increasing daily, and the proof of the Americans' activity at the front is that in a comparatively short time they had more than 4,000 casualties.

"Their Motto Is Attack."

They are keen fighters. They remind me at every turn of the Canadians. They have begun with the idea of transforming trench war into open war. Their motto is Attack! Attack! Attack! all the time.

When they took over their sector of the Lorraine front it was comparatively quiet. Now it has become a field of continuous activity. "I want this job cleaned up," say the men. I found some artillerymen working 37 hours at a stretch without grumbling to hurry on the beginning of their attack.

These men say little about the glory of war, but they reveal a cold, calculated determination to end it. Their frigid resolution impressed me as more terrible than any mere surface enthusiasm.

General Pershing voiced the sentiment of the entire army. I met him one afternoon when news from the northern front was very gloomy. He seemed to brush the gloom away. "There can be no question about what the end of the war will be," said he. "We may possibly have a time of hard knocks and buffets ahead; but only one conclusion is possible—a complete allied victory."

The actual air situation is this. America has a very large available supply of trained pilots, men who have been most carefully selected. These are, practically all of them, college athletes. So many applied to join the army air service that the authorities were able to reject 90 per cent, eliminating all except those most thoroughly equipped, mentally and physically.

Fliers' Brilliant Work.

The Americans also have an enormous supply of skill l mechanics. America has been able to lend many thousand airplane mechanics to England. They have now erected a large airplane training city in the heart of France. They have today fighting squadrons upon the eastern front besides American fliers with both the English and France forces. The brilliant work of these men is well known. The speed of growth of the American airplane force depends almost wholly upon the supply of engines. I anticipate that America's air strength will begin to be directly felt as a real factor in the western campaigns this autumn. It is felt on a smaller scale already.

"We wish we had 1,000,000 men in the line," say the American soldiers. "But let England and France hold on. We'll have 5,000,000 here before the end if the job needs them." And they are keeping the wires hot, sending messages across the Atlantic, "Hurry! Hurry! Send more men!"

German Problems and Purposes Behind the Battle

From the London Times.

It is now abundantly clear that the western offensive was a signal, on the one hand, for the revival of indemnity demands, and, on the other hand, for intensified commercial preparation for peace."

As was shown in this column on April 13 and in our Hague correspondent's telegram in the Times of May 2, the whole industrial, commercial, financial, and shipping forces of Germany are being brought together in limited liability companies with a nominal capital and unlimited ambitions. The "European Trading company," of Bremen with a nominal capital of £50,000, has been described. The new Hamburg concern briefly mentioned by our Hague correspondent has a nominal capital of £1,250,000. Its admitted object is the reconstruction of "German oversea trade." Its directorate includes representatives of all the most important German concerns, and is, indeed, so comprehensive that it is hardly necessary to mention names. They include, for example, Krupp's works at Essen, the Rhenish Westphalian Coal syndicate, the Merton Metal company, of Frankfurt; the Hamburg-Amerika Line, and all the banks and electrical concerns.

The object of all this organization is that Germany shall present an absolutely united front in "peace negotiations," and the main question which is exercising all German business minds is the question of raw materials. During the past six weeks the Vossische Zeitung has been publishing particularly illuminating articles. On March 18 Herr Eduard Dettmann, a retired German consul, insisted that the danger of a raw materials boycott is extremely serious. He reviewed the whole field of German trade, and, after expressing pessimistic views about cotton, wool, and copper, added that Germany was equally dependent upon British India for jute, upon India and Brazil for rubber, upon the Argentine for hides, upon Bolivia for tin, and upon other enemy sources for palm oils, tobacco, cocoa, and manganese ores. On the other hand, the developments in the east had diminished German anxiety about petroleum, and Germany was also less dependent upon Chile for nitrates owing to the development of her new nitrogen industry. Herr Dettmann argued in effect that the only available German weapon is a veto upon the export of potash, and he declared that the only effect of stopping German exports of dyes and drugs has been to damage German trade and to promote foreign competition. He concluded:

We need the open door, otherwise our industry would perish. Consequently it is absolutely necessary to push the raw materials question into the peace negotiations and to make it one of the most important questions. The peace must be such as to bind the entente governments to exercise no influence, direct or indirect, to the injury of our raw materials requirements. It is not yet easy to see whether it would be advisable to aim at definite agreements upon the basis of our imports statistics before the war. But the peace treaty must forbid the entente to erect raw materials syndicates aimed against German imports.

Herr Dettmann hinted that Germany should play off the allies against one another. America must be told that she cannot have potash except against a guarantee of a sufficient supply of cotton and copper. Then, "when America is ready to negotiate," her influence must be exerted upon England to obtain Australian wool for Germany. Similarly, Australia's interest in maintaining her German market for wool must be exploited and Germany must refuse—even at the cost of self-denial—to import Brazilian coffee before Brazil supplies the necessary rubber.

On April 3 an anonymous writer attempted without much success to reply to Herr Dettman by arguing the possibilities of exploiting Russia and the east, and by saying that many neutrals, "in return for money and good words" will be ready to act as brokers for Germany.

Annexations in Africa.

On April 6 and April 16 Herr Emil Zimmermann, the well known colonial enthusiast, intervened with remarkably interesting articles. He congratulated Herr Dettmann on his courage in facing facts, and said that he himself would go farther. He is convinced that, if German industry cannot get enough wool, cotton, hides, and rubber, the German consumers, so far from continuing their abstinence from leather boots, woolen clothing, cotton underclothing, and rubber goods, will throw the German market open to the enemy. Herr Zimmermann's remedy is, of course, a vast colonial empire. In his article of April 16 he modestly wrote:

We shall have to make our deductions ruthlessly from our military superiority. After further great events in the west our colonial demands must in no circumstances continue to be confined to the Belgian and French Congo territories. I call attention to the fact that in the year 1913 Nigeria exported 175,000 tons of palm kernels, and Sierra Leone nearly 50,000 tons; Nigeria also delivered 83,000 tons of palm oil. Nigeria, Cameroon, and the Congo territories are in a position to deliver immediately over 300,000 tons of palm kernels and palm oil, and, even if the utmost consideration is given to French interests in Africa, I can very well conceive a German colonial empire in Central Africa and in the South Seas which would supply immediately 400,000 tons of oil fruits and more than 1,000,000 tons at an early date; it would make us almost entirely independent in the important question of our supply of raw materials of oil.

Herr Zimmermann actually added:

Today this colonial empire is not firmly in our hands. But we must await the coming events, and then we shall talk further. Then we shall have to speak of the security of permanent connections between this colonial empire and Germany. At the recent meeting of the German-Irish society Herr von Stumm, of the foreign office, said that a free Ireland would mean the freedom of the seas; a German alliance with a free Ireland would permanently secure the connection between Germany and her colonial possessions in Africa.

The Armenian Smile.

Maynard O. Williams, in the Christian Herald.

I passed down one of the streets of Van, Armenia, in the early morning. Some refugee boys, scantily clad, were sliding down a miniature hill in a blackened kerosene can and shouting with delight. As I returned, I met a motley crew of ragged urchins, running along gleefully, each with a battered tin, on their way to a food distribution. In front of the mud house which is the gubernatorial mansion, I saw a girl of 6 with her single cotton garment open to her waist. She was barefoot in the snow, but on her face there was a cheery smile. She seemed as happy as the most coddled scion of wealth along Riverside drive. When women whose husbands have been massacred refuse to take life sadly, how can one help admiring their spirit? When orphan children, who haven't a friend on earth, run around barefoot in the snow and smile like cherubs, how can one be sad?

The Retort Piercing.

From the Chicago Post.

"Why do you always have married women as our hostesses?" said a jacky yesterday at the Red Cross canteen station on the lake front.

"How can you tell we're married?" countered a young matron archly.

"Ah, go on!" was the Jacky's disgusted comment. "How do you tell a Ford?"

HOW STARS OF THE AIR ARE CHOSEN

British Official Asserts Men Show Adaptability as Soon as They Begin Flying.

London, (by mail)—How does the British air service pick out from its thousands of airmen, the particular men who are destined to become the star "fighters" at the front? This question was put to an official of the air ministry here by the Associated Press correspondent in an interview. Here is his answer:

"The pilot who is destined to fly the single seater machines of the air force is 'discovered' almost as soon as he has been baptized in the air.

"To begin with he must have passed certain physical tests with a 100 per cent result. Many wise men, doctors and organizers, sit in conclave over these tests. They define certain factors that go to make up a 'perfect' airman,—perfect sight, age 24 or its equivalent in physical makeup, a total abstainer, good hands, quick brain, keenness, confidence. It is odd, how much emphasis is placed on a man's hands by the examiners, who argue that there is as much difference between flying a scout and an ordinary machine as there is between riding a thoroughbred and a cart horse.

"Some men show their destiny from the first moment of training. Men like Ball and Bishop promise well right from the start, they revel in finding new stunts and tricks of their own, long before their heavier handed brethren begin to attempt the things that are safe on all modern machines.

"Other men begin slowly, and find themselves through sheer pluck and hard work. Having gone over the Channel to pilot a placid artillery observation or photographing machine, they give a good account of themselves in the first scrap they get mixed up in, and thereafter they look for, and seem to enjoy, fights. An observer in his official report casually remarks that Pilot So-and-so is 'always wanting to tackle the Huns instead of taking photographs or ranging guns," and straightway, his commanding officer sends the trouble hunter off to headquarters with a recommendation which lands him in a special post-graduating school of aerial gunnery for training in what the airmen call 'fire-eating.'

"Here he meets the men—aces they call them in France—who have been fighting in single seaters, and who are resting or have been sent back for use as instructors. The public knows little about these post-graduate schools for young eagles; the work is intensive and thorough; the science of air fighting is taught by stages up to a degree of perfection almost unbelievable.

"To the airman who fights, such things as tactics and deflection, ranges and sights, must come by instinct. The good fighting man, it is generally believed, is born, not made. He must have the quick brain that will direct the hands with the judgment of experience. He must have keenness, and also pluck. He must love 'the game,' although it is not necessary that he should have been a sportsman, of a yachtsman, or a racing motorist in his pre-war days.

"It is the general opinion among pilots that a scout fighter who has completed a month on the western front has passed through his probation and will be good for a long time unless bad luck or the laws of chance bring him down."

FIGHTING MEN ROLL OFF MOVING TRAIN

Detectives Drop From Trestle Upon Cars and Capture Alleged Thieves.

New York.—Four men sat, legs dangling, on the trestle over the railroad tracks at New Brighton, scanning each empty coal car that passed beneath them enroute for the freight distribution center at Cranford, N. J. They were Supt. of Police M. J. Murphy of the Baltimore and Ohio railroad, and Railroad Detectives William Jones, Daniel Horrigan and Walter Lemmer. They were watching for the thieves who had broken into a freight car in the yards and taken from it $125 worth of merchandise.

A gondola that rolled toward them about 8 o'clock had three men crouching in it. Superintendent Murphy spoke to his men, and the four dropped to the moving train. As they did so, one of the men in the gondola jumped. Horrigan and Lemmer followed and caught him after a run across country.

Murphy and Jones clambered back over the cars until they reached the gondola with the men in it.

"You'll never take me alive," one of them, Louis Latouretta, 20, a fireman of Port Richmond, is said to have shouted as he clinched with Detective Jones.

The two men fought, reeling from side to side of the moving car. Finally Latouretta, stronger than the detective, picked him up and shoved him over the side. Jones dragged his foe with him. The two rolled on the ground, narrowly escaping the train wheels. Jones got his revolver out and finally subdued the fireman.

Murphy had a hard fight with the man left behind. He was John McGinn, 29, Port Richmond; for 13 years a B. and O. engineer. McGinn tried to throw a bag of loot from the car. As he did so, Murphy drew his revolver and commanded, "Jump!"

McGinn obeyed. Murphy followed. Both were badly shaken up, for the train was now going 25 miles an hour. But McGinn started to run and the detective had to fire to stop him.

Tin Cans in Milady's Gown.

From the Popular Science Monthly.

Few women who are proud of the fact tht they wear hosiery, underwear and dresses made of silk, realize that old tin cans contribute from 20 to 300 per cent in weight to the glossy silks worn by them. The price of silk has increased enormously and to enable them to sell heavy silks at a price that will yield a reasonable profit and yet be within the means of the average purchasers, the manufacturers resort to the practice of weighting the silk with tin tetra-chloride, derived from old tin cans. Five thousand tons of tin were used for that purpose in 1917. Don't throw away the empty tomato cans!

"May I inquire if you are a chess player, sir?" said the janitor to the prospective tenant.

"Why do you wish to know that?" queried the other.

"The owner prefers to rent to chess players, sir, because it is so seldom they move."

Geo. Gruetzmacher had a narrow escape from a serious accident last night. They were preparing to close the store when the gas lights went out. He went to close the back door when he stumbled over a box in the dark throwing him headlong into the open cellar way which had accidently been left open. He fell on the hard cement floos, but luckily he escaped with only a few severe bruises.

Last Saturday evening Ye Editor and E. C. Ford of Garner drove over south of Britt to see the damage done by the cyclone a few days prior. The path of the storm was several rods wide and destroyed all in it's path. A large round brick barn was crushed to the earth. Three men were in the barn at the time but all escaped with only a few bruises. The house at the same place was moved off of the foundation. Nearby places also were torn up in a similar manner. Fifteen or twenty farms were struck in the path of the storm which went northeast toward Forest City.

ENGLISH M. E. CHURCH
J. M. Howdeshell, Pastor

"Methodism, to your knees," are the words of Bishop Wm. Quale as he views the present situation. There have been held twenty-six spring conferences, and from these comes the sad report that already in this conference year there has been a falling off of 37,400 in Sunday School membership; 30952 in average attendance; 11,525 in conversions and 10,064 in accessions to the church. Remember that this is Methodism only, and if other denominations are loosing as rapidly and doubtless they are, the conditions are serious. This terrible World War clamors on, but we can not afford to be slackers in the work of the church from any standpoint. If ever there was a time when we as the representatives of the Man of Galilee should be at our post of duty, it is in these days when the old world is rocking on the broken billows of a war torn sea. If we know anything about the religion of Jesus Christ it is not cut to fit our feelings, or the weather, or our desires, or Sunday, but instead it is on it's knees amidst the thunder of war, or in the face of calamity, or in the death chamber, or in the hours of peace and prosperity saying: "Never the less not as I will but as thou wilt." Every officer, teacher and pupil ought to make a special effort and a sacrifice if needs be to be in their place every Sunday Then when conference time arrives we shall not have to report a falling off either in membership or attendance.

The bishop has asked the preachers of Methodism to put in twenty days on the farm during seed time and harvest this year, to help win the war. I am ready to put in from one to three days during the first half of most any week. Anyone needing help and can use me in the above stated way let me know. I am at your service.

Dependency

"So Tod Wimple's been drafted into the army."

"Not drafted. He enlisted," corrected the news carrier. Mrs. Seth Bashfield was usually the first receiver of news in her home town, and she lost no time in its early distribution. This time the gathering of which she was the vital center was small but important for it represented several branches of the Wimple family; a family which, by keeping close together and working co-operatively, had managed to build quite an imposing structure of comparative prosperity and distinction.

The black sheep of the family—not so black, after all, since his faults had been those of omission rather than commission—had been Gary Wimple; and it was his widow and son who were now under discussion.

"Now, I call that a very selfish thing for Tod to do," pronounced Mrs. Abidiah Greene, pursing her full lips and rolling her full blue eyes around the circle of interested faces. "With a mother dependent on him—but she probably expects to come back here." Then she shook her head solemnly. "Now, I, for one, have got my hands full, what with the relief committee and the Housewives' league—"

"My house is too small now. And Mr. Bushfield coming for a visit," quickly interposed Mrs. Bashfield. "Besides we helped Grace start her millinery store in Newkirk and—"

"She paid you back, Aunt Maria, when she sold her stock." The cool, quiet voice came from a little demure woman in the corner; young but with the spinster look already upon her; prim, keen-eyed and straight shouldered. You would have guessed school teacher as Elinor Wimple's profession, and you would have been correct.

Mrs. Bashfield faced the speaker aggressively. "Well, Elinor Wimple! We didn't lend that money to her to sell her stock and pay us back—and no interest. We lent it to her to succeed with!"

The school teacher smiled tolerantly. "It wasn't Aunt Grace's fault her health broke down. And I think it's very noble of her not to interfere with Tod if he feels it is his duty to serve his country. And we ought to be proud of Tod."

Mrs. Greene eyed her younger relative ruminatingly. "Elinor, you always did seem to hold the idea that because Gary Wimple eloped with Grace Todhunter, and her own family cast her off, it became the duty of the Wimple family to take care of her and her son. Goodness knows we have all done enough for Gary!"

"But not much for Grace or Tod," reminded Elinor calmly. "I've always been sorry for her. She lost more than she gained by marriage."

"Many women do." Mrs. Bashfield gathered up her knitting implements. "Anyway, I can't take Grace in now. Perhaps the others—"

But the others promptly advanced reasons for their own inability to assist Gary Wimple's widow at that time. Perhaps a little later—"

Elinor Wimple went home alone, soberly thinking matters over. She had three cozy rooms in a plain little house near the school where she taught. She prepared her lonely supper, got out her bank book, jotted down some figures on paper and wrote a letter that night to Mrs. Gary Wimple.

Mrs. Bashfield was the first to learn that Tod's mother was coming to live with Elinor for a while. There was another conclave—this time without Elinor.

"If Elinor's done this to drive us into taking care of Grace she'll find out her mistake." Mrs. Bashfield spoke tartly, hiding her discomfiture behind an air of injury. "She's sent for her, now let her keep her."

"But, of course, we want things pleasant. We can't start a family quarrel," advanced Mrs. Greene, whose cheeks were more florid than usual. "We'll just make it plain to Grace—diplomatically—that we are not to be looked to—er—at this time."

Mrs. Grace Wimple had scarcely arrived at the school teacher's home when her husband's relatives came to greet her. Bland and smiling, they made their carefully rehearsed speeches and set their little gifts on the center table.

"I've brought you some yarn, Grace," said Mrs. Abidiah Greene. "Of course, you'll want to make yourself useful. And knitting for the relief committee will take up your time nicely while Elinor's in school."

"Some jelly, Grace." Mrs. Bashfield impressively made her offering. "My house is too full to speak of any more entertaining now. But I remembered you were always fond of my crab-apple jelly."

One after another the simple gifts were set down with appropriate remarks from the givers. It was as if the whole group were expressing a single sentiment. "And you mustn't expect anything from us!"

Mrs. Grace accepted the offerings and the remarks with sweet amiability. Now that her callers had time to look well at her, it seemed as if a livelier air than usual tinged her manner; a flickering brightness that touched her person like shimmering sun-days. She was frail and meagerly dressed, but she seemed neither bowed nor broken.

Her slender hands clasped upon an open letter as her eyes glowingly turned upon the wondering faces of her callers!

"I'm glad you all came today," she said, as her voice was joyfully tremulous. "I want you all to know—this letter is from my father!" She drew a long breath and straightened her narrow shoulders. "Yes; he has written to me at last. He wants me to come to him. He has a big fruit farm in Southern California." Then her face shone triumphant. "It came through Tod. My father was a soldier once. And, when he saw Tod's name in the paper—Todhunter Wimple, the two family names—he—"

She broke down then and pressed her face upon the written pages. Elinor bent over her and patted her shoulder. Then, lifting her tear-drenched face, Grace caught at the teacher's hand and smiled into her eyes.

"You have all been very good to me," she said magnanimously. "But Elinor is alone, and I am glad I can do something for Elinor now. She is going to California with me. She has always wanted to visit California." She crackled a slip of paper between her fingers. "My father has sent me a check. He has been very generous. He would not forgive Gary Wimple's wife, but he has forgiven the mother of Todhunter Wimple, soldier."

Then it was Elinor's eyes that swept triumphantly the circle of dazed faces, while each crestfallen visitor was struggling to meet with adequate diplomacy the surprising new situation.—Ella Randall Pearce, in Chicago American.

Leg for Less Than Dollar.

Maj. W. A. Chapple, M. D., of the British army medical corps describes in the Lancet an artificial leg which combines comfort and low cost. It is a hollow leg made of fiber board such as that used for trunks and suitcases, into which the stump of the leg is placed and held by straps. It can be made in any length, depending upon how much of the leg has been lost; it weighs only nineteen ounces in the size for use below the knee and two pounds four and a half ounces for the size that fits the stump of a thigh. And it can be made and sold for less than a dollar. Major Chapple recommends it for comfort and lightness, as well as for cheapness.

Cornmeal Muffins With Dates.

One cupful cornmeal (white if possible), two tablespoonfuls brown sugar, one teaspoonful salt, two tablespoonfuls butter, 1¼ cupfuls milk, one cupful wheat flour, four teaspoonfuls baking powder, one egg, one-half cupful dates cut fine or small. Cook together the first five ingredients in a small double boiler. When cool add the egg or eggs, the dates and the flour sifted with the baking powder, beat very thoroughly and bake in muffin pans or bake in a loaf. This bread will keep in good condition longer if the dates are cooked with the cornmeal, and the other ingredients in a double boiler.

The Precious Parcel

By WALTER JOSEPH DELANEY

(Copyright, 1917, Western Newspaper Union.)

"A precious parcel, Miss Lane," spoke H. H. Barton, secret service man. "It represents the best roundup of the department for ten years. See," and the keen-eyed, pleasant-faced sleuth flipped over half a dozen bundles of greenbacks and then rolled them up in three manilla paper coverings and placed the package in front of the pretty stenographer employed by the Merchants' bank of Woodville.

"What am I to do with it, please?" she inquired.

"Just lock it up somewhere and I will call for it in a day or two." Then his voice dropped to a whisper and the janitor, putting the place in order, failed to catch the import of the subdued tones.

The detective smiled, and Nellie smiled too. She nodded her head intelligently and arose and placed the package in a drawer and locked it.

"I have the cashier place it in the safety vault in the morning," she said, but her visitor did not seem in the least anxious about a package which, judging from the contents, represented a large surface value.

It was after banking hours, but Nellie had some pressing work that would keep her at her desk. Mr. Gregory Valle and his son, Clinton, had gone to a bankers' convention at the county seat and would not return until later.

"Yes, Mr. Valle told me that I was to have you a hot supper from the hotel when I come on watch duty at nine o'clock," the janitor said.

"Mr. Valle is very thoughtful," murmured the young lady.

"And he will call when the eleven o'clock train comes in to see you home safely," he told me."

Nellie fluttered and flushed. She more than liked Clinton Valle. It was a strange circumstance, her present employment. Gregory Valle, after operating his old established bank on a humdrum basis for a quarter of a century had decided to put in plate glass and mahogany counters and electric lights. Of course an up-to-date stenographer and cashier must follow. Nellie Lane had been hired from the city and a jewel of industry she proved. At the very first Clinton Valle had fallen in love with her. Now Clinton feared and Nellie suspected that the precise and cold-blooded father would replace her with a successor to break up their budding love romance.

Not that Mr. Valle did not value Nellie at her true worth, but she was poor, and his son could take his pick among a choice bevy of heiresses, and money was the god of the old banker.

The janitor pulled down the shades and left the bank. He was to return in four hours. Nellie got out a great pile of papers and began to work. She was fully engrossed in her task, an hour later, when she started, paled and stared with a thrill at three men.

"Don't scream or stir, or get hysterics, little one," spoke their leader smoothly. "We're here to do a job and all you've got to do is to keep quiet. She's your special care, Jim," and tranquilly one of his pals slouched into a seat opposite Nellie, revolver in hand.

"We have three safe hours," resumed the leader. "Get out the tools. Of course the stuff is in the vault. Rig up the oxyacetylene torch and we'll burn out the locks."

Nellie was helpless to defy or baffle the cracksmen, but she thought hard. She knew that aside from the regular funds, the bank carried all the cash tax collections of the district, amounting to half a million dollars.

"What's pleasing you?" projected the main burglar, as Nellie indulged in a gleesome chirp of a laugh.

"I was thinking you'll waste your time," replied Nellie coolly. "There are two more doors to get through and a double safe to—to—"

"Crack?" grinned the burglar.

"Yes," nodded Nellie. "Besides, you will spoil the beautiful locks and you look wicked enough to carry off a lot of stuff belonging to clients and all that. There's money enough lying loose outside here to satisfy any reasonable robber."

"You're an original one!" chuckled the admiring cracksman. "I suppose you'll show us where this aforesaid money is?"

"I will," assured Nellie, promptly, "if you promise to go away and not try to get into that vault."

"Oh, about two hundred thousand dollars. There's a key. Open that drawer over yonder and be satisfied with what you find."

"Fellows, here's a royal fortune!" he shouted deliriously to his confreres. "Little girl, you're a jewel," and disappeared with his followers and the "fortune," in question. And Nellie with a placid smile resumed her work. She wondered how soon the looters would discover that the money in the package was counterfeit, just found with a gang the secret service men had broken up.

Nellie called up the police and told her story. She had saved the bank a heavy loss, that was sure, and Gregory Valle forgave her for being poor, which fact his bright-minded son took advantage of by asking Nellie to become his wife.

FLASHLIGHTS

It's a queer world. We've never been able to figure out why a man should magnify his troubles and belittle his joys.

Everything comes to him who waits, but the fellow who gets out and hustles is apt to get what he wants a little sooner.

Another thing the war has taught us is how fine some of the folks we viewed indifferently really were.

Found Old Friend in Army.

A horse buyer visited a farmer, living near Worthing, last spring, and purchased from him a kicking mule, which was regarded as useless for farm work, relates the St. Paul Pioneer Press. Shortly afterward the farmer's son endeavored to enlist in the National Guard, but could not pass the examination. However, he was accepted as a member of a supply company, and now he is driving teams for the government. He recently was sent with his company to North Carolina and was given a new mule team to drive. His surprise can be imagined when he discovered that one of the mules was the identical kicking mule which his father sold last spring and which had found its way into the service of the government.

Appealing His Case.

"Tommy, you must ask the Lord to forgive you for everything wrong you did today, including the fight you had with Bobby Smithers."

"But ma, that wasn't wrong. He said his father could whip my father an' I beat him till he said my father could whip his father."

"That was very wicked."

"Maybe it was, but I'm goin' to wait till dad comes home an' ask him about it."

Critic's Blunder.

Ian Hay, the famous author of "The First Hundred Thousand," tells an amusing story against himself. It seems that after his great war-book had brought him popularity his publisher revived some of his earlier stories and published them. They were well received, although the author regarded them rather as amateur efforts. But a critic in New York waxed enthusiastic over them and congratulated him on his improvement as a writer since the production of his popular book.

Spinach Sauce for Baked Fish.

Two tablespoonfuls of butter, two tablespoonfuls of flour, one-half cupful spinach puree, pepper, salt, one cupful milk, one tablespoonful lemon juice. Place the butter and flour together in a double boiler and blend thoroughly together; then gradually stir in the milk. When smooth and thick stir in the spinach puree (boiled spinach passed through a sieve), and the lemon juice. Season to taste with salt and pepper. Parsley sauce is made by adding crushed parsley instead of the spinach.

MILITARY HOSPITAL RULED BY WOMEN

Is Daily Expecting Influx of American Wounded From West Front.

BY MARGARET WALTER.

London.—(by mail)—At the big military hospital run exclusively by women in Endell street they are daily expecting some of the American soldiers who have been wounded in this last engagement.

"We are expecting the American boys; we know they will be coming along now any day, and we are longing for American girls, fine vigorous young American blood, because we are tired." Dr. Flora Murray, in charge of the hospital, looked it if ever a woman did, though when I asked her if she and her staff could stick it out until the end of the war she spun around on me—she is a lithe woman, who doesn't weigh more than 100 pounds in her heaviest winter uniform and stout shoes "Stick it out, did you say? Why, of course we shall stick it out and for as long after as they need us, you may be sure."

"What was it you said about longing for American girls?" I asked curiously, for everybody knows that American girls are not casually visiting England these days "I said we are longing for help And I have written to my friend Mrs. Haggard, in Syracuse, N Y., asking her to try to send over about 20 strong, healthy American girls to help us here on the staff I am sure that if American women knew how we need them they would not hesitate to lend a hand. Some of my girls have been at it steadily now since August, 1914, without more than a week off at any time, and they are beginning to show the wear"

Dr. Flora Murray and Dr. Louisa Garrett Anderson were running the only hospital for women, entirely staffed by women, in London when the war broke out Dr Louisa Garrett Anderson is the daughter of the famous Dr. Elizabeth Garrett Anderson, England's first woman doctor and the first woman ever elected mayor of an English town, her home town of Aldeburgh, Suffolk. She has just died and as a memorial to her splendid things are being done for women and children who are in need of medical care.

Offered Services Early.

Dr. Louisa Garrett Anderson is a surgeon and she and Dr Flora Murray offered their services to the French Red Cross the first week of August, 1914. Their offer was accepted and they immediately raised funds to the amount of $10,000, half of which they spent in equipping their staff of doctors, nurses and helpers and leaving the other half with Dr. Louisa Woodcock, the London agent of what they called the Women's Hospital corps. Dr Woodcock has since died on active service By the 14th of September they arrived in France (things got done pretty quickly in those early days of the war), and on the 16th of September their 100 beds were filled with the first relays of wounded Being the first woman's unit on the spot, they were keenly watched by other women in Great Britain and were the advisers of the British Women's Hospital unit, which arrived next.

There is one peculiarity about the Women's Hospital corps, as it still calls itself, though now they are a government concern and under military rule. There never has been any committee connected with their work. The two heads decide what is to be done, and it is done as simply and as quickly as if it were the concern of a private individual

After six months of their strenous work in Paris and elsewhere, the French were able to take over the hospitals and then it was that the Director General of the British Army Medical Service, Sir Alfred Keog, offered to furnish and equip a military hospital in London and put the Women's Hospital Corps in charge They jumped at the offer, which greatly stirred conservative England and nearly cost Sir Alfred his position But he weathered the storm and back come the corps to take charge on one condition, namely, that they should be treated on an equal basis and receive equal pay as men doing similar work This was agreed to. The staff consists of 180 persons. On the medical staff there are 16 doctors and surgeons, 36 trained nurses and sisters, and 80 untrained nurses. The administrative section comprises a quartermaster, a steward, 20 general distributing orderlies, three store keepers, 28 scrubbers. In the the clerical department are seven clerks and eight orderly clerks. Besides these there are two X-ray assistants, two dispeners and two laboratory assistants. There are also a gate keeper, an assistant gate keeper, a canteen keeper, needle workers, department orderlies, an honorary librarian (who, by the way, asked for American periodicals to have for our boys when the come), and two assistant librarians.

Institution Well Eqiupped.

There are 570 beds in the main hospital with 150 V. A. D. beds which can be called into service when needed. Five thousand operations have been performed up to date and there is scarcely time to give the different wards their annual cleaning before they are required.

Ten women on the medical staff are wearing the rainbow ribbon which belongs to the Mons medal and Dr. Murray wears also the purple ribbon of C. B. E. (Commander of the Order of the British Empire), and the red military chevron on her right sleeve which denotes continuous service since 1914.

The uniform is very simple, olive drab, made with a yoked Norfolk coat loosely belted. The doctors have orange collars and rank stripes, the staff French blue. They wear soft collars and ties like the men.

After I had seen over the entire hospital, which used to be a work house infirmary, and had noticed how many nationalities were represented among the men—English, Canadians, Australians, New Zealanders, South Africans and all the rest—I returned to what Dr Murray had said at the first.

"You had better tell American women that they must manage somehow to get over to help us because I tell you material is running short over here," she said "There are so many war services now for women that we don't get as many as we need. And remember, we are not volunteers; we are paid just as men doing military hospital work are paid. So there is no question of taking anybody's job away from them"

And as I went away, down the shabby street teeming with life toward Covent Garden, I thought how many American girls I knew who would be only too happy and eager to come and help, especially when it means nursing our own boys sent over from France.

A Solemn German Promise.—

From the Outlook.

Even at this late day the letters exchanged by foreign secretaries and ambassadors, in July and early August, 1914, are worth rereading Fresh events give a new emphasis to passages most of us had forgotten. Take for example No. 157 in the British diplomatic correspondence—from Herr von Jagow, German foreign secretary, to Prince Lichnowsky, still in London as German ambassador The date is August 4 "Please dispel any mistrust that may subsist on the part of the British government with regard to our intentions, by repeating most positively formal assurance that, even in case of armed conflict with Belgium, Germany will, under no pretense whatever, annex Belgian territory Sincerity of this declaration is borne out by the fact that we solemnly pledged our word to Holland strictly to respect her neutrality It is obvious that we could not profitably annex Belgian terfitory without making at the same time territorial acquisitions at the expense of Holland"

The Real Liberty Motor.

Although the government is now receiving six types of airplane motors in addition to the so-called Liberty motor, great general interest has attached to this creation of American inventive genius. As German planes have already been brought down behind the American lines in France in which details of Liberty motor construction have been incorporated, it is no longer a secret. Following is a summary of the war department's first authorized statement regarding the details of the Liberty motor

The cylinders designed follow the practice used by several foreign engines. The method of surrounding the cylinders with pressed steel water jackets was developed by the Packard Motor Car company The method of manufacture of the cylinders was evolved by the Ford company. The design for the cam shaft and valve mechanism above the cylinder heads is based on the Mercedes, but with improved automatic lubrication devised by the Packard company. The cam shaft drive, pistons, and propeller hub are copied from the Hall-Scott motor; a new feature of the Liberty motor is that the angle between the cylinders is 45 degrees instead of 60, as in other 12 cylinder engines, this adds strength. A Delco ignition system is used. The connecting rods are of the forked or straddle type used on the De Dion and Cadillac cars. Crank case and crank shaft are of the standard 12-cylinder design. The lubrication system is an adaptation of the German practice and is very economical in the use of oil, but is too technical to describe here. The water pump is an adaptation of the Packard type and the carbureter was developed by the Zenith company. The bore and stroke of the engine is 5x7 inches, as in the Hall-Scott. The idea of the Liberty engine was developed about June 1, and the first 12-cylinder experimental engine passed a 50-hour test on August 25, 1917. Leading engine builders made suggestions for improvements while expert production men were set to work on their end of the program. The engine committee to whom the final development of the Libery engine is due was made up of technical experts from the Packard, Ford, Cadillac, Lincoln, Marmon and Trego companies.

MARCH'S DAUGHTER A SOLDIER'S WIFE

Mrs. John Milliken.

Mrs. John Milliken is the wife of Captain Milliken, U. S. A., and daughter of Gen Peyton C. March, acting chief of staff of the U. S. army. Daughter of a soldier and wife of a soldier, this true "daughter of the army" is devoting her time and energies to the interests of the boys in khaki During the absence of her husband in France she is stopping with her father at Fort Meyer.

TOO MANY PARADES.

From the Saturday Evening Post.

It is time to discourage this over-frequent parading. As a method of focusing public attention and rousing enthusiasm, the parade originated, of course, in illiterate communities, whose minds were open to only the most elementary appeals. By frequent repetition it grows stale, and it has been repeated too much of late.

The president appointed Liberty day in aid of the third loan. Some million men, over the United States tramped some thousands of miles. These parades looked exactly like every other parade for every other object. The result, in bond subscriptions, was decidedly disappointing.

If it is not a big parade it attracts little attention. If it is a big parade it slows down industry very perceptibly and reduces production. It is a holiday affair, and we don't want more holidays. We want more work. Half the time and energy that the parades consumed would have brought better results if directed to more efficient methods.

In the early stages of war, when we were mere or less at sixes and sevens and trying to find ourselves and the whole job was in the making, parades may have been expedient. We ought to be on the job in grimmer fashion nowadays. Modern resources can find less costly and more effectual means of reaching the public mind and expressing public determination. Shutting up shop for half a day in order to gape at a column tramping down Main street has not the right look.

ONE REASON WHY NAVY IS POPULAR.

This picture isn't an advertisement prepared by Uncle Sam to lure his nephews into the war, but it ought to help get recruits, anyway. It was taken while some New York show girls were instructing sailor boys, who will take part in their own musical play "Biff Bang," how to dance.

Further Muhlon Disclosures.

From the London Times.

Berne, April 27.—Dr. Muhlon (the ex-director of Krupp's, now living in Switzerland, whose memorandum showing Germany's responsibility for the war appeared recently in the Times) has an interesting article in the Journal de Geneve on the German attempts to counteract Herr von Bethmann Hollweg's statement in the reichstag that necessity "knows no law" and that the wrong done to Belgium would be made good, by casting doubts on the genuineness of Belgium's neutrality—doubts which, Dr. Muhlon says, for anyone capable of reflection, have been superabundantly refuted He says:

> No chancellor has ever withdrawn the phrase uttered on August, 4, 1914; one has only been afraid to repeat it too distinctly So far as I am concerned, I have spoken in Germany with many men in a position to know, and I have never met one who ever attempted in the slightest way to allude to fault on the part of Belgium
> Nevertheless, these accusations are still daily renewed by countless hirelings with the sole object of effacing the recollection of the chancellor's declaration and hardening German hearts in regard to Belgium. The German people wishes to believe, in spite of Herr von Bethmann Hollwegg, that the Belgians deserved to be invaded.

Dr. Muhlon then, as a former director of Krupp's, gives the following evidence of Belgium's innocence: Before the war Belgium had ordered at Krupp's four 28cm. guns for Antwerp. These were ready and paid for at the beginning of 1914, but as the emplacements were not ready the Belgian government begged Krupp's to delay delivery, and Krupp's reluctantly agreed, and at the outbreak of the war the guns, which were worth £160,000, were seized by the Prussian minister of war. Again, shortly before the war Belgium, which had long dealt with Krupp's, although Krupp's was far inferior to the French gunmakers—Dr. Muhlon always had the impression that Belgium hoped in this way to keep Germany in good humor—put herself completely in the hands of Krupp's for a new and barely tried artillery munition. Krupp's handed over this business to the firm of Cockerill, and at the moment of the outbreak of war Dr. Muhlon saw a letter from Messrs. Cockerill announcing the payment of 1,000,000f. (£40,000) for the patent.

Tablets for Kings Suggested.

In a conspicuous spot of the palace of Westminister there stands a tablet which reads

Each time British sovereigns go to the palace, to proclaim the opening or closing of parliament, they must pass this carved inscription, and their eyes must look upon its letters.

In the Greek national assembly there soon will be a marble tablet, set up in such a position that Greek sovereigns, in going to and from the hall to proclaim the opening or closing of the national assembly, must see those words

> King Constantine having dissolved for the second time the chamber of 1915, in order to impose a personal policy, lost the throne, while the dissolved chamber, reconvoked, continued to perform its constitutional duties.

In Austria and Hungary, Emperor Charles has disbanded the constitutional assemblies. Demand by the lower classes of Magyars for universal suffrage forced action in Hungary Demand for absolute independence by the Croats, the South Slavs, the Czechs, the Jugo-Slavs, forced action in Austria.

The scion of the house of Hapsburg is making arrangements to induce the people to forget their desires for self government. The Magyars, instead of being given the ballot, are to be raised to a higher social stratum. Bosnia, Herzegovina, Crotia and Slavonia are to be tacked on to Hungary and their inhabitants subjected to Magyar domination. The Magyar hates these discontented Croats and South Slavs. Charles is depending on the Magyars to hold them down.

But at the same time he is drawing up a pragmatic alliance—a military and customs union—with Germany. Only the German provinces of Austria want a return to the German federation. Even the Magyars object to this. And a two-thirds majority in the constitutional assemblies is required for a sanction of such an alliance.

Vienna newspapers say it is doubtful if the necessary vote can be obtained, when Charles again calls members of the assemblies back to their desks. Nor does it seem likely the Austrian reichsrath will consent to a rearrangement of the dual monarchy's lands. It is men from those districts Charles proposes to put under Hungary, who, by refusing to pass the budget, caused the emperor to disband the delegates.

The Austrian food controller has announced it will be necessary to declare one breadless day a week. It is doubly dangerous to take both bread and constitutional rights from a people at the same time. Empty stomachs turn their thoughts to marble tablets.

War for Humanity.

From Case and Comment.

War, in a good cause, is not the greatest evil which a nation can suffer War is an ugly thing, but not the ugliest of things; the decayed and degraded state of moral and patriotic feeling which thinks nothing worth a war is worse When a people are used as mere human instruments for firing cannon or thrusting bayonets in the service for the selfish purposes of a master, such war degrades a people. A war to protect other human beings against tyrannical injustice, a war to give victory to their own ideas of right and good, and which is their own war, carried on for an honest people by their free choice, is often the means of their regeneration. A man who has nothing which he is willing to fight for, nothing which he cares more about than he does about his personal safety, is a miserable creature, who has no chance of being free, unless made and kept so by exertions of better men than himself. As long as justice and injustice have not terminated their ever renewing fight for ascendency in the affairs of mankind, human beings must be willing when need is, to do battle for the one against the other.—John Stuart Mill.

This was written a half century and more ago, but it might have been written yesterday, it applies so well to today's conditions. The truth is the same yesterday, today and tomorrow

In the Stone Age.

From the Washington Star.

"How so?"

"Look at my brother's daughter She's about to be married. You know the part of the ceremony where the groom taps the bride on the head?"

"Yes."

"Well, they're rehearsing with a stuffed club."

No German Word For It.

A. D. McLaren, in the Atlantic.

It always struck me as highly significant that Germans themselves used the English term, "self government," to express the form of activity embodied in the name.

Locust eggs, treated with sulphuric acid and lime, are used as fertilizers in Mediterranean countries when the insects are numerous.

"Hand-Me-Down" Ships.

From the New York Times.

When the 5,500-ton steel freight steamer Tuckahoe was put into government service the other day 37 days after the first plate of her keel was placed in position, she not only broke all records that had been standing since the Romans, in the first Punic war, built a fleet in 40 days and inflicted an overwhelming defeat upon the Carthaginians, but she demonstrated one aspect of the so-called fabricated ship program that has been pretty generally overlooked. But which, none the less, forms one of the principal elements in the success of America's shipbuilding effort.

The essential difference between the fabricated ship and one old fashioned one is not the distance from rolling mill or plate and angle shop to ways, but in the treatment of the material before and after it gets to the ways. It is essentially the difference between a tailor made and a ready made suit of clothes. The old type of ship was built to plans, but, while those plans were "faired" beforehand, they only gave a general idea of the kind of ship she was going to be. The actual building and the form of the ship were determined on the ways themselves.

The steel plates and frames and beams were shaped roughly to the form the shipbuilder proposed to fit them to, and then taken down the ways and tried on the unfinished ship. If they don't fit exactly, they were taken back to the bending floor and bent a little further this way or that, or perhaps straightened out a trifle and tried on again. If they fitted this time, they were riveted in place, and then the next piece in turn fitted to them—and so the ship grew.

But American shipyards began gradually, even before the war, to eliminate the lost time and lost motion involved in fitting the steel together on the ways, by drawing the patterns for each part accurately beforehand. And this way of going about it, to distinguish from the old method of fitting on the ways, came to be known in the shipyards as "fabricating" long before the general public had heard of the word.

At first the shipyards only attempted to fabricate the midship sections of ships, leaving the fine curves of the bow and stern to be molded by the skilled ship tailors on the ways. Little by little shipyard men all over the country were pushing the fabrication idea a bit further forward and further aft along their ships' hulls, until presently fully 95, and in some cases 99, per cent of the ship came from the shop ready to fit together. The gain in speed of construction the saving in cost were tremendo

The next step to the trained naval architect and engi was so obvious that it is not sure now, just who took it first. As as the writer has been able to tain, it was C. M. P Jack, now con ing engineer for the Chester building company and the Merche Shipbuilding corporation, which c ates the new Bristol fabricating who first put into practice the ide building fabricated ships in whol lots, and ordering his plates frames made for him in steel miles away from the yard where were to be assembled. And as fa standardization goes, it has been plied in the so-called "old fashio shipyards as completely as in the new yards. The sole difference i in one case the fabricating shop, is, the plate and angle shop and ing floor, are within bowshot of ways, and in the other they are miles away.

Not less important in the progre the shipbuilding industry, although most unheard of, is what might called "international standardiza —standardization, that is, of plate frame and column and deck beam and shapes, so that they may ordered wholesale although used ships of different sizes and types stead of being turned out carefully individually. This particular kind standardization, moreover, will be creasingly important as our new fa cated ships go to sea because it simplify the problem of repairs to of them that sust in damage, both speed and in cheapness. The day practically here already when a yard carries a full line of spare for any of its standard lines of sh just as an automobile factory car spare parts for its standard patte of cars.

These are the reasons why the sh builders of America see in the laun ing of the Tuckahoe not merely a spectacular advertisement, a "record" be striven for, but a demonstration the solid formations upon which Am ica's immense shipbuilding progr rests, and of the hopes which it fulfill. It is in itself a demonstrati that the fabricated ship program not, as many people have supposed, new departure and an entirely idea, but a simple logical, and by means a very long step forward in development of an industry, although step which opens possibilities wh brilliancy we are scarcely yet beg ning to realize.

A Wail From Berlin.

From the Literary Digest.

Prince Lichnowsky's revelations appear to be exciting so further heart searchings in the fatherland, and the Berlin Tag com out with a plaintive confession of German "miscalculations." Th Berlin weekly wails:

> So many of our calculations have deceived us! We expected that British India would rise when the first shot was fired in Europe, but in reality thousands of Indians came over to fight with the British against us. We anticipated that the whole British empire would be torn to pieces, but the colonies appear to be closer than ever to the mother country. We expected a triumphant rebellion in South Africa and yet it turned out to be nothing but a fizzle. We expected trouble in Ireland, but instead she has sent thousands of her best soldiers against us. We anticipated that the party of "peace at any price" would be dominant in England, but it melted away in the ardor to fight against the Germans. We reckoned that England was degenerate and incapable of placing any weight in the scale, but she seems to be our principal enemy.
> The same has been the case with France. We thought that France was depraved and divided, but we found her a formidable opponent. * * * Those who led us into all these mistakes and miscalculations have laid upon themselves a heavy responsibility."

No Piffling Enterprise.

Edward Hungerford, in Collier's Weekly.

Gun making is a ticklish business—not dangerous, but ticklish. It's mighty exact. A gun manufacturer must not exceed variation of two one-thousandths of an inch in a 6-foot bore. N every man who walks into a shop, his overalls under his arm, announces himself as an expert mechanic, can build guns to delicate measurements as that.

And a complicated business too. A single disappearing gun, a standard type adopted by our army, has, with its disappear carriage but exclusive of its sights and accessories, almost 8,0 parts. A 3-inch gun battery requires 3,876 tools, accessories supplies which are simply part of its standard outfit.

An army officers told these things to a chamber of commer man of Rochester. And the chamber of commerce called a conferen of several dozen of the leading manufacturrs of Rochester. To the the man in khaki made the problem clear. He said that the progra for heavy guns for the army until July, 1919, would run to a cost $2,000,000,000—perhaps even more. He translated these figures i those of size. He said that within that time there would be needed at least 65,000,000 tons of new parts for these guns in addition 45,000,000 tons of replacement parts.

Let me translate these figures still further for you. There 65,000 railroad locomotives in this country. Let us assume the average weight to be 200 tons each—it is a very fair estimate. Th means that the railroad locomotives together weigh some 13,000,0 tons—or just one-fifth the casting required for the new parts alo of our heavy ordnance for the next 18 months of the war. We ha embarked upon no piffling enterprise!

Tino's Allowance Cut Off.

From the Villager (Katonah, N. Y.)

Greece has finally decided to give her one time king no more pocket money. The matter has occasioned a good deal of debate. When the heated affairs of the Hellene household were brought at length to a definite head and separation set up, the dethroned Germanophile was granted an annuity. The protecting powers, uneasy perhaps under the consciousness of their boggling management of the situation, offered to pay the sum, but Greece came forward and said that her royalty was after all her own liability and that in decency she should foot the bill.

So it was arranged, a sort of alimony, and Constantine went off to Switzerland, opened a very adequate palace in Zurich and proceeded to assemble all the instigators, plotters, international vagrants and generally disaffected spirits not otherwise engaged in war work, an action which does not at all astonish those read in the history of dethroned monarchs. But Greece felt that it was bad taste on Constantine's part and after a good deal of tentative discussion has now withdrawn the allowance, leaving the deposed one quite on his own.

We feel no particular pity for the outcast; no one need worry lest the kaiser's brotherinlaw should come to penury, but there is ever something appealing in the spectacle of overturned royalty. A king who once looked out over the blue Aegean, now cut off and banquoting uncomfortably in Switzerland; a despot, enduring with his family such privation in a Siberian town that the Red Cross asks permission to alleviate his condition—these are rich matter for our poets and our playwrights!

From the New Republic.

To call on women to conduct propaganda, to sell Liberty bonds, to occupy important positions, to undertake hard and steady physical labor, to share every responsibility and every activity except that of actually carrying arms and then to deny them the opportunity of voting, would be one of those acts of fundamental inhumanity and injustice which would in the end involve in disaster the nation which consented to it. The women of America are the comrades of the men in this fight. They have just as much to gain as the men have from the successful achievement of America's national purpose and just as much to lose as a consequence of failure. Any man who has seen the parade of American nurses and of the mothers of the drafted men, and who refuses to allow to women their share in the responsibility for the political policy, whose burdens they are so cheerfully carrying, is callous to the moral realities of what is now taking place almost to the point of being defective.

Bridging the Gap From Steer to Steak

Live stock is raised on the farms and ranches of the West.

Meat is eaten in the large cities of the East, and by our boys in France — thousands of miles away.

The day of transporting live animals from ranch to seaboard and overseas has passed. There was too much waste. The modern packer locates his large and specialized plants in the producing regions. He ships the dressed beef in refrigerator cars, and holds it in his own refrigerated branch warehouses until delivered to the retailer. For shipment to foreign ports, he transfers the meat to refrigerated ships.

By means of his nation-wide organization the modern packer maintains a continuous flow of meats to all parts of the country, so that each retailer gets just the quantity and quality of meat his trade demands, and at the time he wants it.

Swift & Company recently shipped 1,000 carloads of meat products in one week to our Armies and to the Allies.

Bridging the gap from ranch to consumer can be done successfully—and at low unit costs and profits—only by large business organizations.

Swift & Company's profit on meat, always so small as to have practically no effect on prices, is now limited by the Government to about 2 cents on each dollar of sales.

Question of the Savings Banks.

From the Financier.

Congress and state legislatures are taking cognizance of the trying position of the average savings bank. The war corporation bill carries a proviso that these institutions may appeal to the war bank for loans on good collateral. New York has granted to the mutual savings banks the privilege of investing a reasonable proportion of their deposits in bankers' acceptances. The Massachusetts legislature is considering a similar bill

As the two states in question report between them over $3,000,000,000 of savings deposits, it will be seen that a method of liquid investment has been provided for institutions which are susceptible to every wave of public feeling or opinion

The position of the savings banks in the east has been peculiar. The greater part of their funds is invested in gilt edged securities, usually selling at a premium. The decline in bond values had the effect of reducing surplus More than that, it was a foregone conclusion that any effort at realization, due to fancied necessity, must further depress the bond market.

The several bond loans caused withdrawals from savings banks in considerable amounts, installment payments on individual bond purchases had a tendency to interfere with savings bank deposits; even thrift stamp buying cuts into the savings bank routine. As the mutual banks are not members of the reserve system, and can get no aid from it except indirectly, the more conservative among them felt it necessary to become strong in cash, even though the operation represented sacrifice.

Now that the war corporation is in a position to furnish aid when necessary, and also because the banks are able to carry resources in gilt edged short time paper, they can regard the future with a feeling of equanimity. It has been asserted that some of the long prevailing weakness in the bond market has been brought about either by savings bank selling, or through their withdrawal as buyers Regardless of whether this is or is not true, the legislation mentioned should have a stabilizing effect on high class bonds for the reason first, that savings banks will be under no pressure to sell, and secondly, because they need have no further hesitation in buying

During the crossing the prince was much dejected and [illegible] to Admiral Hood

'I might as well jump overboard for my career is ended Three months ago (that is about May 1) his majesty the emperor wrote me and instructed me to investigate secretly the state of English public opinion and to let him know whether there was any likelihood that the English would enter the war in case we made war. I looked over the ground in all directions and replied that the English were not likely to go to war on any account In the first place, they had ceased to be a martial nation They had grown so rich that their chief desire was to enjoy the luxury and comfort which their wealth brought them. Next, they had a civil war on their hands in Ireland. Then, they had only a very small army ready [illegible] men—and it would take them at least a year to train any considerable force Finally, I added, they had grown so unmilitary that they allowed even women (suffragets) to intimidate them

'I have no doubt,' said Lichnowsky, 'that my report must have influenced the decision of the emperor in forcing the war So you see what my fate is likely to be.'

On his return to London immediately after Admiral Hood repeated Prince Lichnowsky's statement to several persons and among others, to a Harvard professor of worldwide reputation, who repeated it to me soon after he came back to Boston Admiral Hood, I need hardly remind you, married a well known Boston lady and had himself many friends and acquaintances, including the Harvard professor, in Boston society. I printed the story in my 'Germany versus Civilization' more than two years ago, but I did not give Admiral Hood as its source because he was then in active service in the British navy. He went down with his ship, as every one knows, in the battle of Jutland, and there can be no impropriety in naming him now.

In the light of such evidence, how long will even the German people go on believing the lie which the kaiser passed off on them at the beginning of the war when he assured them that the sword had been forced into his hands?

Effect on German Schools.

Dr. Paul Hildebrandt, in Vossische Zeitung, Berlin.

The sixth grade pupils of 1914 are now about to be promoted to the upper third. They have become accustomed to the war Who can wonder then that now in the fourth year of war our children exhibit signs of change? Too many of the restraints have been removed which should shape their development- the loosening of family ties, the father at the front, the mother employed away from home, and in the lower ranks of society doing the work of men, the omission of school discipline. Of the teachers of the Berlin public schools, for instance, two-thirds have gone into the army The remainer are overworked Dropping class periods, or combining classes together are the order of the day

Young people follow the law of their nature They are guided by the impressions of the moment and they cannot permanently resist them In addition as time went on especially in case of the students of higher institutions, and particularly in the towns the hardship of inadequate nourishment appeared It is the unanimous judgment of medical specialists that the children of the middle classes suffered most in this respect. General attention was attracted to the fact that the children were less sensitive to reproof, that they paid no more attention to threats, because the school authorities had directed that they should be treated with every leniency, and since promotions no longer represented any definite standard of accomplishment.

That spirit of voluntary service which at the beginning of the war revealed itself in its fairest aspect has now disappeared. Everywhere we hear lamentations over the increasing distaste shown for military service. Pupils collect articles now for the reward, not from patriotism, and the older pupils have their struggles. Shall they take advantage of the opportunity to leave school with a half completed education, or shall they avoid placing themselves in a position where they will have to enlist for their country? What an unhappy indecision even for the best of them, those who really think about the matter!

Furthermore, in these ranks of society which are less influenced by tradition, discipline, and education, we find increasing violations of the law. At the first this manifested itself merely in an increase of theft. More recently it has taken a decided turn toward personal assaults. It is true, the latter are still negligible in proportion to the total number of juvenile offenses, but they are increasing every year Already the number of violent crimes committed by youths in the city of Berlin is more than three times the number reported in 1914.

Thus, dark shadows are falling over the brilliant picture of 1914. Every disciplinary influence, every effort of the still fundamentally sound German nation must be exerted to oppose this tendency, and to lead the children back to the path of rectitude.

Lesson For the Huns.

From the Pittsburgh Post

At one camp there are a number of Germans, interned for the war. They consist of raiders from the Pacific, civilian offenders, and others. At night they are locked in a row of cells in charge of an officer and guard Every morning when the guard was relieved the officer would say "I wish some of those — Dutch would try to escape so I could have an excuse to shoot three or four of them" However, they wouldn't tell why, leaving it to the next officer to find out

When it came to a certain guard's turn all was quiet until 10 p m Then came a rattling at the door of No. 1 cell. "Please, may I haf drink of wasser?"

"Sure," and the guard took his big bunch of keys, unlocked the door, escorted him to the faucet, let him drink, took him back, and locked him up again. He had no more than reached his chair than the performance was repeated from No. 2 cell. Ditto No. 3. About this time the guard "tumbled," but the performance continued until it had been repeated by the entire 27 Germans in succession. He then rattled each cell door and made the prisoners line up.

"Now, you Dutch have had some fun with me, and I'm going to have some fun with you Get your pails and mops. Every hour you are going to mop out!"

Those who refused were prodded with a bayonet till they complied.

By morning the cellroom was the cleanest it had ever been, and Germany had received another lesson that American patience is not to be lightly disregarded.

That same cellroom is the quietest place in camp at night now, which is saying considerable.

"Close Up" View of Kaiser.

W. H. Schofield, Harvard University.

"After luncheon he took me, with the other gentlemen, into his own study to smoke. He said a few words to the count, who was there, and then turned him over to an official of the household to be entertained. I evidently was the person who was to be used this time. I never had a more interesting experience. The emperor was evidently in a mood for indiscretions, and certainly he committed as many as a man could desire. He talked particularly of war and peace. He talked about theology and literature and various other incidental things, but he seemed especially interested that I should know his opinions about peace and war. He spoke of conscription. He said to me, 'Your country will very soon come to conscription,' and I thought he was mad. I could not conceive at that time of any circumstance that would bring this country to conscription, but he knew what was coming. He drew a picture of a land visited by a foreign force that I had never heard surpassed. He had before him clearly the scenes of desolation, and he pictured them with his mind's eye, saying that with God's help he would never allow his land to have misery come to it. But, he said, 'They shall have misery, they shall have it if they ever dare to contradict my will!'"

They Had Retired.

Dr. Ellison Browning said in an address before the antigambling league of Duluth:

"It's impossible to speak a good word for gambling except in jest.

"One of my addresses was interrupted on a certain evening by a chap who yelled:

"'Don't knock gamblin' so hard, doc. I know three men in this town who have retired, thanks to gamblin'.'

"'What's their address?' I demanded skeptically.

"The whole audience then burst out laughing, for that was the address of the local almshouse."

"YES, I THINK SO."

Most Startling Endorsement Ever Published

Mr. A. W. Cramer, Registered Pharmacist and Druggist of Plano, Illinois, writes under date of December 12, 1916.

"Eatonic Remedy Co., Chicago, Ill.

Gentlemen:—The following incident which happened in my place of business I know will be of great interest to you, and, I hope, of great benefit to humanity, morally and physically.

I keep a quantity of EATONIC piled on my show case. I recently missed a box, and knowing neither myself nor clerk had sold it, I could not account for its disappearance. Yesterday morning a man walked into my store and said: "Mr. Cramer, I owe you fifty cents for a box of EATONIC which I stole from your show case. I am bothered with stomach trouble and, not having the money to spare to get a box, I took it. EATONIC has done me so much good my conscience bothered me until I had to come back and pay for it."

This is the most wonderful testimonial statement in all my experience in the interest of any preparation. It is positive proof, to my mind, that EATONIC is all that is claimed for it. If it had not helped this man his conscience would have left him unmolested. Very truly yours,

A. W. Cramer."

She was seated watching the waves and the sporters in the surf when the same man passed her. She noted that he slowed down in his pace. He hesitated, then he lifted his hat and approached her.

"Pardon me, if I have made a mistake," he said courteously, "but are you not Dorothy Worden—forgive me, Miss Worden?"

"That is my name," acknowledged the lady. "May I ask—"

But his clear, honest face had become radiant. He extended his hand readily and somehow won with those friendly earnest eyes, she allowed her own to rest in his.

"You don't remember me," he smiled. "I don't wonder. I made little impression upon you when I was a [illegible] as I [illegible]ized along as a man. I am an old schoolmate of yours. I am Walter Clyde."

Her face lit up in turn. Ah, she fully remembered him now! It was like traversing a page from an old treasured book to go over the incidents of their early childhood. She recalled how he had spelled her down, and he related an incident where he had been punished for some trivial fault and she had wanted to go home with him to cheer him. It was a delightful walk for the two lonely ones. He told her of his daily work. He was a traveling salesman, and she in turn apprized him of her life history since they had parted. Playfully he called her Dorothy and asked her to address him Walter, as she had done in the care-free days of childhood.

"I am coming to see you next time my route covers Milton" he told her, and when they parted Dorothy felt as though suddenly she had been turned out from a newly found paradise.

And when Miss Worden got home it was a comfort to speak his name to herself. But wise old Polly heard her, and began to call loud and mischievously. Even the observant parrot overheard that it teased her.

But three months later when a lonely man turned his face in the direction of Milton. He had his longings to see his old-time school friend. He [illegible] also. Somehow the [illegible] meeting with Miss Worden had [illegible] his life with a new interest. Did he exaggerate in his conception of the warm interest she had evinced in his affairs? That might have been simply a friendly and courteous act.

Walter Clyde reached Milton and inquired his way to the Worden home. He located it. The neat rose-scented garden, the vine-embowered cottage enchanted him. He found Miss Worden absent from home, probably shopping in town or visiting a neighbor. He sat down on the porch step, wondering if he would be welcome.

"Walter! Walter!"

He started to his feet. At first he believed it was Miss Worden calling him. Then he noticed the parrot in its cage hanging from the porch ceiling.

"Walter! Walter!" He began thinking. A most agreeable smile crossed his face. He was a slow man, but a reasoner. Had Miss Worden taught the clever bird to speak his name?

"I'll wait—I'll stay," he soliloquized. "Why not? The bird spoke my name. Sort of friendly and tender, too. Dear lady! perhaps she has made a confidant of the bird and really—really likes me."

She loved him, and he knew this before he went away, buoyed up with the happy knowledge that when summer came again she would be his happy bride.

BUTTING IN.

HUSBANDS NOT SUCH BAD LOT

Stormy Days Cause Hubbies to Be Thoughtful of Wives Who Contemplate Shopping Expeditions.

Cold days stir up warm reactions in the heart.

Remember that cold Saturday morning when rain and snow swept the streets?

A young married man plowed through the gale to his office, and, once there, bethought himself that his wife had declared her intention of going down to Center Market to purchase a rabbit for dinner that evening.

Looking down upon storm-swept Pennsylvania avenue, relates the Washington Star, the loving husband immediately decided that his wife would be foolish to go out on such a bad morning, and that he wouldn't let her go.

"I'll just call her up and tell her it is too bad a morning for her to go out, when she doesn't have to, and that I'll bring the things home myself this evening," he thought.

Cynical reader, this story doesn't turn out the way you think. Truth must often disappoint the cynic.

Fair wife did not insist on going to market through the snow to bring home the nice rabbit for husband to devour. She was pleased that husband was so thoughtful.

And what is more:

When the husband went to a phone to call up his wife to tell her to stay at home, he found the phone already in use.

"Hello, Mary," said the man on the phone. "It's a mighty bad day, and I think you had better not go down town this morning—"

The young husband went to use the phone in another room. As he walked in, he saw a comrade at the phone already.

"Helen," the man on the phone was saying, "I think you had better stay at home this morning. It's a mighty bad day—"

Husbands are a pretty decent lot after all.

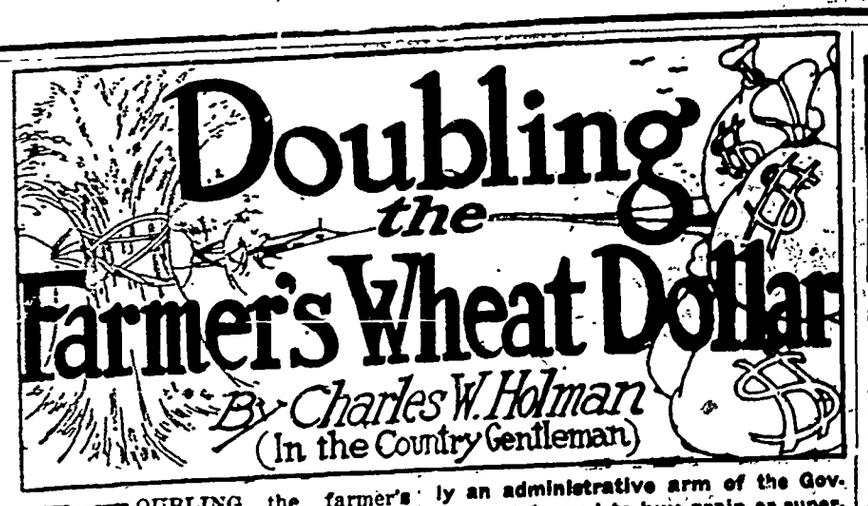
When the sink gets discolored, and there is an unpleasant odor, if a scouring powder won't do the business, sprinkle at night with chloride of lime and allow the lime to remain on till morning. After it has been rinsed off not only will you find the sink clean and white, but you will see what a good disinfectant it is.



DOUBLING the farmer's share of the wheat dollar is one of the war-time jobs Uncle Sam has done since food control became possible. After five months of grappling with the problem, Uncle Sam is now translating into the pockets of both producers and consumers benefits derived by the Nation. He has shut off speculation, produced a free market and movement of all grades of wheat, cut expenses and induced a normal flow of wheat in natural directions, and effected a thousand other economies.

The Food Administration Grain Corporation, which supervises the sale, or itself buys every bushel of wheat produced in the Nation in its progress from country elevator to foreign buyers or domestic consumers, marks a new step toward national efficiency. How in four short months it has been done is told in the following episodes wherein two bushels of wheat traveled to market.

One fine fall afternoon, Col. Bill Jenkins, who farms somewhere in Missouri, loaded his wheat into a wagon and drove along the black road that led across the prairie to town. When he reached the co-operative elevator of which he was a stockholder, he pulled up on the scales, checked his gross weights carefully, and began to unload. The manager came out and asked:

"When you want to sell this wheat?"

"I dunno," he answered. "One time's about as good as another—these days. 'T won't weigh any more later," he added, with a dry smile.

"Wheat shrinks a lot," admitted the manager. "I hear the Government wants as much wheat as it can get just now—understand the Allies do eat a terrible lot of it since the war."

"What's wheat to-day?" asked Col. Jenkins, getting interested.

"Well, let me see," parleyed the manager. "I guess this wheat'd be a good No. 2 under the new grades."

"Grades? What about grades? That Food Administration seems to mix into mighty nigh everything from rabbits to axle grease."

"Hold on, Colonel," said the elevator man, good-naturedly. "The Food Administration is not to blame. Congress passed the act and told the Department of Agriculture to fix the grades. They became effective last July. I sent out a letter on it."

"Well, I guess you better sell for the best you can," said the farmer. "I am needed at home." And he drove away.

A New Order in the Grain World.

CONVERSATIONS of this kind might have taken place in almost every town in the great grain belt of the Nation after August 10; for revolution in grain marketing was taking place. Uncle Sam had started on this remarkable experiment; he was going to see whether wheat could be marketed minus rake-offs to the speculators. This necessitated complete control by the Government of storage facilities, transportation and distributive agencies, and the marketing machinery for wheat and rye.

Everybody was troubled; most of all, the officials of the Food Administration Grain Corporation who had undertaken, without salary, and at the sacrifice of their personal connection with the grain trade, to whip into shape the forces that would drive forward the big business machine for marketing American wheat. A single control; and a $50,000,000 nonprofit-making corporation to do the work.

This work is a necessary arm of the Food Administration, allowing the Government to do business quickly and without red tape. Its stock is held in trust by the President of the United States. For the time of the war it will supervise the rate or purchase the part commercially available of the 660,000,000 bushels of wheat and the 50,000,000 surplus of rye grown in America in 1917. Its job is to find a market for every bushel, irrespective of class and grade. Under its patronage, wheat screenings are moving just as easily as No. 1 Northern. It must also work out satisfactorily the local prices for wheat at each of almost 20,000 country elevator points, adjust thousands of complaints, organize the gathering and analysis of date, inspect concerns reported as dealing unfairly, solve vexatious disagreements among the trade, and deal effectively with the allies' purchasing agent and the neutrals who may desire to purchase.

In the early days, following the determination of prices for 1917 wheat by the President's Fair Price Commission, confusion existed in every part of the wheat-producing regions. This was intensified by the inauguration of the new grain grades, as promulgated by the Department of Agriculture, which took place about the same time, and led to diverse complaints and a feeling among farmers that the Grain Corporation of the Food Administration was responsible for both the price as determined and stricter observance of grain grades. But the corporation was responsible for neither act. It is purely an administrative arm of the Government formed to buy grain or supervise its sale at the prices determined by the commission, and it must do its work on the basis of the new grades. But to return to our farmer and his expectations of price.

Introducing Two Bushels of Wheat.

Lying side by side in his wagon had been 2 bushels of wheat that fate had marked for strangely different ends. They were very much alike, those bushels of wheat, and to look at them you would not have suspected the strange and wonderful adventures in store for them. Yet one was destined to travel abroad for consumption in France; the other to find its way into Georgia, where it was milled and its flour finally reached a New York baker on the East Side. But in the sum of the travels made by the two, as we shall follow them, will be unfolded the international panorama of wheat marketing in time of war.

High war costs of production gave our Missouri farmer much concern as to his returns and accounted for his depression over the prospects of his wheat "grading down"; for that meant a reduction of 3 cents per bushel under the No. 1 grade. But it graded No. 2.

The elevator would also deduct an additional 5 cents a bushel to cover the fixed charge made in this locality for handling and selling. The 5-cent charge included the commission of 1 cent per bushel customary in 1917 among commission men for selling the wheat to domestic millers or foreign buyers.

The elevator man was none too sure as to how to get at the price which this wheat should bring. He knew considerably more about human nature than freight rates and decided to "check up" the problem to the nearest zone agent of the Grain Corporation. So he wrote a letter to the representative stationed at St. Louis. That letter was referred to the traffic expert in the New York office, who transmitted the following rule for determining the price of wheat at any country point:

There is only one price for wheat at a country point. That price is always to be arrived at by taking as a basis the price at the most advantageous primary market where we have fixed a price and deducting the freight to that market and a fair handling profit. That is the price to be paid for wheat at any station, regardless of the point to which it may be shipped.

Working out the price which should be paid for wheat at your station is a fine occupation for an off day. If you cannot find the answer, write to the Food Administration Grain Corporation in New York City and its traffic expert will give you aid.

TAKE an actual example: An elevator man in Sikeston, Mo., wanted to know what price No. 2 wheat should bring at his station when No. 1 wheat at New York City was $2.28 per bushel. Here is how he went about it:

The freight rate from Sikeston to New York being 16.98 cents per bushel, he deducted that from $2.28 per bushel and found the price at Sikeston to be $2.1102. From this he deducted 1 per cent per bushel for the commission firm's charges, which put the net price f. o. b. Sikeston at $2.1002.

He next compared this price with what he could get if he sold at St. Louis, his nearest primary market. At St. Louis the basic price is $2.18 per bushel, and the freight rate from Sikeston to St. Louis 6 cents per bushel. This would make the Sikeston price $2.12, less 1 cent per bushel for selling charges, or $2.11 net. The St. Louis price would therefore govern, being advantageous to the Sikeston seller.

If our imaginary 2 bushels of wheat had started from Sikeston, since it was a No. 2 grade, we must deduct 3 cents per bushel, which would bring the price f. o. b. the elevator point to $2.0802 per bushel. As our imaginary elevator man is charging 5 cents per bushel for handling, which includes the commission fee just mentioned, we deduct an additional 4 cents to arrive at the price the farmer received. This price would be $2.0402 at the elevator. Some of that 4 cents will return to our farmer if the elevator prospers; for it is owned co-operatively.

When Farmer and Elevator Man Disagreed.

Had this elevator been owned by private firm or person, or had it been a "line" plant, Col. Jenkins would not have been so bland and trustful.

He might have refused to sell at all and arranged to store his wheat or he might have taken it over to a competitive concern which offered a higher price; for the Food Administration has not yet attempted to regulate the prices paid farmers for wheat at country points. It does, however, offer to sell for any farmer or farmers' organization wheat offered at terminal points, but makes a commission charge of 1 per cent for its services.

Why We Fight

No. 1

Because Germany for Years Has Been Making Secret, Treacherous War on Us

By CLARENCE L. SPEED
Secretary of the War Committee of the Union League Club of Chicago.

One of the deep, underlying reasons—not just a diplomatic pretext—we are at war with Germany is that for a generation Germany has been making war on us. Germany has made this war not openly, bravely, humanely, but secretly, treacherously and persistently. She has sought to create race discord, to corrupt and vilify politicians and officeholders, to create separate German communities within our borders. She has poisoned the minds of children in our schools in an endeavor to make traitors of them instead of have them grow up into loyal American citizens. She has invaded the sacredness of the pulpit itself in an endeavor to control our people through the very leaders of morality to whom they are accustomed to look for guidance.

These may be startling assertions, but they are all true, as you shall see from the documents of the Germans themselves. We all knew that it was a German fleet which stripped for action when Dewey sailed into Manila bay. We all knew it was the German who sought to bring about a European alliance against us when we were engaged in the war with Spain. But we realized, however, that all these years Germany has been busy within our own borders, through educators, teachers and preachers, seeking to break down our national unity, so that when the time came it would be easy to defeat the United States in foreign warfare, to set at naught our cherished Monroe doctrine, and to seize the Western hemisphere, any part that the land grabbing rulers of the German empire might desire.

The climax of Germany's underhanded war on the United States came in 1913, more than a year before the outbreak of hostilities in Europe. This was the enactment of what is known as the Delbruck law, which provides that if an emigrant from Germany who is about to be naturalized makes application to a German consul he may retain his German citizenship even after he has become a citizen of his adopted country.

In plain words, this law, and the application of it, mean just this:

A German goes into court in this country and solemnly foreswears allegiance to the kaiser and pledges his word—the temptation was to "of honor"—that he will become a loyal citizen of the United States. Then he slips around to the German consul and says:

"You know I didn't mean that at all. Those Americans are easy marks and they fell for that stuff right. But you just put me down on your list as a good, loyal German, and if the time ever comes when I can prove it you can count on me."

So the German consul puts his name down in the little card index of which the Germans are so fond, and the man,—this creature who swears allegiance to the country which has given him an opportunity to make a real living and to become somebody in the world, and at the same time swears secretly to be true to Germany—is turned loose to work his will, while Americans go carelessly about their business and refuse to see the danger in the arrangement.

Long before the passage of the Delbruck law, there was formed the "Verein fur das Deutschtum im Ausland," the Union for Germanism in Foreign Lands. This organization, officially fostered in Germany, issued a quarterly magazine, which, in its very first issue, outlined its aims as follows:

"The purpose of this union is the preservation and promotion of Germanism of over 30,000,000 people of German blood dwelling outside the German empire." All it aims to do, you see, is to keep Germans who come to this country from becoming Americans.

Away back in 1890 the Alldeutsche Verband, or the Pan-German league, was formed. It now consists of 600 chapters of which two now are—or at least were immediately before the war—in the United States, one in New York and one in San Francisco. To quote from the Alldeutsche Blatter, official publication, "the Pan-German league is founded for promoting German National interests, both in Germany and in foreign lands."

A few thinking Americans have all the time what was coming must come. But America, as a whole, went along in that carelessness and indifference with which it treats things unpleasant, and allowed the German war on our most sacred institutions to continue unchecked.

So Germany stands today, with her foot on prostrate Belgium and the other on the neck of poor deluded Russia; with a bayonet planted in the heart of Serbia, and the point of the sword at the throat of Roumania, while it looks out over the United States of Bulgaria and Turkey in Asia and the Orient. And as it does thus, it cries to its foes on the western front:

"Kamerad! Why go on with the killing? Lets have a peace by negotiation?" and, under its breath, "I've got all I want for the present."

Can we talk of any peace with such a Germany is absolutely discredited? Shall we negotiate a peace that will allow all these German preparations for world domination to go on until the time is ripe for Germany to complete its conquests?

Americans Break Up New German Counter Attack and Drive Own Line Forward Nearly Half Mile

By LOWELL MELLETT,
United Press Staff Correspondent.

With the American Armies in France, June 8, (4 p. m.)—American marines and adjoining units again drove forward northwest of Chateau-Thierry today. German counter attacks were blocked by the American advance.

Artillery fire, which has been incessant along Belleau wood throughout the night, increased violently about 4 a. m. At that moment the right wing of the marines attacked in the south part of the wood, where the Germans had retained a foothold. The success of this attack has not been fully reported, although numerous prisoners have been sent back.

Indications are that the Americans eliminated the enemy north of the sunken road between Torcy and Belleau (a front of about a mile).

At 12:30 the enemy attempted to advance. Their infantry was supported by artillery and machine guns and their attack was preceded by a barrage of gas shells and clouds of poisonous smoke.

The marines donned their gas masks and stopped them, 400 yards from the trenches with artillery and rifle fire.

At the same time the boches attacked the adjoining unit, losing 100 men and suffering a complete repulse. The American loss was inconsequential less than an hour later the Germans attacked the marines, who are holding Bourgeoches (two miles southeast of the previous attack against the marines.) The marines, who had been strengthened during the night repulsed the enemy with sanguinary losses.

Earlier in the night the Americans attacked at the right of Torcy, advancing half a kilometer and holding their gain. The Americans found the ground covered with unburied Germans, as well as many new graves marked by German helmets. Here the Germans had dug in, but were ousted.

There are evidences that the German elements are again receiving fresh reinforcements, in an effort to hold the Americans.

Using New Gas.

The checkmated Germans today produced a new weapon intended to discomfit the fighting marines. This weapon consists of poisonous smoke clouds. They differ from the usual gas clouds in that they come over in thick black waves. The only effect which can be observed thus far is a nausea though the enemy is making a practice of mixing gas shells with the smoke clouds, so as to necessitate the use of gas masks.

Notwithstanding the price willingly paid by the marines to achieve a success which is now recognized as much more than local, the boches haven't seen the last of America's favorite fighters by any means.

The spirit in which the Germans are taking the American interference with their plans is indicated by the arrival of new troops in their lines and the steady increase of their artillery fire. Further hard fighting is expected momentarily.

A unique feature of the present and dramatic phase of the world war, is that war correspondents are able to cover the battle from Paris. Sometimes they motor out in the morning and return in the afternoon, arriving in the city two hours after they leave the actual front.

Parish has been made the field censor's headquarters temporarily, as a consequence.

The fact incidentally shows the reality of the menace that is hanging over Paris.

AMERICAN BLOWS INTENDED TO FLANK HUNS ON MARNE

BY J. W. T. MASON.
United Press War Expert.

New York, June 10.—Continuation of the American assault northwest of Chateau Thierry can be expected if General Foch wishes to persist in his efforts to show the Germans back from the Marne and re-establish the availability of the Marne communications.

The immediate purpose of the brilliant exploits of the American marines in the vicinity of Torcy is to swing the German front so far backward as to pinch the Germans out of Chateau Thierry. Outflanking operations of this character present the only practical means of expelling the Germans from the Marne.

The present German position along the Marne cannot be assaulted by frontal attack except at a cost of very heavy casualties. The allies would have to cross the Marne in the face of concentrated machine gun fire, which could not fail to exact a costly toll. It is not a part of General Foch's strategy to duplicate Von Hindenburg's policy of brutal slaughter. For this reason a frontal attack across the Marne is not to be expected.

The two flanks of the German Marne salient remain open to far more advantageous assaults. It is along the western flank that the Americans are now operating. This is the better suited because it is in direct touch with a perfect system of communications. The Americans have now moved their line to within four miles of the main highway connecting Chateau Thierry with Soissons. The cutting of this road by American marines would seriously interfere with movement of German supplies into Chateau Thierry and would begin to threaten the whole system of communication with the German Marne front. The only important railway running through the German lines to the Marne is less than a mile east of the Chateau Thierry-Soissons road. Its capture by the Americans would compel evacuation of Chateau Thierry unless Von Hindenburg is prepared to run the grave risk of the capture of the town's entire garrison.

Von Hindenburg has undoubtedly began to throw heavy reinforcements into the sector under American fire. Any further American fighting in that area must be against increasing odds. The abandonment of the Marne front by Von Hindenburg would cause great depression in Germany and the kaiser's general staff will do all it can to hold fast for the time being.

MAY HIT AMERICANS TO CUT OFF VERDUN

By Associated Press.

With the American Army in France, Friday, June 7.—Reports of recent heavy German train movements from the direction of Metz toward the St. Mihiel salient have aroused discussion in the American expeditionary forces as to whether the enemy is planning an assault in the Woevre.

From a tactical point of view the neighborhood of St. Mihiel, with its sharp salient, offers a logical place for a German attack. A drive through St. Mihiel to the southwest, it is considered, might have a triple objective—the menacing of Bar Le Duc, the outflanking of Verdun from the rear and the elimination of the salient, which has its apex at Verdun.

For the moment at least, perhaps permanently, the allies have stopped the enemy at the Marne. Many engagements of a tactical nature may be expected, even if the Germans decide it is useless to continue their efforts along the Marne and elect to hit the allied line at other places.

The position of the railways and the formation of the terrain northwest and north of Bar Le Duc offer the Germans an opportunity.

Of course what the future holds for the American forces around St. Mihiel is not known, but the salient there is being discussed as a possibility not to be lost sight of.

Another place which is likely to see more fighting is the sector around Montdidier, where American troops recently captured Cantigny. Another important point at which American troops are stationed is the territory around Chateau Thierry. It may be considered certain that whatever the future holds, the American forces undoubtedly will participate in some hard fighting.

M'ADOO TO PASS ON RAIL DAMAGE CLAIMS

Government Has Adopted Policy Against Litigation Says the Director-General's Order.

Director General McAdoo will be the final judge on damage suits against railroads in the future, an order received in Sioux City by railroad attorneys today from the United States railroad administration, says. Suits for damages may be conducted as previously, the order states, but where damages are awarded against common carriers, the director general must pass on their merits before payment is made.

The order announces that the government has adopted a policy against litigation in damage suits and in favor of considering injury cases on their merits, eliminating heavy prosecution costs and attorney fees.

Another order, issued by Director General McAdoo, provides that railroads may prevent trial of a suit while under federal control if the suit is instituted at a point distant from the cause of the injury or damage.

WILL HOLD SCHOOL FOR 2,000 ARMY ENGINEERS

Washington, D. C., June 8.—To meet an immediate need for engineers, the war department announced last night that 2,000 professional men were wanted. They will be selected by a special board of examination, commissioned as first lieutenants and captains, sent to camps in Virginia, and held on officers' pay while going through a short training course.

Qualified men between 32 and 42 years of age are invited to apply now and await orders to appear before the examining board in one of the 33 cities of the United States it will visit shortly. No man of draft age will be considered.

ALLEGED SPIES AND ENEMIES ARE SEIZED

Claimed Revelations Will Add Sensational Chapter to History of War.

By United Press.

With the American Armies in France, June 8.—The circumstances of the wounding of Floyd Gibbons, correspondent of the Chicago Tribune, were related today by one of the officers who accompanied him.

They were on their way to visit an American machine gun emplacement Thursday evening. As they were crossing a small open space in Bussiares wood, a hidden boche machine gun opened fire. Gibbons and the officers dropped in the grass and lay quietly for a while.

Presently, some decided to jump up and run. This apparently included Gibbons and one of the officers. Five minutes later they heard Gibbons say: "I believe I'm hit." They asked him where and he replied "In the eye."

They decided to lie quietly in the grass until dark. When they crawled out Gibbons was helped to an ambulance in which he was taken to a Paris hospital.

Gibbons lost the sight of one eye. He also has a slight wound in the arm.

AMERICA REFUSES TO RELEASE VON RINTELEN

Offer to Exchange Paul London For Famous Hun Spy Turned Down.

Washington, D. C., June 8.—The state department has refused Germany's demands for the release of Capt. Franz von Rintelen in exchange for Siegried Paul London, a citizen of the United States, under arrest in Germany as a spy.

Germany proposed the exchange of London and Rintelen through the Swiss government and threatened reprisals if the United States refused to make the exchange.

The state department has tersely reminded Germany that if it contemplates reprisals on Americans in Germany for Rintelen's confinement, "it would be wise for the German government to consider that if it acts on that principle it will inevitably be understood to invite similar reciprocal action on the part of the United States with respect to the great number of German subjects in this country."

Correspondence with the German government made public by the state department shows London was condemned to death at Warsaw in 1917, but commuted to 10 years' imprisonment. His wife, an American citizen, was Mary Leonhard. It appears that London's service was with the Russian army.

BRITISH PRISONERS DIE UNDER TORTURE

London, June 8.—(British Admiralty per Wireless Press).—The slow murder of 40 British prisoners sent by the Germans to work under fire on the Russian front is related by a member of the royal naval division who has just reached England after escaping from Germany.

It had been decided, he says, that out of a party of 500 British prisoners, 36 should die in consequence of an allegation that 36 German prisoners had been murdered by the British sentries. The men were formed into groups of three and the misdeed of any individual was visited upon all three men in the group.

They were taken from working parties at the end of the day, made to mount on a block and then tied to a pole. The block afterwards was kicked away leaving the men suspended with their feet a little off the ground. In this position they were kept for two and a half hours each night for 14 nights in intense cold. Forty men died under this treatment.

BENJAMIN CHAPIN, LONG NOTED AS ACTOR, DIES

New York, June 8.—Benjamin Chapin, known to thousands of playgoers for his portrayals of Abraham Lincoln in vaudeville, on the legitimate stage, and in motion pictures, is dead at the Loomie sanatorium at Liberty, N. Y., in his 43rd year. He first appeared in a Lincoln portrayal in vaudeville with a sketch called 'A Day With Abraham Lincoln." Not long before his death he was working on an elaborate series of Lincoln sketches, which were to be produced under the direction of the Famous Players-Lasky company.

Mr. Chapin bore a striking resemblance to President Lincoln, and his stage representation was almost perfect. He made an intimate study of the life of Lincoln and delivered lectures on the Chautauqua circuits.

TO CONTINUE WORK ON ALASKAN RAILWAY

Washington, June 8.—Continuation of the work on the Alaskan railway was virtually assured today when a subcommittee of the House appropriations committee recommended additional funds. The appropriation would enable the present force of approximately 3,000 workmen to continue at work.

SHIP TWICE ELUDES SUBS ON ONE TRIP

Newport, R. I., June 8.—Captain Parker of the steamer Westerner declared today his ship was attacked by a submarine 100 miles off Nantucket shoals Thursday. Naval patrol boats appeared and the U-boat vanished. In mid ocean, Parker said another submarine chased him but he was too fast for it.

U-BOATS SIGHTED OFF MAINE AND FLORIDA; ONE REPORTED SUNK

By Associated Press.

An Atlantic Port, June 10.—Unconfirmed reports circulated in shipping circles here today were that a German U-boat either had been captured or sunk off the Virginia coast yesterday by a U. S. destroyer. A destroyer which has been patrolling the coast in this vicinity returned to port today.

By United Press.

Biddeford, Me., June 10.—The commander of the lightship seven miles off Biddeford Pool, today reported a German submarine near his vessel. Several members of the lightship's crew saw the U-boat. The lightship has been ordered to put into Portland, Me.

Jacksonville, Fla., June 10.—Eenemy submarines are operating off the east coast of Florida, according to reports received here today.

The captain of a passenger steamer who sought safety in a harbor near here last night, declares that he sighted a periscope some miles off Mayport, Fla.

Fearing attack from hostile craft, lights in Mayport were dimmed last night and all shipping ordered into the St. Johns river.

Coastwise craft in this vicinity have been ordered under heavy convoy.

FOOD SHIP EVADES SUB.

An Atlantic Port, June 10—An American steamer loaded with foodstuffs put back to port here today and reported she had been chased by a submarine. The ship's captain was said to have requested the naval authorities to arm his vessel that he might proceed again.

The captain is said to have told naval officers that the submarine was sighted off the Virginia Capes. Before torpedoes could be dispatched with any accuracy of aim, the steamship turned towards this port, leaving the submarine behind.

Washington, June 10.—Plans of the navy department for constant vigilance in American waters against further depredations by the German submarines were believed today to have been set in motion. Putting into effect of the home campaign, known to have been formulated some time ago, has only been hastened by the visit of raiding U-boats to the Atlantic coast, it was intimated, and the present efforts but a part of a long contemplated program.

Future visits from the German raiders may be expected, if was said, and Atlantic coast waters must not henceforth be considered as submarine proof. The navy department would not venture a prediction today as to whether the craft which preyed upon American coastwise shipping early in the week might still be lurking in waters on this side of the Atlantic. It was said that the vigilance of patrols in nowise had been lessened nor would it be decreased even after it was safely assumed that the submarines had returned to their home ports.

The latest dispatch made public by the navy department concerning the raiders was the announcement last night of the sinking late Wednesday of the Norwegian steamer Vinland of 1,193 tons, 65 miles off the Virginia capes. The crew of the Vinland was landed safely at Cape May, N. J., yesterday. The sinking of the Vinland followed that of the British steamer Harpathian by nine hours and occurred 25 miles nearer the Virginia coast. Bombs were used in the attack on the Vinland.

U. S. ENSIGN INTERNED.

The Hague, June 8.—An American naval officer, Ensign Eaton, of Connecticut, has been interned here. He was among other officers who descended on Dutch territorial waters during a recent seaplane flight off Terschelling. He was unhurt, but his machine was damaged. Ensign Eaton's parents live in Massachusetts.

LLOYD GEORGE PAYS TRIBUTE TO TROOPS

"Will Be Sorry World" If the Americans Do Not Win Premier Declares.

London, June 10.—"One of the most encouraging things is the superb valor and trained skill with which the Americans have participated in the struggle and defeated the foe", declared Premier George in speaking at a dinner of the Printers' Pension association last night.

"It is most encouraging because they are coming steadily in a great flow. We are depending upon them. "When in France recently I met a statesman who had just returned from the front. He said he was full of admiration for the Americans and that their fighting was most encouraging.

"We are passing through anxious times and the crisis is not passed, but with a stout heart we'll pull through".

Emphasizing the moral issue of the struggle, the premier said:

"If the allies do not succeed it will a sorry world to live in. The fate of the world, the destinies of men, the lives of future generations, will be fashioned by the failure or triumph of our cause".

SMOOT BALKS ON M'ADOO TAX BILL

Thinks Loans to Allies Should Not Be Raised By Taxation —Would Cut Bill By Fourth.

Congress is inclined to balk at Secretary of the Treasury McAdoo demand for $8,000,000,000 in war taxes. This sum, double the present revenue, is higher by $2,000,000,000 than is necessary, some members declare. Secretary McAdoo has included in his estimate of $24,000,000,000 for the year's expenditures about $6,000,000,000 for loans to the allies. Senator Smoot, Senate finance expert said today:

"There loans should not be figured in establishing the sum to be raised by taxation on the basis of McAdoo's one-third and two-thirds pond plan. The allied loans are reimbursable in full to the United States. Therefore if they are left out as they should be, the total tax needed would be $6,000,000,000 instead of $8,000,000,000. This would require the raising of an additional $2,000,000,000—something fairly easy to accomplish without putting a drain on anybody but the war profiteer, who ought to bear it."

McAdoo is to be quizzed on the point raised by Smoot, before either the ways and means committee or the Senate finance committee accepts his figures as final.

The general belief is that if McAdoo can get along with whatever additional taxes a stiff increase in profits and income levies will bring, there will be no difficulty in getting the bill through quickly. But if it becomes necessary to broaden the field of taxation and include new articles, a long fight is certain.

New Periodical Tax.

Adoption of a system of taxing periodicals on the basis of circulation and an additional tax on all advertising based on the size of a page was a substitute for the postal zone system as advocated today by Representative Albert Johnson, of Washington, before the House ways and means committee. He said his plan would provide a method by which periodicals would pay the cost of handling second class postal matter.

Chairman Kitchin, explaining the zone system, said its operation, which will become effective July 1, would increase the cost of distribution of one New York newspaper $125,000 a year. Mr. Johnson said he believed there should be a tax on all advertising, including bill boards and street car displays.

HUNS MUST GO BACK LABOR LEADER SAYS

St. Paul, Minn., June 10.—"Back, back, you Huns, from the country where you have dared to overrun the homes of democratic and peace loving people. Back into your own country, learn the meaning of respect for your fellow men, and then we will be able to talk peace with you, and, not until then."

This was the expression of Samuel Gompers, president of the American Federation of Labor, here for the annual federation convention, when told that Germany might launch another peace drive.

RECEIVES WORD HIS SON IS WOUNDED

Goldendale, Cal., June 10.—Professor W. W. Campbell of Lick Observatory at Mount Hamilton, Cal., who is here today to study the phenomena of today's solar eclipse received a cablegram from France today stating that his son, Lieut. Douglas Campbell, an American aviator, and the first American 'ace' was slightly wounded.

Washington, D. C., June 8.—That Food Administrator Hoover is planning to sail for Europe soon was confirmed in official quarters today. Hoover's trip will be one of inspection to take an invoice of the allied food supplies and needs for the coming year.

PUBLIC UTILITIES CREDIT AND SECURITIES NOT GOOD

The directors of the War Finance Corporation have under consideration applications from many public service corporations doing business in various sections of the country, for loans aggregating a large amount.

The directors of the War Finance Corporation do not feel that they have any authority under the law to make loans except upon adequate security as required by the Act, and they are convinced that the inability of a utility company to earn a sum sufficient to pay its fixed charges, taxes, maintenance and repairs, is conclusive evidence of the inadequacy of its own obligations as security. The directors of the Corporation feel that the localities served by the various public utilities enterprises, should not expect the War Finance Corporation to make advances to any utility company whose statement shows that it is in actual need of increased revenue. It is a matter for the local authorities to determine whether or not an increase in rates, sufficient to maintain the enterprise as a going concern, should be granted. It is urged, therefore, that the proper authorities give prompt consideration to applications made by public utilities for permission to increase rates, in order that the directors of the War Finance Corporation may know that applications made by public service corporations, whether or not they will be able to give adequate service."—Adv. 1 w.

CROPS LOOKING FINE

We were out through the country last Friday afternoon and took special notice of the crops. Everywhere the crops are several weeks ahead of what they were last year. There is an old saying, "Corn knee high the 4th of July." Well, we saw some corn knee high and it was only the 14th of June. Many fields we saw the oats were heading out in fine shape. The recent rains have done wonders for the crops and the prospects look good at present. A good crop this year will be a big factor in bringing the war to an end.

DOC MIXES WITH A HAND CAR

One morning last week Doc Zinn cranked up his car for an early call which led him out across the track. He did not observe a speeding hand car which is motor driven, has wind shield and is otherwise camouflaged to appear like a car. They collided at the crossing and Doc got a twisted wheel in the deal and the hand car escaped uninjured. Well, since that time we have noticed the trains are late—which is where we begin the story—. The trains being late every day aroused our curiosity, so we investigated. We went to the scene of the collision and found that where Doc had hit the hand car was a great bend in the track. He had hit the car so hard and it had maintained such a firm hold on life and the rails that the impact caused the track to give, which made a big curve in the line. Well, it takes the train longer to get here now because they have to go around that extra curve, making them late each day. They will have to change their schedule a little in order to be on time.

IMPORTANT NOTICE!

PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES PROCLAIMS FRIDAY JUNE 28, 1918, as NATIONAL WAR SAVINGS DAY

GOVERNORS AND MAYORS MAKE SIMILAR PROCLAMATIONS

MEETINGS WILL BE HELD IN EVERY COMMUNITY TO SECURE SUBSCRIPTIONS FOR WAR SAVINGS STAMPS

Pursuant to the proclamations of the President of the United States and the Governor of this State, I, War Savings Director for the State of Iowa, acting under the authority of the United States Treasury Department, have called all tax-payers and wage-earners to meet on Friday, June 28th, to give their subscriptions for War Savings Stamps. In rural communities and the smaller towns and cities, meetings will be held in the school houses at 2 p. m.

The school officers will conduct the meeting in each school house, keeping a record of the proceedings and reporting the names of all persons present and the amount of War Savings Stamps subscribed for by them. The names of absent persons, and of those who refuse or neglect to subscribe, with their reasons for so doing, will also be reported.

War Savings Stamps (which are United States Government Bonds the same as Liberty Bonds) can be paid for during any month in the year 1918, but it is intended that subscriptions will be signed for them on June 28.

The price of each War Savings Stamp depends upon the month during which it is bought. During June each Stamp will cost $4.17. In July each Stamp will cost $4.18, and so on, one cent more each month during 1918. On January 1, 1923, the Government of the United States will redeem all War Savings Stamps at $5.00 each, no matter during which month in 1918 they were bought. They cost less during the early months in 1918 than during the later months because the person who buys earlier has loaned his money to the Government for a longer time than if he should buy later.

By way of illustration, note the following table:

COST OF WAR SAVINGS STAMPS
DURING JUNE, JULY AND AUGUST, 1918

	Cost in June	Cost in July	Cost in August	And Are Worth on Jan. 1, 1923
1 Stamp.....	$4.17	$4.18	$4.19	$5.00
20 Stamps.....	83.40	83.60	83.80	100.00
50 Stamps.....	208.50	209.00	209.50	250.00
100 Stamps.....	417.00	418.00	419.00	500.00
200 Stamps.....	834.00	836.00	838.00	1,000.00

The law provides that no person can hold in his own name War Savings Stamps exceeding $1,000 maturity value. War Savings Stamps, however, may be purchased for other members of the family, including minor children.

The money invested in War Savings Stamps is not a gift, or a donation, but is a loan to the Government. It will all be paid back with 4 per cent compound interest. If, because of some serious financial reverses, or calamity, it should be necessary to get your money before January 1, 1923, you may do so by giving ten days' notice to any Money Order postmaster, in which case you can get what you paid for the Stamps, with interest to date of payment. The Stamps are free from all State and local taxes; when registered at the post office they are insured against loss; they are backed by all the property in the United States; they cannot fall in value below the price you pay; they are as convenient and as well paying an investment as has ever been offered by our Government.

A definite quota of War Savings Stamps has been assigned each school district and community, which will be announced at each meeting on June 28th. The Government of the United States expects all the citizens of every school district and county to subscribe for its quota and to pledge themselves to save and economize to help win the war.

It is to be hoped that the subscriptions taken at the meetings in your county will show you and your neighbors to be loyal Americans to whom our Government, in this hour of need, does not call in vain.

Signed, HOMER A. MILLER,

Iowa War Savings Director, appointed and acting under the authority of the Secretary of the United States Treasury.

Manager Parsons of the Idle Hour has booked a very good picture and one that every one should see. Civilization will be shown one day only at the Idle Hour, afernoon at 2:30 and evening at 8:15.

Civilization is one of the greatest moving pictures that has ever been thrown on the screen. It is far greater than the "Birth of a Nation' The picture throughout has to do with the present European war, showing armies in action, tanks, big guns machine guns, hand to hand bayonet fighting--in fact every mode of fighting and fighting machines in the present war. It shows a submarine attacking and torpedoing a passenger ship, the sinking of it and the drowning of wo menand children. If you see this picture you will have a much clearer idea of how the present war is carried on in Europe.

Ye Editor has had the privilege of viewing this picture two times; the first time when it was shown on the first run, and then about a year later and we are going to see it again at the Idle Hour on Saturday, June 22. It is a picture worth going miles to see and it is worth seeing again.

ENGLISH M. E. CHURCH NOTES

J. M. Howdeshell, Pastor

As vast armies of human beings are being hurried into eternity, as the smoke rises from a thousand towns and villages fallen away into white ashes; as cathedrals and palaces crumble under the crash of shells; as the rich and affluent of today become paupers and beggars of tomorrow; as the things which promised to abide through the centuries vanish into smoke; the troubled souls of men turn to the eternal Christ, and realize as never before, that the only things truly worth while are the things that abide, the things eternal, the things that can last while the immoral soul lives, hungers and cries ou for companionship, and peace of an abiding Comforter. The Comforter which is the Holy Ghost, is promised to every truly regenerated person. He comes to those only who have accepted Jesus Christ as their personal Saviour. A sinner can only seek pardon of his sins, but after he has received that, and has a definite witness of the Spirit of God to his conversion, he may present his body a living sacrifice and receive the Comfroter as his sanctifier. Holiness is a definite experience to the regenerated only.

BAND NOW ORGANIZED

Last week Wednesday the band boys got together for a rehearsal. They have hired the services of Prof. J. W. Jeffers, a talented instructor and well known band conductor. All of the band members were present and showed a good deal of enthusiasm over the prospects of having one of the best bands in northern Iowa this season. The material is good for a band but they had lacked a first class cornet lead, which Prof. Jeffers fills the gap. It will take a little financial boost from each of the business men and citizens of the community, to provide funds for the band as they have hired the leader and also require new music from time to time. The band is not an experiment—they have long since passed that stage—but they represent as good a bunch of musicians you can find in any non professional band in the country. Get together, people, help the band and they will stick by you. They are willing to donate their time and instruments, aren't you willing to donate a little money toward them for your own benefit? Think it over.

But Why?

If a man came to me and asked whether I wanted a hydromerapod, I should naturally say no.—London Truth.

A married man may not know much about a furnace, but he does know that it is something that requires his immediate attention the moment he has comfortably settled himself to read a book.

"STIRRED UP THE ANIMALS"

Kokomo Youngster, Monkey and Auto Horn Raise Bedlam in a Petoskey (Mich.) Park.

Haynes Starbuck, five-year-old son of A. E. Starbuck, of Kokomo, literally "stirred up the animals" in the city park at Petoskey, Mich., recently, relates the Indianapolis News. The senior Starbuck is a member of America's hay-fever brigade, and spends the "season" at Harbor Springs with his family.

On one of their drives the Starbuck family and their guests visited the Petoskey park, which has a small zoo. While the party was strolling about in the park a young monkey leaped into Mr. Starbuck's car and began throwing rugs and cushions to the ground. Haynes Starbuck came back to the car and found Mr. Monkey sitting on the hood, examining the radiator cap.

The lad climbed into the driver's seat and pressed the button of the electric horn. The monkey cleared 20 feet through the air, landing in a tree. But soon it came back and once more mounted the hood, this time trying to unscrew the radiator cap.

The Starbuck boy let loose a series of blasts on the horn, and this time the monkey did a Wilbur Wright to the head of an elderly woman at the side of the driveway. The woman shrieked, the monkey chattered, the horn cut loose again, and then two eagles awoke in their cage and turned loose freedom's call. All the other birds began screaming, the ducks in a pond near by set up an ear-splitting clatter, while the coyotes yapped loudly. Then, high above all the racket, rose a series of blood-curdling wails and howls from two big wolves.

Old Caverns Destroyed.

The destructive effects of the bombardment by French heavy guns of the ancient and extensive rock caverns in which the German forces on the Aisne have found shelter since 1915, are described in a dispatch from the front. In one case the ground was so upheaved that no sign of the cavern remained. In another the entrance and exit completely disappeared under the bombardment so that efforts of French troops to reach 300 imprisoned Germans were unavailing.

New Coffee Crop.

The financiers and officials of Brazil are considering the possibility that 6,000,000 bags of the new crop of coffee may have to be held, and are devising proper means to handle the situation, so that prices may not fall to a ruinously low point. It seems to have been determined that the surplus should be handled through a system of government warehouses, which would so control the entire crop that large quantities would not be dumped on the market at any one time.

Utilizing Closet Space.

A long towel rack screwed to the underside of the clothes closet shelf makes a very convenient thing on which to hang clothes which have been placed on hangers. This keeps them away from the calcimine on the wall and keeps them always straight in shape without crowding. This method gives greater space to a closet.

The myth of Adam's skull has its origin in the ancient tradition, according to which the first man is buried at Golgotha, beneath the very spot on which later the cross of Christ was erected. It is for this reason that, in the presentations of the crucifixion, painters and sculptors were wont to place a skull at the foot of the cross. The fact that a skull embedded in a natural rock could be seen behind the iron gate of the Church of the Holy Cross at Jerusalem was calculated to give credence to the tradition. It has, however, been discovered that the skull in question was artificial, made of brass and painted over with gray color to give it the appearance of a natural skull.

During the past year two oil shale reserves have been set aside for our navy, one of over 45,000 acres in Colorado; the other of over 86,000 acres in Utah. Investigation by the geographical survey indicates that this land should yield a commercial supply of oil possibly at a price that would make it a competitor of petroleum. The potential resources of this region are estimated at billions of barrels, says Popular Mechanics. Some of the deposits carry from 30 to 50 gallons of oil to the ton. There is also available an extensive supply of nitrogen, which could be recovered as a by-product and used for fertilizer or explosives.

Junker—pronounced yoonk-er is a term applied to a member of the noble Prussian family. As used commonly today, the word indicates a narrow minded and arrogant member of the aristocracy. It acquired its political significance in 1862, when the aristocratic party, under the leadership of Bismarck, came into power, and designated those who desired to hold intact their exclusive social, military and political privileges.

When the war broke out Germany's merchant shipping totalled 5,018,000 tons, of which the British allies, the United States and other powers have taken in one way or another, 2,000,000 tons, and there are quite a number of vessels still lying inactive in neutral ports. This leaves some 2,000,000 tons still under the German flag.

The advantages of smokeless powder besides its virtue of high explosiveness are twofold. It does not create a smoke cloud that betrays the location of the gun or gunners and at the same time the man behind the gun is not confused for a second by a pall of smoke that obscures the range of vision in the direction of the enemy.

MARSHALL COUNTY HIT BY CASUALTIES

Several Men From That Neighborhood Killed at Widely Separated Places.

Marshalltown, Ia., June 15.—Besides the word received yesterday of the death in France of Frank L. Glick, the first Marshalltown boy to lose his life in action during the present war, there was received in press dispatches and through private sources news of the deaths of other soldiers known here or once having lived in this county.

The press dispatch from West Point, Miss., telling of the death in an airplane accident of Lieut. Clark G. Bowen, was of deep interest at LeGrand, where Bowen was born and reared. He was 22 years old and a son of the late George Bowen. The young man's mother, Mrs. Emma Bowen, lives at Lansing, Mich. Bowen was an alumnus of Cornell college, Mt. Vernon. The young aviator's body will be brought to LeGrand for burial.

Several weeks ago there appeared in the overseas casualty list the name of Harry R. Long, of Manchester. Yesterday the family of William Long, of Montour, was notified that the Harry Long reported killed in action May 6, was his son. The young man, it was found did not belong at Manchester, but Montour, and another Long family near Montour first was notified. This family got the word to the William Long home. Long was 29 years old, and enlisted in the infantry here on May 7, 1917.

Lieut Earl H. Neville, of Winona, Minn., whose death in an aviation accident in France was reported a few days ago, was well known here, where, up to the time of his enlistment over a year ago, he made his headquarters here while traveling for the Bay State Milling company, of Winona. He is a widely known democratic leader and the nominee for congress in the Second district against Hull. Major Ely has a brother serving on the staff of General Pershing and another brother who is a major in the regular army. During the Spanish-American war Major Ely served in the navy. The fire not starting satisfactorily, Mr. Cleveland got a large can containing kerosene and started to pour some of the kerosene into the stove. The can was almost empty. The day previous he had it sitting in the sun and it is quite probable that the can was well filled with kerosene gas, a most dangerous explosive. He had barely opened the can and tipped it up over the stove when the explosion occurred.

BIG CONCERNS HELP EMPLOYES BUY COAL

Waterloo Business Men to Advance Money That Purchase May Be Made Now.

Waterloo, Ia., June 15.—The employers of labor in this city have outlined a plan to finance the early coal purchases of all employes. Realizing the impending coal famine in this state will ultimately result in a loss of manpower, the factories and other large institutions have agreed to underwrite the summer coal orders of their employes, and by agreement pay for it out of the summer wages paid. This plan has been generally accepted by the men affected, and the result is that Waterloo is getting ready for the famine in a way to meet it successfully. The factories here are also storing large quantities of fuel to prevent a shut down next winter when neither fuel nor transportation will be available.

FIND FIELD OF CORN STILL UNGATHERED

Atlantic, Ia., June 15.—The Cass county council of defense has encountered what is apparently one of the most flagrant cases of wastefulness found in all Iowa. It has discovered 20 acres of good corn grown last year which no attempt has ever been made to harvest.

The matter was brought to the attention of the council of defense and Chairman M. P. Conway and State Agent W. A. McKee paid a visit to the farm. It belongs to the mother of a young man named Adolph Nau, the latter having the farm in charge. There was originally 40 acres of the corn, but about half of it has been gathered. The remaining 20 acres is of good quality and despite the six months exposure to winter storms and spring rains the grain is said to be in fair condition.

When the members of the council of defense visited the farm young Nau was not at home and the members were unable to get an explanation for the strange condition. Returning to the city, the council of defense notified Nau by mail that he must gather the corn at once and also that he must plant the field to some crop that can be utilized under the present great demand for food for the allies and for the United States armies. It is possible, also that the farmer may be prosecuted by the federal government.

Sioux Falls, S. D., June 15.—Bathers and onlookers at Sherman park were shocked to witness the sudden death of William Hahn, aged 21, a well known young man who was one of their number. Diving from the top of the platform into six feet of water, he struck his head on a stone pillar and broke his neck.

The accident occurred just when the beach was thronged with pleasure seekers. The youth ascended the platform some 15 feet in the air, flipped himself gracefully toward the water and disappeared.

Not over two minutes later Otis Buxton, guard at the beach realized that Hahn had not come up and dived for the body. When he brought it to the surface, Hahn was apparently without breath.

Sonkson is a native of Germany but has been in this country for nine years and has never declared his intention of changing his allegiance from Germany to the United States during that time. He has been employed as a farm hand by several farmers, and at the home of Thomas Kertzner, where he has been working this spring, he several times made the statement that he hoped Germany would lick all her enemies. Kertzner told Sonkson that he would give him a good beating if he ever heard him make remarks again of that character, and Sonkson quit and went to a neighbor's, where he was found by Marshall Eells of the local board, and who took him to Sioux City.

Private Leffingwell was severely wounded in the same action that cost Captain Fleur and other Iowans their lives.

The little tots were given into the custody of Mrs. Pat O Brien 314 East Twenty-fifth street, about the time their father left Des Moines for France.

Neighbors complained that they were not receiving the care at the O Brien home that they should

An investigation by the city police revealed that Mrs. O'Brien was working nights and the children were left with her daughter, Florence Hall, 12 years old.

Neither Mr. nor Mrs. O'Brien could be located and all three of the children were taken to the station, where the Hall girl made accusations of a grave nature against her stepfather.

HAVNER IS STILL ON TRAIL OF WILKERSON

Des Moines, Ia., June 12. -Attorney General H. M. Havner has no intention of permitting J. N. Wilkerson, Red Oak and Montgomery county detective, of Villisca ax murder fame to be admitted to the Iowa bar as a lawyer without first submitting to the supreme court the latter's full history The attorney general made a trip to Red Oak to take depositions from persons who recently signed affidavits vouching for Wilkerson's good character

Wilkerson has made an application for admission to the bar based on his having been admitted in Texas, where he claims to have practiced for one year.

Under the rules in Iowa the attorney general must pass on the qualifications of an applicant of this kind, and Attorney General Havner is raising objections to Wilkerson's admission principally on the ground that the latter's character is not what is expected along that line in a lawyer in Iowa.

The attorney general has until June 15 to make resistance to Wilkerson's showing as to character. Then the latter is given another chance in his own behalf until June 24 or 25, at which time the supreme court will decide.

IOWA STATE NEWS

DRAFT FIGURES ARE CONSIDERABLY DIFFERENT

Des Moines, Ia., June 13.—Provost Marshal General Crowder's figures on the per centages of men in Class 1 in the counties and districts through Iowa are widely at variance. The provost marshal general's office may send out inspectors to this state to make adjustments according to his records.

Just how this comes about Adjutant General Logan and his associates are at a loss to explain. Local boards sent the same figures on the classification of their men to Washington that they sent to the state adjutant general's office, and yet there is but little similarity in Crowder's and Logan's classifications.

For instance, General Crowder names Des Moines district No. 1 and also Polk county as among those which classified less than 15 per cent of their total registrants in Class 1. Logan's figures show that Des Moines district No. 1 classified 33 per cent of its men in Class 1 and Polk county 21. Des Moines district No. 2 is placed among those less than 28.7 per cent, whereas Logan's figures placed it at 36 per cent. District No. 2 in Des Moines is placed as having between 20 per cent and 28.7 per cent, whereas Logan's figures show this district as classifying less than 15 per cent in Class 1. In this instance Logan's figures are lower than those of the provost marshal general. Similar discrepancies prevail all through the state.

Inspectors were sent out from General Logan's office several weeks ago to call on those Iowa boards whose classifications were unusually low or unusually high. They have made their reports and recommendations, but no action has been taken on their recommendations by General Crowder.

It is announced from Washington that there is to be a reclassification throughout the entire country.

Council Bluffs, Ia., June 13.—Across the creek from the home of Lieut. Col. Matt Tinley and in the shadow of the high school, where many of the members of Company L, now in France, assecured their initial schooling, last night occurred a bonfire. The fuel was all of the Hun literature so long in use in the high school and now and forever under the ban of instructive school boards and student bodies. Figures on state railroad commissioners indicate that Webster and Lewis were nominated.

AUSTRIA NOW FACING NEW REBEL MOVE

Internal Dissension Grows More Acute as Hunger Spreads and Political Oppression Continues.

RESTING ON A VOLCANO

Correspondent Pictures Critical Situation In Dual Empire Which May Lead to Disaster Any Hour.

Advices from Austria, received through Rome yesterday, stated that practically all of the dual monarchy has been declared in a state of siege, only a few regions being excepted. The reported conditions which have led up to this significant situation set forth in the words of an Austrian newspaper man, are described in the following dispatch:

BY JOSEPH SHAPLEN,
United Press Staff Correspondent.

Stockholm, June 14.—The growing seriousness of the food and political situation in Austria-Hungary was revealed to me today by an Austrian newspaper man, the staff correspondent of the Vienna Arbiter Zeitung.

"The situation in Austria-Hungary is again very serious," he said. "The food situation is always worse than it is in Germany. The Austrian government under pressure of Januarystrikes gave the workmen many food promises. None of these was fulfilled. They were given expectation of food from Ukraine which, in view of the increasing revolt against the central empires and Kerenskyism, is no more than problematical." Germany is relying so little on this that she has reduced the daily bread ration from 200 to 160 grams (half an ounce).

Food Prices Soar.

The price of flour in Austria is now 14 francs a kilogram (about $1.40 a pound). Butter is 40 francs a kilogram (about $4 a pound) Vienna population is now getting even 35 per cent of its normal rations. The mayor recently demanded that the government act immediately to prevent the most serious consequences.

The political situation is likewise critical, as a result of publication of Emperor Karl's letters. The meeting of the reichsrath (congress) has been postponed indefinitely The movement of the Serbians, Croats and Slovaks for secession from Austria and unification in a single Serb nation is growing rapidly.

Recently there was a severe battle between the Germans and Slovaks at Vindish-Gratz. There are the most serious disturbances at Leibach. The Bohemians are demanding complete independence. The Austrian socialists are talking in strong language, but there is no hope of peace Germany refuses to listen to a democratic peace.

Reichsrath Impotent.

"The reichsrath is strangled with fear because of the demands of the people for strong action against war profiteers, the agrarians landholders and the capitalists, and a fair division of the coming harvest But above all the reichsrath fears its own debate on war, peace and political events and the connection between the letter from the emperor to Prince Sixtus with the retirement of Foreign Minister Czernin.

"It is only with the shadows of reform that the government seeks to conciliate, the starving and suffering population of Bohemia Simultaneously, however, new repressive measures have been introduced in the southern Slav provinces, as a concession to the German nationalists The latter are carrying out the instructions and policy of the pan-Germanists, who demand continuation of the war.

In Clutches of Kaiser.

"Austria is again in the clutches of Germany, due in no small measure to the traitorous attitude of the followers of Philip Scheidemann (leader of the German majority socialists) who refuse to support the revolutionary movement in Austria.

"Likewise, the demagogic recklessness of the bolsheyists who conclude a separate peace at the moment of greatest upheaval in Austria, strengthened Austro-German imperialism and surrendered the democratic elements into the hands of the military camarilla.

"The situation is not bright, but the desperation of the population is so great that the most serious consequences can be expected."

Washington Advised It Is Fig Against the Grain Gamblers.

Washington, D. C., June 14.—According to letters received here from Minnesota, the struggle between the Nonpartisan league and its opponents in the republican primaries of the state has become fierce. Congressman Bo of North Dakota, who has been making speeches in Minnesota and North Dakota and who has reached St. Paul has sent word to Washington that Nonpartisan league candidates in both Minnesota and North Dakota will be by heavy votes and that former Congressman Lindbergh will be nominated for governor next Monday over Governor Burnquist by a huge majority. Baer declares that this is the last stand of the grain gamblers and profiteers in Minnesota and that they are wrongly attempting to point the league as disloyal to hide the real issue.

ERMAN LOSSES OUT OF ALL PROPORTION TO SLIGHT ADVANCE

By Associated Press.

Paris, June 13.—The attack southwest of Soissons on the front tween the Aisne and the Marne has been broken by the violent re- tance of the French, says a Havas correspondent telegraphing from front. The enemy, he says, has made progress, which is abso- ely insignificant, at a price of heavy losses.

German forces which succeeded in crossing the Matz river to the est of the Oise, on the battle front of Noyon, held their positions ere for but a brief period. French troops, counter attacking the emy, have hurled him back to the north bank of the river and ecked his advance toward Compiegne.

The news from the scene of the tremendous struggle, as told in fficial statements, shows that on the field west of the Oise the Ger ans have come to a halt for the present at least

Lines Are Under Fire.

The enemy has not renewed his at- cks on the line from Courcelles to ntheuil, where on Tuesday a brilliant unter attack of the French swept the vaders back and reestablished the ench lines on the plateau overlooking e center of the German position. This sition is most embarrassing to the rmans, for it places many of their ost important lines of communication der the direct fire of the French ar- llery.

Farther east the Germans similarly ve not continued their advance ward the Aronde river.

The crossing of the Matz river by e Germans Tuesday night constituted serious threat to Compiegne. It also nded to weaken the French position the east side of the Oise river. The ench success in driving the enemy ck across the Matz, therefore, is eering news for the allies. The ench are now strongly posted on the uth bank of the Matz.

French Straighten Line.

East of the Oise the French have thdrawn their lines south of the rscamp and Carlepont forests, but e protecting the Laigue forest along line which is very strong. This ange in the line was expected since e Germans occupied Ribecourt, on e west bank of the Oise.

The attack on the front southwest of issons is making ground, but the ogress is apparently too slow for the rmans to realize their plan to cut in hind Compiegne forest and outflank e French positions farther north. In e fighting so far the Germans have ade less than a mile along a front bout three miles in extent from south Ambleny to St. Pierre-Aigle.

In the Flanders salient the British d French have been active. The for- r have improved their positions near erria, on the western angle of the ttle line there, while the French have tended their lines near Ypres.

Paris, June 14.—French troops last ght struck a heavy blow against the rman forces which have been ad- ncing on the eastern wing of the w front of attack. The war office nounced today that the French had rled back the enemy to the north nk of the Matz river.

ADVANTAGE WITH FRENCH.

Paris, June 14.—There was plenty of fighting yesterday, but it did not affect the general situation. As the Germans are fighting against time, this result is a distinct gain to the defense.

The Germans, it is true, made slight progress on their left toward Com- piegne, from which, at Mellecoq, they are now only five miles away, but so did the French, on the other wing in the region of Mery.

As the nature of the ground around Mery provides the French with excel- lent gun positions behind hills, from which they can pound at short range the road by which all supplies must pass to the German center in the thrust toward Compiegne, the French can claim an advantage in the day's opera- tions, for they also stopped the Ger- man efforts south of the Aisne against the forest east of Villers-Cotterets.

FRENCH HOLD VALIANTLY.

By Associated Press.

With the French Army in France, Wednesday Night, June 13.—The de- fense of Courcelles on the left wing of the battle front, by the French against attacks repeated day and night from June 9 to June 11, makes a wonderful story of heroism. The village, which is most important owing to its com- manding position, was for 48 hours al- most surrounded by the enemy, but the French held on and when a favorable opportunity sortied and counter at- taked, repulsing the Germans from the vicinity.

The Germans tried every possible ruse as well as force to take the vil- lage. The growing crops on the fertile lands in the vicinity were a source of considerable trouble to the defenders as the Germans could creep through them until they reached the edge of the village. The enemy also covered their helmets with clumps of grass and weeds and crawled slowly forward.

They could not, however, shake the determination of the French to retain possession of the village.

The spirit of the offensive was so high among the allied troops that they continued their advance on the left to- day, despite the fatigues they had un- dergone since the beginning of the week.

BRITISH MAKE GAIN.

London, June 14.—British troops last night advanced their lines a short dis- tance on the Flanders front in the dis- trict southeast of Merris, the war office announced today. The French on this front likewise improved their positions near the Ridge wood. Prisoners were taken in both operations.

DOWN 29 HUN PLANES.

London, June 14.—British airmen as- sisting the French on the western por- tion of the new Oise front, have de- stroyed 29 enemy airplanes since last Sunday, it was officially announced by the war office today. In the same period they have dropped 21 tons of bombs.

GAINED NEARLY TWO MILES.

British Admiralty Per Wireless Press.

London, June 14.—The military cor- respondent of the British wireless ser- vice writes from the front that yes- terday was a day of successes for the allies. In the actual battle area the French by a counter attack between Mery and Antheuil, drove the enemy back nearly two miles on a front of five miles, causing him rather severe losses and capturing 1,000 prisoners.

Just south of Noyon the French evac- uated the salient around Carlepont to rectify their line. They administered a rebuff to the enemy, who attempted to advance, and drove him back to the high ground near the Oise river.

Farther north in the Amiens sector between the Somme and the Ancre rivers the Australians once more ad- vanced their lines at Morlancourt.

DEMAND PEACE NOW.

British Admiralty Per Wireless Press.

London, June 14.—In a recent memo- randum issued by the Austrian Men's Democratic league "the immediate opening of peace negotiations in a neu- tral country" is demanded. Other de- mands voiced in the memorandum are:

"The democratization of the Austrian constitution and immediate considera- tion of the laws proposed by various lesser nationalities in Austria-Hun- gary."

These last demands apparently refer to the unrest among the Czecho-Slov- aks and Jugo-Slavs, who are striving for complete liberation from Austrian rule. The document concludes:

"An early peace can be attained for the benefit of our beloved country."

FOUND—HUMAN BOCHE.

By United Press.

With the Americans West of Montdidier, June 13.—A rare case of a boche being human was revealed last night. One who was taken prisoner saved the life of his American cap- tor.

A lieutenant leading a patrol captured a German and started back to the American lines. The officer was seriously wounded by the explosion of a shell. The boche dressed the American's wounds with his own emergency kit, working in the dim light of No Man's Land, in the midst of shell fire.

The lieutenant then directed the boche to an American post. The German ran to the post and informed officers there of the lieutenant's predicament. The latter will recover.

Hun Propagandists Spread Tales About Wives of Soldiers

Chicago, June 14.—Insidious German propaganda designed to undermine the morale of soldiers by casting suspicion on the conduct of wives left behind has been uncovered here. Last Mon- day a well written letter purporting to come from a soldier whose wife, the letter said, had been lured to marital disloyalty was received by the clerk of the morals court.

It was a dramatic story, well told. It was so well told, in fact, that suspic- ions were aroused and investigation showed no trace of the "Soldier" sup- posed to have written it in the hos- pital where worry over his wife's con- duct had put him.

The letter declared that public sentti- ment must be aroused to deal with men who, taking advantage of the loneliness and often the financial ne- cessities of soldiers' wives lead them astray. The practice, the writer said, was widespread and that so many sol- diers had been betrayed that the mor- ale of much of the army was being un- dermined.

AMERICANS BLOCK TWO HUN THRUSTS

Germans Attack on Three-Mile Front But Fail to Gain— U. S. General Leads French Troops.

BY LOWELL MELLETT.

United Press Staff Correspondent.

With the Americans on the Marne, (4 p. m.) June 14.—The Americans holding the three-mile front between Bouresches and Torchy repulsed two German attacks in their 12th day and night of fighting. They took 50 pris- oners, including a captain, and cap- tured a number of machine guns. The enemy suffered heavy casualties.

There were some American victims, chiefly from the heavy bombardment of Bouresches last night.

The prisoner haul resulted from a company of boches quietly filtering into a ravine to the left of the Belleau wood. The Americans cut them off and after a brief fight the German captain surrendered.

The bombardment of Bouresches in which some eight-inch shells were used was believed to persage an attack in force. But the only fighting that followed was when a company of Ger- mans appeared at the edge of the city early this morning, due to losing their way.

When discovered, the Germans sought to attack. Their pugnacity lasted only a few minutes before the withering fire poured into them by the Americans. They fled, leaving the ground strewn with dead.

Four hundred mounted Germans were sighted south of Eterpilly, (two miles northeast of Bouresches) yesterday evening. An American battery scat- tered them with heavy losses.

There are numerous evidences of the arrival of a fresh German division (120,000 men) opposite this sector. It has not yet been identified.

Much has been made of America's acceptance of the brigading of her troops with the French and British. It is now possible to tell of French troops, in at least one instance, accepting a reverse arrangement.

United States regiments, together with a regiment of French zouaves and French artillery, compose a division commanded by an American general. The latter's staff directs the division's operations.

The division is holding an important sector on the Marne river, which has been comparatively quiet ever since it went into the line.

PREPARE DEFENSE OF COAST CITIES

Washington, D. C., June 14.—That the possibilities of German submarines carrying seaplanes reaching American waters are recognized by the war de- partment became known today when it was disclosed the House appropriations committee, through a subcommittee, is considering estimates submitted by the war department for a large number of powerful anti-aircraft guns of the 4.7- inch type. These will in all probability be provided.

The plan is to establish such guns at points along the Atlantic coast where they might be useful in repelling air raids. They would be placed in important cities along the coast, about harbors, near powder and munition works and the like. One or more such guns would probably be planted where it could protect Wall street and the financial districts of such centers as New York, Philadelphia, Boston and Baltimore.

New types of German submarines are said to be capable of transporting as many as four seaplanes. The war department does not feel inclined to take chances, especially in view of the uncertainty which obtains as to how long Germany intends to try to keep up her submarine raids on the Ameri- can coast.

Planting of anti-aircraft guns at im- portant points is only one of the pre- cautions to be taken. While the sub committee has not passed on the al- lowance asked for a system of coast stations for aerial patrol purposes, it is expected that it will be granted. Protection of Washington and the Chesapeake bay region is one object sought.

FIFTY SOLDIERS KILLED.

El Paso, Tex., June 13.—Fifty Car- ranza soldiers were killed by bandits personally led by Francis o Villa who held up and robbed a train near San- tiago Papasquiero, Durango according to reports received here today. The bandits were said to have carried off with the mountain [illegible] women passengers, mostly girls.

U. S. AIRMAN MISSING.

Paris, June 13.—Lieut. Paul Frank Baer, the American aviator missing since May 23 has not been accounted for as yet. It is not known whether he was killed or made prisoner by the Germans.

San Francisco—Estate of the late Henry Miller, valued at $40,000,000 is to be seized by the government for non- payment of federal income taxes, it was announced by the internal rev- enue collector.

Chicago—Gov. W. L. Harding, of Iowa, said in an address that no man has a right to take a vacation this year. If he does, he is a slacker. A man who plays golf when there is corn to be hoed is not doing his duty by the boys in the trenches, he said.

MUST CUT DOWN ON BEEF CONSUMPTION

Public Asked to Substitute Pork In Various Forms During Summer Season.

Washington, D. C., June 13.—To meet the needs of the American and allied armies and the civilian populations of France, Great Britain and Italy, the American people were asked by the food administration today to place themselves on a limited beef allowance from now until next September 15.

Householders were requested not to "under any circumstances" to buy more than one and one quarter pounds of clear beef weekly, or one and one half pounds, including the bone, for each person in the household.

Hotels and restaurants were asked not to serve boiled beef more than two meals weekly, beef steak more than one meal weekly and roast beef more than one meal weekly.

The demand for beef for our army, the armies of the allies and their civil- ian populations for this summer, said the food administration's announce- ment "are beyond our present supplies. On the other hand, we have enough in- creased supply of pork this summer to permit economical expansion in its use. It, therefore, will be a direct service to our armies and the allies if our people will in some degree substitute fresh pork, bacon, ham and sausage for be products.

AMERICAN BARRAGE STOPS HUN FLIGHT

German Prisoners Admire the Fighting Qualities of the United States Troops.

By Associated Press.

With the American Army in France, Wednesday, June 12.—The excellence of the American army fire was largely responsible for the capture by Ameri- can marines of approximately 400 pris- oners in the fighting which resulted in the clearing out of the Belleau wood, northwesst of Chateau Thierry.

The Germans, who had been told to avoid capture because the Americans would torture them, started to run after the American machine gunners had made the wood untenable, but the ar- tillery barrage was so perfect that the Germans were cut off from escape. Among the prisoners are six officers— a major, a captain and four lieutenants. All were poorly clad and some had pieces of bread tied to their uniforms with strings. The prisoners said they were glad to be captured and several expressed a desire to go to the United States to live after the war.

All of Germany's plans, they added, called for ending the war next fall. The prisoners were told, they said, that among the Americans were many ne- groes.

The scarcity of officers in the Ger- man army is shown by the fact that one of the prisoners, a first sergeant, commanded an entire company. He said this was a common thing now. All the prisoners expressed admiration for the fighting qualities of the Americans.

The barn in which the prisoners were confined today in the rear of the Amer- ican lines held more prisoners of war than the United States has had in one building at any time in more than 50 years. Comparative quiet prevailed along the Marne sector today.

EAU CLAIRE PLANNING MUNICIPAL TROUT BROOKS

Eau Claire, Wis., June 13.—Three years hence local disciples of Isaac Walton will not have to leave the corporate limits of the city to do their trout fishing if the plans of the city council pan out all right—and it is predicted they will.

Running through Putnam park—a beautiful natural park donated to the city by the late H. C. Putnam, and describing a semi-circle around the third ward and within a 15-minute walk of the business center—is Minnie creek, and this stream has been stocked with fingerling trout. In order to give these fingerlings a chance to grow to "life size," the council has drawn up an ordinance prohibiting fishing in this stream for three years.

The creek will be thrown open to fishermen on May 1, 1921, when it is expected the stream will be stocked with speckled beauties, but each fish- erman will be limited to a catch of six, or maybe as high as 10 trout.

Minnie Creek is a mile long and its source is well within the city proper, and so is its mouth, at the Chippewa river. Many Eau Claire people will be able to fish from their back doors when the ban is lifted by the council.

Washington, D. C., June 13.—Sena- tor Johnson, of California, speaking against the Underwood resolution, lim- iting Senate debate, declared that he feared such a move was the "entering wedge" against the democratic prin- ciples of the Senate.

"There is in the popular mind some- thing like contempt for this body to- day," he declared.

American Army Is Prepared to Make New Startling Sacrifice

British Writer Says If Emergency Arises United States Will Concede Far More Than She Did In Brigading Troops With French and British.

London, June 14.—The American army is prepared if necessary to make a greater sacrifice than that of brigad- ing American troops with the French and British declares the correspondent of the Daily Mail with the American forces in France.

After recording constantly and deep- ly expressed regrets among American troops that more trained Americans have not been available to assist the French and the willingness of the Americans to sacrifice themselves if need be, the correspondent says:

"This is the spirt of the whole army. I have already seen how the president with ever readiness, fell in with the al- lied desire to brigade American troops with the French and British. This was a great sacrifice, greater perhaps than most people imagine, but I understand that if events of the next few days and the plans of the allies should so de- mand the United States is prepared for an even greater sacrifice, much more dramatic and startling.

"I cannot give details and the ne- cessity may by good fortune never arise; but whatever happens the allies will always carry a feeling of grati- tude for the magnificent spirit with which the United States is playing her part in the war."

WILL ASK CONGRESS TO RAISE DRAFT AGE

By United Press.

Washington, D. C., June 14.—That the war department will ask changes in the draft law, so as to include all men between the ages of 18 and 45 or 49 years, was the forecast of well informed congressional leaders today.

The new legislation would place the draft on the same basis as that of Britain and facilitate the operation of the inter-allied draft treaties, is ex- pected to be launched in the December "short session".

In the meantime a campaign of edu- cation is to be conducted to inform the country of the need for raising the draft ages.

These reasons include the probable depletion of Class 1 this year and the necessity for going into the deferred classifications unless draft limits are broadened.

"Provost Marshal Crowder has no de- sire to go into deferred classifications" said Representative Kahn of the House military committee today.

Members of the Senate foreign rela- tions committee said today that ratifi- cation of the draft treaty with Great Britain and Canada "would impose a moral obligation on the United States to raise the draft age".

Under an agreement among all the allies it is understood the military ser- vice ages of all of the allied nations are to be made uniform.

Ratifications is the first step in add- ing nearly 700,000 men to the American or allied armies, from the population this country, officials said.

Under the proposed plan, as con- gress leaders understand it, not all the men thus rendered liable for service would be put into the army. Military service, it is stated, would not go be- yond 35 nor under 21, under the present plan, but the listing of men between 18 and 45 would provide first a vast reservoir of young men for training who would be instantly available for military duty as they became 21 and second, a great number of men capable of performing other service upon which the effectiveness of the army depends.

It was stated that the measure would also provide for training those below 21 for a specified period.

Supporters of universal military training today predicted that the bill will form the ground work for a per- manent system of military training.

Under the proposed law, the question of military service for the Irishmen in this country will be settled, since no matter what Great Britain does about conscripting them in their own land, they will be liable to military service here.

AMERICAN ARMY MAY BE SENT TO RUSSIA

BY CARL D. GROAT.

United Press Staff Correspondent.

Washington, D. C., June 14.—The American government is striving hard to make some arrangement whereby aid, even troops, may be sent to Russia under Russian-American leadership.

Russia will not approve any expe- dition under Japanese leadership. The country now looks to the United States as its best friend. The facts reached the United Press today from a reliable source.

The government plans to be able to announce July 4 that 1,000,000 men have left American ports for Europe. Thereafter it will have to out down on the pace set in the May and June record so that supplies can be forward- ed.

This will give the opportunity of aid- ing Russia with other troops. Many difficulties stand in the path, it is ad- mitted but the government leaders are doing their utmost to reach a solution.

The United Press is able to state that the tentative proposal which has received greatest support here shapes up thus:

The enemy troop ships would be used to convey some American troops to Russia. They need not constitute a vast force. Loyal Russians, available allied troops and, Japanese and Chinese troops would compose the balance of this great international expedition. Its purpose would be rescue work. There be a guarantee against territorial ag- grandizement.

The fact that troop shipments to France will slump after the first of July explains apparently Secretary Baker's recent reticence about news- paper predictions concerning the fall and winter troop figures. He warned that events might make it impossible to live up to the newspaper figures. Now it is found the supply question must be given attention.

As soon as supplies are replenished, heavy troop shipments will be re- sumed.

ORDNANCE PLANT IS TO BE ENLARGED

Midvale Steel Company Pre- pares For Greater Production of War Materials.

Washington, D. C., June 14.—The Midvale Steel company, will make an extension on its plant ear Philadelphia under its agreement with the govern- ment, to provide greatly increased fa- cilities for ordnance production. While the war department will make no an- nouncement at this time it was learned today that this is the plan instead of selecting a new site as was done in the case of the United States Steel com- pany ordnance plant at Neville island, near Pittsburg.

The scope of the Midvale extension is not revealed, but it is understood the plant may be an additional plant and will run into hundreds of thousands of dollars and greatly improve ordnance output.

80,000 HARVEST HANDS RECRUITED IN KANSAS

Topeka, Kan., June 13.—Kansas to- day has completed the recruiting of 80,000 harvest workers. Some have begun work. The quota of 80,000 was set weeks ago and was reached by combined efforts of the government and municipal organizations. Thirty thousand volunteers swarmed to labor bureaus throughout the state.

Women workers will be sent to the farm kitchens. The men will be used wherever they can fit in. Their pay will average 45 cents an hour.

Wheat is ripening in central Kansas now and the harvest area will spread rapidly to the north. The Kansas crop is spread over 6,250,000 acres.

IOWA FREIGHT RATE INCREASE SUSPENDED

Certain Iowa freight rates which were to have been effective June 25 with the general freight increase or- dered by Director General McAdoo have been suspended temporarily by order of Mr. McAdoo, until the state has had a hearing on the modifications, J. P. Haynes, commissioner of the Sioux City traffic bureau, announced today, following his return from a conference of traffic men at Des Moines.

A committee representing the state was sent to Washington immediately to protest against the modifications. A resolution passed by the traffic men will support the members in their fight against the new rates.

Objections to the following points are made in the resolution:

The provision for the cancellation of the present Iowa classification and the substitution therefor of the western classification.

The adding of a flat charge of 15 cents a ton to the rates on coal and coke in addition to the general in- creases.

The proposed minimum charge of $15 per car and a minimum charge of 50 cents on shipments less than a carload.

The resolution charges that the pro- visions of the order increasing the freight rates are not based upon the necessity for increases in revenues, but are arbitrary changes in existing traffic conditions over which the federal control of the railroads has no jurisdiction.

RIGID INSPECTION OF SHIP'S PASSENGERS

An Atlantic Port, June 14.—Before they are permitted to land today the 612 passengers on board the Holland American liner Nieuw Amsterdam which arrived here yesterday, will have been subjected to the most thorough search of incoming travelers since America entered the war. British and American inspectors and the comple- ment of customs men, health service physicians and intelligence officers put on board the steamship numbered more than 150 individuals.

C. W. Wiles is having his new garage plastered and cement floors laid in this week.

Mrs. J. Stokesberry entertained about fifty people at the Ladies Aid last Thussday. All report a good time,

Fred Blank is now working at the depot at Garner. He is now out on relief duty and will later be assigned to a station of his own.

Casie Blank is now assisting at the local Rock Island depot, having taken the place vacated by his brother, Fred, who is acting as relief man.

Quite a number of Klemme people autoed over to Garner last Friday evening to see "Draft 258" at the Lyric theatre.

Mr. and Mrs. Tom Mitchel, Miss Bessie Krause and Mr. Clarence Waterman, were Clear Lake visitors Sunday.

Mr. and Mrs. C. M. Gram spent Sunday at the home of Mrs. Gram's brother at Corwith. He has enlisted as a Veterinary and leaves for Denver June 23.

Last evening the band gave the first concert of the season. With a little financial effort of the business men of Klemme, the band will continue the concerts.

The street leading south from the intersection of Main at the First National Bank corner has been graded up and put into better condition the past week. Klemme now has most of the streets in excellent condition.

Rev. Meyer, P. M. Greismer and Lew Lewis were over at Clear Lake fishing one day last week and brought back the best string of fish that has yet been caught by local nimrods this season. They had several large pickerel and other game fish to show.

Three crates of carrier pigeons, probably 250 in number, were received over the Milwaukee Sunday, from Green Bay, Wis. Agent Morton turned them loose Monday morning at 6 o'clock, and with the exception of three or four of them, they started in a direct northeast direction. Three or four of them went south, but it is likely they would get the direction before going far.—Garner Signal.

Tempting Dessert.

Did you know that one delicious way of cooking rice for dessert is to use fruit juice to cook it in, such as you have left over from a can of fruit or stewed fruit, instead of water? Rice cooked in raspberry juice or sirup left from canned or stewed raspberries is delicious and attractive, as it takes up the color as well as the flavor. Served with cream, it makes a dainty dessert. Cook it in the proportions of one tablespoonful of raw rice to one-third or slightly more of a cupful of the juice.

Why We Fight

No. 2

Because Germany's Law Is the Law of the Jungle and Her Doctrine "Might Is Right"

By CLARENCE L. SPEED
Secretary of the War Committee of the Union League Club of Chicago.

We are at war with Germany because Prussia dominates Germany, and from the days of Frederick the Great, Prussia's law has been the law of the jungle, her doctrine "Might is Right" and her policy, in dealing with other nations, one of robbing the weak and terrorising the strong. Germany has grabbed territory and exacted tribute from her neighbors, and finally, her greed becoming greater, has looked out over more distant lands, and has committed herself to a policy of world domination which menaces the continued free existence of every nation which will not submit to her will.

Germany's policy is not an accidental one. It has been carried out with remarkable singleness of purpose from generation to generation of Hohenzollern rule, from the time of the Great Frederick until today. Germany's atrocities are not accidental. They are a deliberate, well thought out part of this Hohenzollern policy, which was to break down the resistance of her opponents, not only by fighting and defeating their armies but by killing, torturing and terrorizing the civil populations.

The German rulers committed themselves to the doctrine of the survival of the fittest. Through generations of teaching they made the German people believe that they, and they alone, were the fit.

We have the words of the German rulers and German warriors and German leaders of thought for all of this. More than that we have the performance of German officers and German armies in conquered lands to prove it.

Let's start with Frederick the Great in presenting the evidence. This monarch, who earned his soubriquet through despoiling his neighbors, rather than through any real qualities of mind which he showed, said, in a letter to his minister, Radziwill:

"If there is anything to be gained by it, we will be honest; if deception is necessary, let us be cheats. One takes what one can, and one is wrong only when obliged to give back."

This philosophy, applied to present conditions, means that Germany was right when she took Belgium, and will be wrong only if she is not able to hold it.

From Frederick the Great to Bismarck is a long jump in the matter of time; but we find the Prussian policy unchanged. Speaking before the military committee of the Prussian Chamber of Deputies in 1862 Bismarck said:

"Not by speeches and resolutions of majorities are the great questions of the time decided, but by iron and blood."

Then, with blood and iron, Prussia went out and despoiled Denmark of territory in 1864, beat and robbed Austria in 1866, and finally, in 1870, brought France to her knees and took her richest provinces.

Here is what the present kaiser told his troops when, in 1900, they were about to depart for China to put down the boxer uprising:

"Use your weapons in such a way that for a thousand years no Chinese shall dare to look upon a German askance. Be as terrible as Attilla's Huns."

Coming on down to the present war we find a German minister accredited to a neutral state far across the sea—one which one would think should be free from the entanglements of world politics—writing home to his government, in a state paper, advising the sinking of two ships from this neutral nation, in such a manner that no trace be left. Dead men, he believed ,tell no tales.

It was Baron Luxburg, minister plenipotentiary to Argentina, who wrote this amazing dispatch on May 19, 1917:

"I beg that the small steamers Oran and Guazo . . . which are nearing Bordeaux . . . be spared if possible, or else sunk without a trace being left."

This telegram was intercepted in the United States and published. It sent a thrill of horror around the world.

Chancellor von Bethmann-Hollweg is a true disciple of Frederick the Great, Bismarck and his royal master. In a public speech on January 31, 1917, he said:

"When the most ruthless methods are calculated to lead us to victory, swift victory, they must be employed."

So they were used, and are being used today. They include sinking of hundreds of neutral ships, the burning of cities, the deliberate devastating of the fair lands of France, the ravishing of women, the enslavement of workmen and the murder of little children.

Horrors such as these are told in detail in "The Prussian System," by F. C. Walcott, who, for a long time, was engaged in behalf of America in trying to get food to the Poles whom the Germans were deliberately starving by the hundreds of thousands so that they might not cumber the land which the Germans intended to occupy.

Knowing all this, can the American people talk of any peace by negotiation? Can they stop this war until this mad dog of nations is freed from the military rulers who teach frightfulness from the cradle, and will only seize a respite now to prepare themselves for further conquests?

WOMEN ARE GOOD WAR COOKS

Through Natural Economy They Reduce Cost of Feeding British Soldiers More Than One-Half.

The first woman cooks in the British army were employed in August, 1915, at a convalescent camp, and six months later the formal recruiting of women for this work was initiated.

Today there are more than 6,000 cooks and waitresses in 200 camps in England alone, writes a correspondent. Women have also taken over the kitchen service in all the Canadian and Australian hospitals, and woman instructors are being employed in the regular army schools of cookery. One woman who enrolled as a cook two years ago and who is only twenty-two years old has risen to the rank of superintendent and is responsible for the whole service in a camp of 22,000 men.

The economy resulting from the employment of woman cooks has been very marked. In one large officers' camp the daily messing charge was reduced within a few weeks from 65 cents a day to 31 cents, and in addition, a fund of $500 was saved for miscellaneous purposes. The rate at this camp is now reduced to 18 cents a day.

Take a Rest in Winter.

According to some medical authorities the summer is not the logical time to take a vacation, a rest during the winter having much greater recuperative value for the year-round worker, says Leslie's Magazine. In their opinion the low temperature eats up bodily fuel, saps vitality and limits all one's powers. Records compiled by business houses, factories and various industries prove that winter is the time most people need a rest. It may be surprising to those who term winter days as "exhilarating" to know that scientifically this is a mistake. The cold forces them to move briskly to keep the blood stirring and generating more heat, and because of this lovers of the winter are often under the impression that this false activity signifies the possession of the maximum of energy.

Worn Blankets.

Lay smoothly upon the thin place a piece of used merino underwear and pin amply and securely. Then begin at the lowest edge and stitch with the sewing machine, row after row successively, a quarter of an inch apart, until the extent of the patch is reached, withdrawing the pins as you proceed. This is quickly done and is a most satisfactory method. Do not work around and around, as the goods will bulge in the middle, and half the design of the patch, that of neatness, will be a failure. Should the selvedge be frayed, turn the merino over it, including it, and stitch as directed. It is not necessary to break the machine thread for each row. Stitch the way of the stripes.

MEDICAL MEN IN THE ARMY

Estimated That the Government Will Require Services of Two Out of Every Nine Physicians.

When Uncle Sam sends his fighting forces to the front he will require the services of 24,000 officers and 120,000 enlisted men for the army medical and sanitary corps. It has been estimated says Popular Science Monthly, that the army will need two out of every nine physicians in the country.

The average number of physicians receiving orders has been about two hundred a day. As fast as accommodations are ready these medical officers are sent to training camps. They go ahead of the troops in order that sanitary preparations may be made for the men.

The medical training camps at Fort Riley, Fort Benjamin Harrison and Fort Oglethorpe take care of 1,000 student officers and 1,800 enlisted men. Besides these each camp has four ambulance companies, four field hospitals and one evacuation company. That colored troops may have their own medical officers there is a training camp for colored medical and sanitary detachments.

CHAPTER NINE. (Continuer.)

"She was away yesterday, wasn't she?"

"Yes, sir, she received a telegram asking her to go to the country to see a relation who was ill. She came back last night."

"I want to speak to her. Send her to me. At once."

"In the study, sir?"

"No, upstairs, in the boudoir next to my bedroom."

This was a small room on the second floor which had once been a lady's boudoir, and he preferred it to his study since the attempt at murder of which he had been the object. He was quicter up there, farther away, and he kept his important papers there. He always carried the key with him: a special key with three grooves to it and an inner spring.

Mazeroux had followed him into the courtyard and was keeping close behind him, apparently unobserved by Perenna, who having so far appeared not to notice it. He now, however, took the sergeant by the arm and led him to the front steps.

"All is going well I was afraid that Florence, suspected something, might not have come back. But she probably doesn't know that I saw her yesterday. She can't escape us now '

They went across the hall and up the stairs to the first floor Mazeroux rubbed his hands

"So you've come to your senses, chief?"

"At any rate I've made up my mind. I will not, do you hear, I will not have Mme Fauville kill herself; and, as there is no other way of preventing that catastrophe, I shall sacrifice Florence."

"Without regret?"

"Without remorse "

"Then you forgive me?"

'I thank you."

And he struck him a clean, powerful blow under the chin. Mazeroux fell without a moan, in a dead faint on the steps of the second flight.

Halfway up the stairs was a dark recess that served as a lumber room where the servants kept their pails and brooms and the soiled household linen. Don Luis carried Mazeroux to it, and, seating him comfortably on the floor, with his back to a housemaid's box, he stuffed his handkerchief into his mouth, gagged him with a towel, and bound his wrists and ankles with two tableclothes. The other ends of these he fastened to a couple of strong nails

As Mazeroux was slowly coming to himself, Don Luis said:

"I think you have all you want. Tablecloth s—napkins—something in your mouth in case you're hungry Eat at your ease. And then take a little nap, and you'll wake up as fresh as paint."

He locked him in and glanced at his watch.

"I have an hour before me. Capital!"

At that moment his intention was to insult Florence, to throw up all her scandalous crimes in her face; and, in this way, to force a written and signed confession from her. Afterward, when Marie Fauville's safety was insured, he would see. Perhaps he would put Florence in his motor and carry her off to some refuge from which, with the girl for a hostage, he would be able to influence the police. Perhaps—— But he did not seek to anticipate events. What he wanted was an immediate, violent explanation.

He ran up to his bedroom on the second floor and dipped his face into cold water. Never had he experienced such a stimulation of his whole being, such an unbridling of his blind instincts.

"It's she" he spluttered. "I hear her! She is at the bottom of the stairs. At last! Oh, the joy of having her in front of me! Face to face! She and I alone!"

He returned to the landing outside the boudoir. He took the key from his pocket. The door opened.

He uttered a great shout: Gaston Sauverand was there! In that locked room Gaston Sauverand was waiting for him, standing with folded arms.

CHAPTER X.

GASTON SAUVERAND EXPLAINS.

Gaston Sauverand!

"Hands up!" he commanded. "Hands up, or I fire!"

Sauverand did not appear to be put out He nodded toward two revolvers which he had laid on a table beyond his reach and said:

"There are my arms I have come here not to fight, but to talk."

"How did you get in?" roared Don Luis, exasperated by this display of calmness. "A false key, I suppose? But how did you get hold of the key? How did you manage it?"

The other did not reply. Don Luis stamped his foot:

"Speak, will you? Speak! If not——"

But Florence ran into the room. She passed him by without his trying to stop her, flung herself upon Gaston Sauverand, and, taking no heed of Perenna's presence, said:

"Why did you come? You promised me that you wouldn't. you swore it to me. Go!"

"Let me be, Florence. I promised only so as to reassure you. Let me be."

"No, I will not!" exclaimed the girl eagerly. "It's madness! I won't have you say a single word. Oh, please, please stop!"

"Let me do things my own way, Florence," he said softly.

She was silent, as though disarmed by the gentleness of his voice; and he whispered more words which Don Luis could not hear and which seemed to convince her.

Perenna had not moved. He stood opposite them with his arm outstretched and his finger on the trigger, aiming at the enemy. When Sauverand addressed Florence by her Christian name, he started from head to foot and his finger trembled. What miracle kept him from shooting? By what supreme effort of will did he stifle the jealous hatred that burnt him like fire? And here was Sauverand daring to stroke Florence's hair!

He lowered his arm. He would kill them later, do with them what he pleased, since they were in his power, and since nothing henceforth could snatch them from his vengeance.

He took Sauverand's two revolvers and laid them in a drawer. Then he went back to the door, intending to lock it. But hearing a sound on the first floor landing, he leaned over the balusters. The butler was coming upstairs with a tray in his hand.

"What is it now?"

"An urgent letter, sir, for Sergeant Mazeroux."

"Sergeant Mazeroux is with me. Give me the letter and don't let me be disturbed again."

He tore open the envelope. The letter, hurriedly written in pencil and signed by one of the inspectors on duty outside the house, contained these words:

Look out, sergeant. Gaston Sauverand is in the house. Two people living opposite say that the girl who is known hereabouts as the lady housekeeper came in at half-past one, before we took up our posts. She was next seen at the window of her lodge.

A few moments after, a small, low door, used for the cellars and situated under the lodge, was opened, evidently by her. Almost at the same time a man entered the square, came along the wall, and slipped in through the cellar door. According to the description it was Gaston Sauverand. So look out, sergeant. At the least alarm, at the first signal from you, we shall come in.

Don Luis reflected. He now understood how the scoundrel had access to his house, and how, hidden in the safest of retreats, he was able to escape every attempt to find him. He was living under the roof of the very man who had declared himself his most formidable adversary.

"Come on," he said to himself. "The fellow's score is settled—and so is his young lady's. They can choose between the bullets in my revolver and the handcuffs of the police."

He had ceased to think of his motor standing ready below. He no longer dreamed of flight with Florence. If he did not kill the two of them, the law would lay its hand upon them, the hand that does not let go. And perhaps it was better so, that society itself should punish the two criminals whom he was about to hand over to it.

He shut the door, pushed the bolt, faced his two prisoners again and, taking a chair, said to Sauverand:

"Let us talk."

Owing to the narrow dimensions of the room they were all so close together that Don Luis felt as if he were almost touching the man whom he loathed from the very bottom of his heart Their two chairs were hardly a yard asunder. A long table, covered with books, stood between them and the windows, which, hollowed out of the very wall, formed a recess, as is usual in old houses.

Florence had turned her chair away from the light, and Don Luis could not see her face clearly But he looked straight into Gaston Sauverand's face and watched it with eager curiosity; and his anger was heightened by the sight of the still youthful features, the expressive mouth, and the intelligent eyes, which were fine in spite of their hardness.

"Well? Speak!" said Don Luis, in a commanding tone. "I have agreed to a truce, but a momentary truce, just long enough to say what is necessary. Are you afraid now that the time has arrived? Do you regret the step which you have taken?"

The man smiled calmly and said:

"I am afraid of nothing, and I do not regret coming, for I have a very strong intuition that we can, that we are bound to, come to an understanding."

"An understanding!" protested Don Luis with a start.

"Why not?"

"A compact! An alliance between you and me!"

"Why not? It is a thought which I had already entertained more than once; which took a more precise shape in the magistrates' corridor, and which finally decided me when I read the announcement which you caused to be made in the special edition of this paper: 'Senational declaration by Don Luis Perenna Mme. Fauville is innocent!'"

"Everything lies, monsieur, in those four words. Do those four words which you have written, which you have uttered publicly and solemnly—'Mme. Fauville is innocent'—do they express your real mind? Do you now absolutely believe in Marie Fauville's innocence?'"

Don Luis shrugged his shoulders.

"Mme. Gauville's innocence has nothing to do with the case. It is a question not of her, but of you, of you two and myself So come straight to the point and as quickly as you can It is to your interest even more than to mine.'

"To our interest?"

"You forget the third heading to the article," cried Don Luis "I did more than proclaim Marie Fauville's innocence. I also announced—read for yourself—The 'imminent arrest of the criminals.'"

Sauverand and Florence rose together, with the same unguarded movement.

"And, in your view, the criminals are——?" asked Sauverand.

"Why, you know as well as I do: they are the man with the ebony walking stick, who at any rate cannot deny having murdered Chief Inspector Ancenis, and the woman who is his accomplice in all his crimes. Both of them must remember their attempts to assassinate me: the revolver shot on the Boulevard Suchet; the motor smash causing the death of my chauffeur; and yesterday again, in the barn—you know where—the barn with the two skeletons hanging from the raters: yesterday—you remember—the scythe, the relentless scythe, which nearly beheaded me."

"And then?"

"Well, then, the game is lost. You must pay up; and all the more so as you have foolishly put your heads into the lion's mouth."

"I don't understand What does all this mean?"

"It simply means that they know Florence Levasseur, that they know you are both here, that the house is surrounded, and that Weber, the deputy chief detective, is on his way."

Sauverand appeared disconcerted by this unexpected threat. Florence, standing beside him, had turned livid. A mad anguish distorted her features. She stammered:

And, rushing at Don Luis:

"Coward! Coward! It's you who are betraying us, Coward! Oh, I knew that you were capable of the meanest treachery! There you stand like an executioner! Oh, you villain, you coward!"

Don Luis turned away. Strange to say, he experienced no sense of pity; and Florence's tears affected him no more than her insults had done, no more than if he had never loved the girl. He was glad of this release. The horror with which she filled him had killed his love

But, when he once more stood in front of them after taking a few steps across the room, he saw that they were holding each other's hands, like two friends in distress, trying to give each other courage; and, again yielding to a sudden impulse of hatred, for a moment beside himself, he gripped the man's arm:

"I forbid you—— By what right ——? Is she your wife? Your mistress? Then——"

His voice became perplexed. He himself felt the strangeness of that fit of anger which suddenly revealed, in all its force and all its blindness, a passion which he thought dead. And he blushed, for Gaston Sauverand was looking at him in amazement; and he did not doubt that the enemy had penetrated his secret.

A long pause followed, during which he met Florence's eyes, hostile eyes, full of rebellion and disdain. Had she, too, guessed?

He dared not speak another word. He waited for Sauverand's explanation. And, while waiting, he gave not a thought to the coming relations, nor to the tremendous problems of which he was at last about to know the solution, nor to the tragic events at hand.

He thought of one thing only, thought of it with the fevered throbbing of his whole being, thought of what he was on the point of learning about Florence, about the girl's affections, about her past, about her love for Sauverand. That alone interested him.

"Very well," said Sauverand. "I am caught in a trap. Fate must take its course. Nevertheless, can I speak to you? It is the only wish that remains to me."

"Speak," replied Don Luis. "The door is locked. I shall not open it until I think fit. Speak."

"I shall be brief," said Gaston Sauverand. 'For one thing, what I can tell you is not much. I do not ask you to believe it, but to listen to it as if I were possibly telling the truth, the whole truth."

And he expressed himself in the following words:

"I never met Hippolyte and Marie Fauville, though I used to correspond with them—you will remember that we were all cousins—until five years ago, when chance brought us together at Palmero They were passing the winter there while their new house on the Boulevard Suchet was being built

"We spent five months at Palmero, seeing one another daily. Hippolyte and Marie were not on the best of terms. One evening after they had been quarrelling more violently than usual I found her crying. Her tears upset me and I could not longer conceal my secret I had loved Marie from the first moment when we met. I was to love her always and to love her more and more"

"You lie!" cried Don Luis, losing his self restraint. "I saw the two of you yesterday in the train that brought you back from Alencon——"

Gaston Sauverand looked at Florence She sat silent, with her hands to her face and her elbows on her knees Without replying to Don Luis' exclamation, he went on

GERMAN CONTROL OF FUR INDUSTRY ENDS

Last Tentacle of Teuton Power in That Line Is Rooted Out.

Washington, D. C.—Another tentacle of German control in American industry has been severed by A. Mitchell Palmer, the alien property custodian.

Under arrangements now being completed the custodian and the Fur Merchants' Credit association of New York city, the interests of the German fur barons of Leipzig will be purchased by American merchants and the money paid turned into the United States treasury to be held until the end of the war for the Germans involved.

In announcing today the forced retirement of German interests in the industry, Mr. Palmer said even rough estimates of the enemy holdings can not be made until all the fur dealers have reported balances due the Germans.

"It may be stated, however," said the custodian, "that the negotiations just completed will root out forever the last German dollar invested in the fur business in this country, turn loose the American furrier from the control of the Leipzig cabal and establish a great new industry here in America.

"Some of the larger firms which have already readjusted their holdings under the agreement of the government are the Theodor Thorer company, Gaudig & Blum and M. S. Elias, jr., Inc., among the best known fur houses on this side of the Atlantic. Many others are in process of readjustment, including Otto Erler company, Fuchs & Co., Inc., and Eisenbach Brothers.

"Before the war the trade of American furriers was practically nothing but a collecting and shipping agency for the Germans. Almost every pelt taken by American trappers had to go to Leipzig before it could be sold. Leipzig dressers and dyers were the best in the world. None could compete with them. Although London was the world's market by reason of the pioneer work of the old Hudson Bay company and far sighted English commission houses, three-quarters of the fur shipped to London from America, Russia and even China went, after their auctions, direct to Leipzig for dressing and dyeing.

"At Leipzig each year after the fur was prepared and the German merchants had fixed the price for that year, Americans were allowed to purchase as much as three-fifths of the entire fur produced for manufacture into garments, although in so doing they were forced to pay the original cost, plus the expense of dressing and dyeing, plus a handsome profit for the Germans, plus a 30 per cent duty before they got them back home. They were constantly either indebted to the Germans or completely under their domination."

Mr. Palmer said American fur dyeing houses now are operating in New York and that in St. Louis the attempt has been made successfully to dye seal skins, which previously had never been done outside of Leipzig and London. Fur auctions also have been undertaken successfully both in St. Louis and New York.

"When the war is over," Mr. Palmer concluded, "Germany will again buy American furs, but these goods will be bought in the American market this time, from American firms, and they will be American dressed and dyed and prepared for European consumption. The unnatural trade conditions which forced Americans to ship certain furs abroad, to buy them back and to reship them to America will have disappeared, and Germany will be the loser."

WAR CAUSES EATING OF MANY COARSE FISH

Washington, D. C.—One of the most curious anomalies of the present war, which has been called the greatest destroyer in the world's history, has been the addition of many thousands of dollars to the national wealth of the United States through the utilization of fish foods which were thrown away as worthless until necessity demanded their conservation. Fishing communities on the Atlantic, gulf and Pacific coasts and even on the interior lakes have found their incomes augmented materially by the public readiness to eat fish, which formerly was regarded with prejudice through ignorance of the food's tastiness and nutriment.

The radical change which has been wrought by the war in the fishing industry is reflected in the fisheries service bulletin, published by the bureau of fisheries of the department of commerce. Instead of being confined solely to items concerning salmon, shad, cod and other fishes which have had a ready sale, the bulletin devotes much space also to news concerning the catch of pole flounders, sharks, rays, skates, carp, grayfish, which formerly rejoiced in the uninviting name of dogfish, and other types of water food. Regarding the pole flounder, or gray sole, the bulletin records that it was virtually unknown as food prior to the fall of 1916. As a result of the bureau's food conservation campaign, which taught the value of the flounder and attractive ways to prepare it, demand for the fish increased until last season there were 36 boats taking flounders to the New England markets, and probably 2,000,000 pounds have been marketed. Carp abounds in interior lakes. An agent of the bureau was sent to St. Louis, Kansas City, Omaha, Minneapolis, St. Paul, Milwaukee, Chicago and Indianapolis to stimulate the use of fish. A bulletin containing recipes for cooking carp was prepared. State commissions of Minnesota, Wisconsin and Indiana cooperated in the work. The result was a greatly increased demand for carp, which continued to grow in favor as the public became acquainted with its value. More than 1,500,000 pounds of carp were sold from Minnesota lakes, and in Milwaukee the weekly consumption reached 25,000 pounds.

On the Pacific coast there is a growing demand for sharks, rays and whales. Sharks sell for 10 to 12c a pound. It is said to be especially delicious when salted or smoked. Numerous canneries have undertaken to preserve the meat.

Only One Thing to Do.

From Stars and Stripes, France.

George Washington Jones, late of Atlanta, was making his first trip frontward on a supply wagon—with not much farther to go—when, from the side of the road, a camouflaged American battery broke forth thunderously, sending a few 200-pound tokens over the line to Fritz. The ground trembled from the salvo, but not any more than George as he jumped from the high seat to the road.

"Scared," he demanded.

"Well," George said, "Ah was slightly agitated at fust. Ah guttingly was. But Ah keep right on. Dat's the only way to win this wah—fiah dem guns."

It is estimated that there are 2,043,854 cattle in the western provinces of Canada.

PETROLEUM'S PART IN FIGHTING THE WAR

A. C. Bedford, Chairman, Board of Directors, Standard Oil Co., New Jersey.

Picture oil in wartime. The multitude of factories turning out munitions of war must have fuel and lubricating oils in unusual quantities. Transports carrying our soldiers and war products over the seas are relying more and more on fuel oil. Fuel oil is largely the fuel for the allied fleets. Transport lorries carry the soldiers and the supplies to the front. The efficiency of the auto trucks transporting supplies to Verdun, blocked the way to Paris. Had it not been for the gasoline that supplied the submarine chasers, the submarine war would have taken an inestimably greater number of our merchant ships. Had it not been for gasoline, it would not be possible today to operate the new boats that are being used to detect the presence of the U boats beneath the waves, and finally, gasoline is vital to the vast airplane fleet which the United States will ship to France.

How the war has called for more and more of these supplies is indicated by the fact that in 1913 our exports of gasoline to our present allies totaled 29,000,000 gallons and these exports rapidly increased until in 1917 they totalled 300,000,000 gallons and in like manner the exports of lubricating oil increased from 103,000,000 gallons in 1913 to over 200,000,000 gallons in 1917. During the war the requirements for naphtha and gasoline have jumped forward with tremendous strides, our total exports of naphtha and gasoline in 1913 being 188,000,000 against over 400,000,000 gallons in 1917. Just as our allies before our entrance into the war called upon us for vast supplies the consumption of both lubricating oil and gasoline in the United States also mounted at a tremendous rate.

The total production of oil increased from 265,000,000 barrels in 1914 to 328,000,000 barrels in 1917, and the refinery capacity of America increased from 900,000 barrels a day in 1914 to more than 1,000,000 barrels in 1917. American refineries last year consumed 980,000,000 barrels of crude oil.

ENGLISH IDEA OF AMERICANS ALTERED

Soldiers Now in That Country Give Decidedly New Impression.

BY THOMAS BURKE.

London, (by mail)—"The Americans are all over London now," said the Chief. "You ought to make their acquaintance."

As this was a command, though camouflaged as a suggestion, I took my hat and made solemn preparations for the job. First, I visited a bar where a barmaid from Bermondsey mixed me what she said was a Manhatt n, anyway, it had a cherry in it. After swallowing it, I began to feel that perhaps I had a little American in me so I went to the nearest book shop and bought a set of the works of O Henry, George Ade, Jack Lait and Gelett Burgess. I found that the American in me responded easily I could read the language without a dictionary.

Then, muttering "Gee, huh," "Believe me, kid," and "I get you, Steve," I started for the Eagle Hut in the Strand.

You've probably heard all about the Eagle Hut from your newspapers and from your boys who have been welcomed there; it is the social headquarters of the American army in London. With a packet of chewing gum in one hand, a Life of Lincoln in the other, and my head full of startling phrases, I felt fully prepared to encounter my first real American. Of course, I had seen Americans before—the kind that, in the old days, came to London or Paris in the autumn and sent hotel and restaurant prices skyrocketing wherever they stayed—that looked as if they belonged more to the stage than to real life—that "Gee'd" and "Say'd" and "My'd" all up and down the Strand; that kind of American.

But I know that it's all wrong. They weren't Americans any more than the people of O. Henry and Jack Lait are Americans. Tell me, sweet people, why do you allow your novelists and dramatists to do such things to you? Why in peace time, did you send us that kind of American? We've got a totally wrong impression of you. Not that it's a bad impression; oh no, but it isn't correct. We took all these things as the real America, and now we've got to change our views.

It was about 12 years ago that the invasion of London by America began and how we welcomed you! You should have seen the way we ate everything you sent us: rag time, buck dancing, coon singers, O Henry, wild west films. It may annoy the musically fastidious, but it's a fact that the one thing that has done more than any other to cement the Anglo-American entente is rag time. Your vaudeville artists who brought it over here were the very best ambassadors you could have chosen; we jumped at them and at America; and, though we sized you up all wrong, it was a good enough start.

How wrong we were I found when I stepped inside the Eagle Hut and addressed a lean, resilient, tight jawed lad in the United States uniform. Said I: "Howdy, kid, put me wise to the big noise in this joint." Said he: "I beg pardon?" Something in his face told me that I had made a bloomer. "Are you from New York?" I parried. "Indeed I am; can I do anything for you?" "Ye-y-yes, I wanted to see the officer in charge." "Just across there, through the little door," he replied in an accent almost purely Oxford.

Crash number one. The Americans had forgotten their own language; or could it be that they had never learned it? Crash succeeded crash as I moved among the fellows in the Hut, who were reading their home papers or smoking and chatting. I met a hard-bitten lad from Pell street, New York city. Here, I thought, is surely one who will respond to the O. Henry lingo. But no; he wanted to talk about Shelley; and could I show him the churchyard where Milton was buried? Another, from the far west, was keen on Sir Thomas Beecham's opera productions in English; while over at the piano a clean cut boy with a rather coarse face was playing—guess?—Debussy. All the times I have visited the Eagle Hut I have never heard rag time from that piano. I heard none of those American songs which make our office boys so yearnful; songs in which the singer, being in one place, always wants to be somewhere else. If he's away down in Tennessee he wants to be in Idaho; if he's down on the farm he wants to see the lights of Broadway. You're a restless lot, you Americans, according to your song writers.

But your army is speedily putting us right about you. After I had got into my social stride at the Hut, I had the feeling of meeting a young brother. I found identical interests with many of the lads, and they were all so keen, so unsophisticated, that I began to feel for my long grey beard. Such questions, music, art and literature, and, occasionally, military matters these were some of the things discussed. I found no vain glorious boast of things American with which your trippers of peace time annoyed us. I found little trace of the drawling, snarling accent which your vaudeville artists suggest as the American accent, only a certain metallic ring in the tones marked the speakers as not direct from Oxford. But I did find one thing that struck me as curious. You know when a Cockney has nothing to do for 10 minutes, he goes and has a drink if the hour be propitious. Apparently, in your "dry" states when a man has a spare 10 minutes he goes and has a shoe shine. Again and again I have been accosted in the streets by your men, who, finding time hang heavy have asked me where they can get a shoe shine—at 9 o'clock at night too. So forgive me if I put that down as the popular American recreation, shoe shines.

Another conclusion I have reached is that American slang is only talked by the smart and vulgar young Cockneys of both sexes. It is we who say "Gee, kid" and "Don't pull the rough stuff on me." Our Cockney lads are far more American than yourselves; from their language they might have stepped from an O Henry story. Indeed, your men over here must find it a home from home, for here are American songs, American stage artists, chewing gum, American films, American drink mixers, ice cream soda fountains and so on—all patronized almost exclusively by the young Cockneys, who are taking up enthusiastically the things you were tired of 20 years ago. Instead of being precisely a home from home, I should say that London takes 'em back a bit to old times.

The alert nonchalance which I had been led to believe was the American manner I found nowhere. Lord how serious your men are, serious and adamantine they smile frequently and readily but seldom laugh. In a hut full of English soldiers, the din and "kick" are almost unbearable; a room full of American soldiers is by comparison like a cathedral. And there you have a note of my first impressions of your boys. We get along together top hole and I'm going to cart a few of 'em round London and show 'em the inside of it, not the "sights" which they're seeing already by brake loads, but the real London, and I hope to let you know what they think of it.

Idea of War's Size.

From the London Spectator.

It is difficult for the civilian to realize that the few short lines of Sir Douglas Haig's dispatch of Monday night described what in other wars would have been a very great battle and a very great victory. The mere statement that the Germans made an attack and were repulsed at all points conveys little to the non-military mind. Yet to bare justice to the heroic divisions who bore the burden of that terrible day, we all ought to try to understand what they did. They put out of action at least 30,000 Germans. They broke the spirit of the best fighting divisions that General von Armin could put against them by inflicting on them a second decisive defeat in four days. They showed once more that the British and French armies will not be broken or demoralized by the most furious assaults that the enemy can deliver. Monday's nameless battle was but an episode in this stupendous conflict, but it has confirmed anew our belief in the allied armies. Provided always that they are properly reinforced, they cannot be beaten, and they can and will beat the enemy.

A Quick Holiday.

From Harper's Magazine.

An old Virginia negro had just received from the son of his old master in the north his annual gift of a bottle of bourbon whisky. Leaving the express office, he slipped and dropped the package.

"D'Law!" D'Law!" he cried. "My Chris'mus is done come and gone."

WHAT PRINCIPLES?

From the New York World.

Addressing the republican state convention at Indianapolis, Senator New said:

> Our message to the president is Go ahead. We are with you heart and soul in life and in purse, in the things that have to do with the winning of the war, but make no mistake, we abate no particle of our devotion to the party of our choice and yield nothing of our principles, but reassert them.

These are praiseworthy sentiments but what are these republican principles of which the senator yields nothing? We should like to see a statement of them. And for that matter we should like to see a corresponding statement of democratic principles.

Has either of the great parties today a single principle peculiar to itself which it would care to enunciate and submit to the American people? Does the great mass of voters at this time care a tin whistle for any distinctive party principle or for any political issue except the winning of the war?

DOG A PROBLEM IN ENGLAND

Diminishing Food Supply Makes Canine Industry Difficult One From War Standpoint.

The British government is wrestling with the problem of what to do with dogs, in view of the rapidly diminishing stocks of food. It seems settled that the number of dogs is to be reduced. There are hardly any dog biscuits left, and no more will be manufactured, as the low grade flour from which they are made is wanted for the textile trades.

Bonar Law, Chancellor of the exchequer, refused to include a heavy tax on dogs in his budget, which he introduced in the last week of April. His friends said that such a tax would kill dog-breeding as an industry, and would work unequally between rich and poor. The poor man's dog would be sacrificed while the pampered Pekinese would flourish.

Now the alternative proposal is to prohibit the breeding of dogs during the war except under license. The effect of this would be to allow the perpetuation of pedigreed breeds, which have taken many years and large sums of money to produce, and also useful dogs, like sheep dogs and army dogs. The breeding of mongrels and probably of purely fancy dogs would be prohibited.

There will be no interference with people who already have dogs. They will in the future need all their ingenuity to keep pets fed.

Militant Medicos.

Events in France have led to a shortage of medical men with the army, for it stands to reason that in any toll of prisoners taken a percentage will represent the medical personnel of the forces. And that percentage must often be a high one, as in the zones of the clearing station mobility cannot be a feature.

Dubious Compliment.

"How do you mean?"

"It is such a red cross affair."

Not Surprising.

"Yes'm; he's doin' time."

A Letter From Mike

Pensacola, Fla., June 19, 1918

Dear Friend Ray:—

Was transfered down here from Charleston, S. C., June 5th, and like it fine, as now I am getting real aviation work and that was why I went into this branch.

We go to school from 8:00 to 12:00 and 1:00 to 4:00 and then sometimes are called for work on the beach during the early evening. Have been up in the air only twice so far and like it fine, but sure makes a fellow hold his breath at first. I suspect that you know that the machines used in the Navy aviation are all sea planes and much larger and heavier than those used by the Army, and start from the water instead of the ground. They float along on top of the water until a speed of 30 miles or more has been gained when they will commence their aerial ascent.

There is a large number of Jackies receiving their training here at present, in both the machinist and quartermaster aviation, in fact it is overcrowded, which makes some of the accommodations poor but they are being shipped out for foreign service fast. Do not know just how much I am supposed to divulge to an outsider, but they are shipping men out of here every week for foreign service. When you complete your course here you are ready for foreign service and that makes it rather hard to secure a furlough and don't know if I will be able to get one a little later on or not, but if I can't I am ready and anxious to go.

The chief duties of a quartermaster is to know the plane and be able to assemble and repair it from A to Z, with the exception of the motor, which is looked after by the machinist Besides the above the quartermaster must be an expert signal man. That is, he must know semi-phoning, wig wagging and radio, and also box the compass; and if you are lucky you may secure an appointment as pilot and then he has about reached his climax.

You can readily see that we are kept pretty busy and that is one reason that I have never written some acknowledgements that I should have and will kindly ask that you let my friends know that I have not forgotten them and make such other comments from my letter that you see fit.

While I was out to the Mt. Pleasant Rifle Range near Charleston, I received a nice package of candy from Mrs. F. A. Arnold and a package containing candy, cigars and cigarettes from Mr. and Mrs. Frank Kluckhohn and sure appreciated them and several of my mates will also attest to the goodness of the contents and the donors' kindness will not be forgotten. Never cared much for sweets when I was in civil life, but they sure taste good here.

Sure gets devilish warm down here but like the climate better than I did at Charleston, and do not notice the heat as much as there always is a breeze. Besides we have one of the finest beaches God ever created and you do not have to grit your teeth and say "The water is fine," because it always is, and salty enough so even a dry land sailor can swim.

Well, Jurgy, I started out with the intentions of writing only a few lines and ask you to send the paper down here and also two or three of the back issues as I read every line of every issue.

Hope everything is going fine back in good old Iowa, and the farther you get away and the more you see of other states, the more it dawns on you that she is the greatest state in the Union by far. The people of the South are fine but 10 acres of Iowa land are worth more than a township down South if I had to live on it.

Greet all my friends and wish them the best of luck.

Your friend,
M. M. Magner,
Naval Air Station
Camp Bennett, Pensacola, Florida.

GOD AND GOTT

By Wilbur D. Nesbit

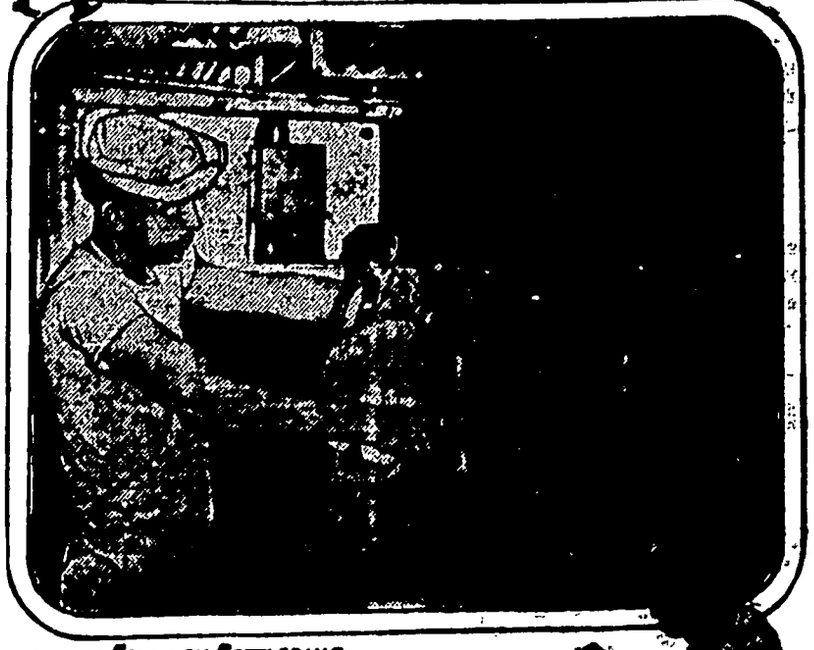
Who soothes the sighs of sorrow
And heals the hurts of pain?
Who gives us for the morrow
The songs we sing again?
Who taught us love for others?
Who guards us as we roam?
Who links our hands as brothers
And sanctifies the home?

Who girds our souls with sureness
That we may cast out fear?
Who blesses woman's pureness
And bids us hold it dear?
Oh, whispered in our praying
From cradle to the sod
Our name—our faith displaying—
The hallowed name of God!

Who teaches torture's terror
And laughs at lies and loot?
Who holds no faith is fairer
Than one to shame a brute?
To whom are women shrieking
And sobs of children maimed
As sweet as some one speaking
Of those both loved and famed?

Who spurns the ill and lowly
That falter at his gate?
Who holds supremely holy
The hoarsest curse of hate?
Oh, bestial, hellish being—
On God's great name a blot!
Unthinking and unseeing,
The Prussians call it Gott!

AMERICAN NAVY ELIMINATES WASTE



SLICING BACON ON BATTLESHIP

HOW MANY BAG RUNNERS BROKE EARS

JACKIES in the American navy are classed as the best fed body of men in the world. In the ship's galleys every effort is made to eliminate waste.

In the upper photo one of the cooks on the North Dakota is operating a meat slicer that cuts bacon with the least possible wastage. Fat is fuel for fighters. Bacon is badly needed in the allied armies and navies. The allied needs in pork products are 150,000,000 pounds monthly, three times as much as before the war.

There is a sufficient quantity of potatoes in America for greater use in every home and for all needs of army and navy. Eat more potatoes, eat less wheat.

Red Cross News

LOT SALE LAST WEDNESDAY

Despite the rainy weather last Wednesday the Barz Addition was opened up to the public. The sale was rather late in getting started but the weather cleared up in the afternoon and the crowd gathered when the band began to play on Main street The procession then headed for the grounds and the selling began. Lots sold fast to the eager buyers present and about ten or twelve lots were sold in a short time. The sale was handicapped due to the absence of many intended buyers who could not be present at the sale. The sale was called off about four o'clock when it again started to rain. Those drawing the free prizes were: Mrs. Musfelt, auto lunch kit; Mrs. A. Ahrenkiel, U. S. Flag; Chris Gram, rocker. The prizes were all good useful articles and were given those who held lucky numbers. The Red Cross was to have served dinner on the grounds, but this had to be postponed and they served supper at the Opera House, the total amount cleared is published elsewhere in this issue.

The promoters of the Lot Sale have not as yet expressed their plan for selling the remainder of the lots, but anyone wishing to purchase one of these desirable locations can perhaps secure such from Mgs. Kluckhohn.

A HOOVER SONG

(Tune: Old Black Joe)

Gone are the days when my steak was young and rare,
Gone is the pork
from my bill of fare.
Hoover has said we must
Economize,
I hear my Uncle Samuel calling,
"Hoo-ver-ize!"
Chorus—
I'm willing, I'm willing,
Let's all economize
I hear my Uncle Samuel calling,
"Hoo-ver-ize!"
Why should I mourn for my fast departing cash?
Why should I weep when my wife brings in the hash?
What tho my cakes are the very smallest size?
I hear my Uncle Samuel calling,
"Hoo-ver-ize!"
Chorus—
Why should I grieve
if my bread is made of rye?
Why should I long for that good old custard pie?
I'll do my bit until the Kaiser dies,
I hear my Uncle Samuel calling,
"Hoo-ver-ize!"

PUNISH FOOD HOARDER

FOOD ADMINISTRATION WILL STRICTLY ENFORCE LAWS AND PUNISH VIOLATORS SEVERELY.

Burlington, Ia., April 15.—Two men charged with violation of the government food regulations have just felt the heavy hand of the law.

W. B. Rosell of Salem, Ia., was found to have four sacks of flour in his home and he was promptly arrested and taken to Keokuk, where he was bound over to the federal grand jury in $1,000 bond. An employee on account of the company was fined $300 for the benefit of the Red Cross last week. The government will no longer tolerate flour hoarding.

H. E. Roberts of Postville, Ia., was fined $500 for the Red Cross and his license revoked for selling flour without the proper substitutes. He also was required to sign a public apology.

From now on, the food administration will strictly enforce the law against all violators. Hoarding flour, selling flour without equivalent weight of substitutes and kindred offenses, will be punished to the limit.

MARKET THE WHEAT.

Administrator Deem has received an appeal from Herbert Hoover directed to the farmers of Iowa, urging them to market their wheat before May 1, reserving only seed.

The allies are taking 50 per cent of other cereals than wheat to mix in their bread. All bread in Europe is baked in bakeries. It is impossible to make bread that will keep wholly out of other cereals. Therefore this appeal to the farmers.

Mr. Hoover says: "This is a war call, and a service for Uncle Sam, who is fighting for his life. If your local miller is unable to buy all the wheat that is offered, market it in the other customary trade channels through which it will reach the Food Administration Grain corporation."

EUROPE MUST HAVE WHEAT.

No question is more frequently asked than why we send wheat to Europe. We send wheat to furnish a foundation for the mixed cereal bread that the allies have eaten for three years and a half, and not to supply them with a straight wheat bread. We have been eating Victory bread, a bread that calls for only 20 per cent wheat substitute, while Europe since the outbreak of the war has eaten a war bread which contains from 25 to 50 per cent substitute. They are asking us for wheat to make this war bread.

Wheat flour is the only known foundation for a bakery loaf. Cornmeal and buckwheat can be used in making cornbread and batter cakes, but these breads cannot be looked on as bakery products, as they will not stand 24 hours' handling between the oven and the table. American women who do their own baking can make good use of cornmeal, rice, and oatmeal, but wherever women work in factories or long hours in the field, whether in America or Europe, bakery bread must be within their reach.

Dr. Alonzo Taylor, representative from the United States food administration to the recent allied conference in Paris, and an expert on the food needs of the world, answers the question in this way:

"We want to send wheat to Europe because you can make bread of wheat, and you can't make bread out of rice and oats and corn. And nobody bakes domestic bread in Europe. You can go to any town in France, and you will find that there are no individual bakers there. There will be employed probably two or three men in one place, who will have one large hearth, who will be able to bake 2,000 loaves of bread together, with a minimum amount of coal. The bread is delivered to the home; and this is one-half of the diet of that home. It was in peace time and it is now. In peace times there was considerable sugar, and dairy products were plentiful. Now these things are scarce and the bread largely takes the place of these foods. So the bread becomes of added importance from every point of view."

Fair Profit on Flour.

In the opinion of the food administration the gross maximum profit for wholesalers in flour should not exceed from 50 to 75 cents per barrel. The profit to retailers in original mill packages should not exceed from 80 cents to $1.20 per barrel, depending upon the character of service performed. Where retailers sell in amounts less than original mill packages, the gross profit should not exceed 1 cent a pound. Profits in excess of these or in excess of those obtained in pre-war times will be cause for investigation.

Restrict Sale of Poultry.

The federal food administration ruling designated to prevent killing of hens and pullets during the season of egg production, applies to licensed dealers in poultry. Individuals are not prohibited from killing their own chickens, but are asked as a war measure to spare the laying hens and pullets until after May 1. It is hoped that all will live up to the ruling whether they are required to or not. The ruling does not apply to broilers under two pounds.

THE KLEMME TIMES

Ray A. Jorgenson, Pub.

KLEMME, IOWA

An interesting chapter in railway history is recalled by the statement of the chairman of the City & South London railway that this line would have been reconstructed if it had not been for the war. The City & South London enjoys the dual distinction of being the first underground electric railway and the first "tube" railway in the world. The tunnels of the later "tubes" are of larger diameter, and the small size of the South London forbids the utilization of modern rolling stock. The scheme of reconstruction provides for an increase in the diameter of the tunnels, thus enabling larger carriages to be used.

The statement has been made by a representative of the government that 5,000,000 tons of coarse and grassy hay will be required within the year in the production of a filler in the manufacture of high explosives. This hay is thoroughly macerated, and 20 per cent. of the bulk of explosive is said to be made of the resultant fiber, replacing the cotton formerly used. There are many places where such coarse hay suitable for feed is difficult to produce.

In the early days of its history the earth grew rapidly by the addition of meteoric matter. It is still growing in the same manner, though scarcely to an appreciable extent, for the mass of meteoric matter added yearly is reckoned to be only 20,000 tons. In the course of ages larger planets have swept up practically all the fragments of the original disruption and the only available source of supply of meteoric matter seems to be that brought by the comets.

At a religious meeting in Pennsylvania a youth asked the prayers of the pastor and people in order that he might become redheaded. It seems that his hair was of a yellowish-white shade, that was no color at all. He had heard the redheads were good scrappers and he was praying the Lord to give him red hair so that he might go forth and fight the kaiser.

Work in three coal mines at O'Fallon, Ill., employing 150 men was stopped the other day following the receipt of a telegram by one miner from his mother-in-law, a spiritualist who gave a warning she declared she had received from her dead husband. The message was received from Kansas City and asserted an accident would befall the miners if they went to work.

Experiments are being made in Trinidad, British West Indies, with a mineral oil substitute for coal fuel on the railways. The legislative council has appropriated $24,000 for the purpose, and if the tests are satisfactory further sums will probably be forthcoming. It is reported that Trinidad's output of crude oil in 1917 amounted to 5,980,914 gallons.

An interesting fact about the work on the grading of the railroad being done at Boone, N. C., is that Capt. W. M. Hodges, an ex-confederate soldier, now 86 years old, is putting in 10 hours every day with his mattock on the work, and this not because he needs to but to show his deep interest in getting the road completed to his county seat.

Science recognizes only seven colors, called primary, the colors of the rainbow as follows: Violet, indigo blue, green yellow, orange and red. White is a blend of all of these, as appears in white sunlight and black is the deprivation or absence of all. They are colors in a popular sense, but not in a scientific sense.

Although he was "buried" three years ago with full rites attended by the fraternal society to which he belonged, Joe Pappan, of Kenosha, Wis., is now superintendent of a tannery in San Francisco. When a body was taken from the lake in Kenosha in 1915, it was identified as that of Pappan and buried as such.

A New York merchant who died recently, willed $100,000 to institutions controlled by the French government for the relief of blind and crippled French soldiers, "victims of the criminal war imposed by one man, the barbarous German emperor, William II, for the satisfaction of his own ambitions."

The American Red Cross authorities state that approximately 14,000 nurses may be called into war service in the next 18 months. More than 12,000 of this number are already enrolled in the Red Cross. It is estimated that 14,000 nurses can care for an army of nearly 2,000,000 men in the field.

Paper as we know that article today, was brought from Asia to Europe by the Arabians. In China paper had been manufactured from an ancient period from silk. When Samarcand was conquered by the Arabians they employed cotton in the place of silk in paper making.

Oliver Stough, America's oldest living Elk, led the ball given in honor of the 100th anniversary of his birth at San Diego. Stough fought in the Mexican war, the civil war and Indian wars. He was born in Fayette county, Pa., and went to San Diego 35 years ago.

The pupils of the Sumner avenue school in Springfield, Mass., are the proud possessors of a $100 Liberty bond purchased with money raised by the sale of old rubber. The children collected about a ton of rubber which was transformed into cash.

Hundreds of women of the British army auxiliary corps are working in France, some in the bases and others in country quarters near base towns. Uniforms, khaki coat frock, with stockings and shoes, are provided free.

The war has created a great boom in the fishing industry of the British isles. Some of the old fishing skippers are said to have paid taxes this year on incomes amounting to $35,000 and more.

General Pershing served in the Spanish war with the 10th cavalry in the Santiago campaign, Cuba, in 1898. He afterward fought in the Philippines in the Moro insurrection.

As a consequence, it is charged, of wilful misstatement of ages, the number of women in the British census groups age 20 to 25 and 25 to 30, are disproportionately high.

A cattle trail is to be built in British Guiana by the government, leading from the Annai Savanna on the Rupununi river to the Yawkuri Savanna, a distance of 120 miles.

A group of retail grocers in Vancouver, B. C., recently conducted a campaign of advertising to educate the public to the desirability of using white bread.

LEMARS GAS PLANT MAY BE CLOSED DOWN

Owners In Asking For Higher Rates Make Three Propositions to City Council.

LeMars, Ia., June 22.—At a meeting of the stockholders of the LeMars Gas company, to be held this week, it has been decided to make three propositions to the city council. The first is that the gas company be allowed to increase the price of gas from $1.50 to $1.80 per 1,000 cubic feet. The second proposition is that the city take over the plant and pay the company $250 per month and six per cent interest on physical valuation of stock. The third proposition is that the gas company close down the plant indefinitely, June 30.

At a recent meeting of the city council a petition from the gas company for a raise in rate was practically turned down. President Julius Dick, of Huntington, Va., was summoned and in conference with the local manager, O. H. Hinds, the above course was agreed to.

INWOOD'S PROSPERITY IS PLAINLY EVIDENT

Inwood, Ia., June 22.—Inwood is putting on airs this year, for the town has had a number of new buildings planned. A $15,000 garage by the Inwood Auto company, having just been completed and made ready for occupancy, a new creamery, backed by the citizens of the community, is going to be built this summer and a new hotel is also projected and may possibly be built.

The new school building, which is the pride of Inwood, is a credit to the community, and cost $40,000 when completed. Today it would probably cost $50,000 to $60,000. It has accommodations for more than 300 pupils, and is equipped throughout with the best of fixtures and with the view to the best possible work. The manual training and domestic science departments include branches of school work, and the gymnasium in the basement is a well lighted and important adjunct to the school work.

TEACHERS IN TRAINING AT DENISON NORMAL

Denison, Ia., June 22.—The branch of the State Normal at Cedar Falls which is being held at Denison has opened with an attendance of 200. This normal is in charge of Professor Fuller of Cedar Falls. Prospective teachers living in this locality have been quick to see the advantages of this school. It is being held in the buildings of the former Denison Business college which is now owned by the Independent district. The school will continue for 12 weeks.

WOMEN AT GEORGE, IA., ORGANIZED FOR WAR

George, Ia., June 22.—The meeting held under the supervision of Mrs. Lottie Smith, the worker sent to Lyon county to organize the women for war work, at the school house in George was well attended, both morning and afternoon. Thirty-two were present in the morning and 56 met with Mrs. Smith in the afternoon.

The morning was taken up in explaining the need for the organization and its purposes, and the afternoon was devoted to a lecture and demonstration on the use of wheat substitutes for breadmaking and the combinations of flours most successfully used.

Mrs. H. C. Hatch was elected president of the local organization, Mrs. G. B. Winch vice president, and Mrs. Mike Christenson secretary and treasurer.

TERRILL AND DETECTIVE WILKERSON BATTLE

Ottumwa, Ia., June 22.—The preliminary hearing of J. N. Wilkerson before Justice Wilcox ended in a fight between the Red Oak detective and State Agent Terrill.

The charge against Wilkerson, who was arrested, it is alleged, when found with Mrs. Mary Noel, a young widow of Villisca, in an Ottumwa hotel Thursday night, was dismissed at the instance of the state agents, who asked that the case be heard in Agency, a nearby town in Wapello county.

A demurrer has been filed by the defense claiming that no crime was charged. As Wilkerson started to leave the courtroom Terrill intervened to rearrest him for appearance in Agency and a fight ensued. The constable and a policeman quelled the disturbance.

REBEKAH CONVENTION AT LEMARS WELL ATTENDED

LeMars, Ia., June 22.—Eighty-eight delegates attended the 19th annual district convention of the Rebekah lodge, which was held here Tuesday. The address of welcome was given by Mrs. Lulu Engelken, vice president of the convention, and was responded to by Mrs. Alice B. Spencer, president, of Sioux City.

Exemplification work was put on by Minerva and Pacific lodges of Sioux City, and the principal address was made by Mrs. Lea Washburn, state assembly president.

OPPOSED TO SENDING CIGARETS TO SOLDIERS

Denison, Ia., June 22.—At the conference held at the Methodist church in this city of the ministers of the Council Bluffs district presided over by Superintendent Cable of Council Bluffs, strong resolutions were adopted against furnishing to the soldier boys, cigarets and tobacco by the government and particularly the Red Cross. The resolutions were unanimously adopted.

GERMAN ACTIVITY AT HOLSTEIN REBUKED

Use of the Language and Other Offenses Not to Be Lightly Regarded Any More.

Ida Grove, Ia., June 21.—Rudolph Schraeder, of Holstein, was before the military board Monday and was placed under bond to comply with the order regarding the use of the German language during the period of the war. Ernest Mohs, a teamster of the same town, is in the county jail on a charge of inciting public sentiment against Lew Dailey, a citizen of Holstein, who assisted in posting the notices regarding the use of foreign languages on the streets or other places. About 25 witnesses were before the board from Holstein and opinion was divided as to what punishment should be dealt out to Mohs. Griggs township and the town of Holstein are two of the strongest German settlements in the state, but as a rule the citizens are loyal. The board intends that the laws shall be respected and internment is staring some of the citizens of that section of the county in the face unless they cease all pro-German agitation.

WORK OR FIGHT ORDER MUST BE ENFORCED

Des Moines, Ia., June 21. The United States public service reserve will be one of the agencies through which the "work or fight" order will be carried out.

H. J. Metcalf, secretary of the Iowa council of national defense, and also director of the public service reserve for Iowa, and Labor Commissioner A. L. Urick have returned from Washington, where they attended a conference of public service reserve workers and state labor officials.

Four field agents of the public service reserve are to be put to work in Iowa by July 1. They will visit the county reserve agents and local draft boards and check up on the registered men as to their employment. The provost marshal general's order is to be enforced to the letter. Secretary Metcalf reports, and throughout the entire country there will be a big shifting of workers after July 1.

"It will be a great help to men who come under this 'work or fight' ruling if they will fill out public service reserve cards," said Secretary Metcalf. "It will show their willingness to adapt themselves to the government's needs. They can enroll for emergency farm labor service, or for work in the shipyards either as laborers or mechanics or for other classes of work which will help meet the government needs.

"Signing up these cards means they will go into this work as soon as the government calls them. It is an enlistment for work and after such enlistment a man must take up this work when ordered. There is going to be a vast demand for shipyard workers soon. Many laborers will be needed as well as skilled carpenters and mechanics.

"Public service reserve cards can be obtained of county council of defense chairmen or of the county reserve agents in each county of the state. Local draft boards also have these enrollment cards.

"If a man fills out a card he places himself in readiness to go when the government asks for him."

LOAFERS ARE BEING LOCATED AT CEDAR RAPIDS

Cedar Rapids, Ia., June 21.—Four persons were arrested in the beginning of a local "work or fight" campaign. They were taken from pool rooms. Other arrests will follow, police officials say.

The military police will enforce the order in the camp and four deputy sheriffs and two deputy federal marshals will have charge of the enforcement of the order in the three mile zone.

IOWA LEGISLATURE TO BE SAFELY "DRY"

Des Moines, Ia., June 21.—Based on unofficial returns, the results of the state primary election of June 3 indicate that, regardless of how the election may go, the Thirty-eighth general assembly will be safely dry.

The returns also disclose that the Pitt-Johnson machine, which controlled the house in the Thirty-seventh assembly, has been badly wrecked.

Milton Pitt, speaker of the house in 1917, will not be back in the house and may be beaten in the race for the state senate in the Thirty-fourth district. This district, which was represented in the Thirty-seventh assembly by Grant L. Caswell of Denison, is normally democratic by 600 votes, and it is doubtful if the ex-speaker can overcome this handicap in his race against Ed M. Whiting, of Whiting.

It adds that at informal conference the matter was canvassed and it was decided there was no way to elect a new chairman unless Mr. Woods would be so kind as to defer on the wishes of his colleagues and resign.

THRESHERS MUST NOT WASTE THE GRAIN

Council Bluffs, Ia., June 20.—No threshing machine will be permitted to operate in Pottawattamie county this harvest season unless it has been inspected and O. K.'d by a government expert.

Both engines and separators must measure up to government standard of efficiency. Those found to be in poor condition must be repaired and subjected to a final inspection before they will be allowed to thresh grain.

Investigations have disclosed that much grain is lost through defective threshing machinery. It is to prevent this waste that the government has fixed a standard of efficiency for machines.

QUAKER PREACHER IS NOW WAR ENTHUSIAST

Des Moines, Ia., June 20.—After an extensive visit to the European war zone as a result of which he saw and heard of German atrocities, Rev. E. T. Coppock, a Quaker minister of Ankeny, Ia., has denounced the pacific creed of his church and declares he will return to his parish and preach war to his members. Rev. Cappock declared he is determined to do everything in his power to urge upon his parishoners to denounce their noncombatant doctrines and take up arms against the Germans.

"Although I was born a Quaker," he declared, "I am determined that our allies and our country are right in crushing Germany. I would shoulder a gun now, but I'm too old. However, I expect to 'do my bit' by delivering lectures throughout the country, preaching the doctrines of anti-kaiserism."

Civil war veterans threatened to cause trouble if the meeting was permitted.

NORTH DAKOTA BANKER ARRESTED IN IOWA

Waterloo, Ia., June 21.—O. R. Powell, cashier, of the Blaisdell (N. D.) State bank, is held in custody here following his arrest by a deputy sheriff, charged with making threats to extort. The warrant for the arrest of Powell was signed by Dr. F. W. Powers, president of a local bank and one of the most widely known financiers in the middle west. It seems that the arrest of Powell is only the initial move in the solution of a triangular bank certificate robbery involving more than $14,000.

Dr. Powers alleged that Powell "did orally and maliciously threaten to accuse of a crime with the intent to extort a pecuniary advantage and with intent to compel him to do an act against his will."

Developments brought to light indicate that Powell threatened Dr. Powers with prosecution unless a certificate for $5,000 cashed by the bank of which Mr. Powers is president, was produced with 10 days.

The pair it is alleged, registered under the names of L. R. Johnson, of Centerville, and Mrs. Norton and baby, of Albia. Their rooms adjoined. Mrs. Noel waived to the grand jury. They are out on bonds of $300 each.

State agents are said to have made the arrests after the hotel night clerk had been listening outside the door of one of the rooms. Wilkerson, the state agents say, was found in the woman's room.

Wilkerson was nominated candidate for county attorney of Montgomery county at the recent primaries. Attorney General H. M. Havner is opposing his admission to the Iowa bar.

ADMIT FAILURE OF U-BOAT CAMPAIGN

Captain Persius, German Naval Critic, Confesses Submarine Fleet Is Not Equal to Allied Warfare.

London, June 21 German U boats are unequal to the warfare against them is the virtual admission of Captain Persius, the naval critic of the Berliner Tageblatt says a Rotterdam dispatch to the Daily Telegraph Captain Persius writes

"Every German knows that U boat losses are unavoidable owing to the continually increasing sharpness and effectiveness of the defense measures of the enemy which perhaps will further increase as the war progresses * * * * * * It is scarcely to be denied that our enemies are both carrying on a war and living and that it will be possible for them to defend themselves against tonnage needs for a long time at any rate From the beginning of the U-boat war it was a mistake, often committed by us, to underestimate the resources of our enemies

STRIKE IS CALLED IN CURTISS PLANT

Men Demand Same Pay as Workers In Naval Yards Employed on Similar Work Receive.

Buffalo, N. Y., June 21.—A strike at the main plant of the Curtis Aeroplane & Motor corporation was inaugurated at 10 o'clock today. Two hundred men, according to union leaders laid down their tools. Machinists at other plants will be called out at noon it was announced. James E Kepperley, general manager, met a committee of the men this morning

The strike was called as the result of a meeting of 800 machinists and tool makers of the plant which lasted from last night until early today, when it was voted to walk out unless granted demands, which included an eight-hour day and a wage scale equal to that paid in navy yards for similar work. They aslo demand the reinstatement of men alleged to have been discharged last month when federal intervention temporarily delayed a crisis in the difficulties between the employes and the company Andrew T. McNamara, of Washington, representing the International Association of Machinists, affiliated with the American Federation of Labor, was present The strike vote is said to have been practically unanimous.

Mr. McNamara said the first request for a readjustment of wages was made May 20 The company refused to do anything, he said, and a number of union men were discharged. Not all of these men have been reinstated and their cause is involved in the present issue.

The scale of wages at the Curtis plant ranges from 40 to 70 cents an hour. The navy yard scale, the men claim, grades up to 81 cents an hour for special work.

YANK GAS ATTACK IS BLOW TO HUN

Box Barrage Prevents Boches From Escaping From the From Escaping the Area Deluged By Clouds

BY FRANK J. TAYLOR,
United Press Staff Correspondent.

With the American Army in Lorraine, June 21.—The Germans suffered heavy casualties in yesterday morning's combined first all-American gas attack and artillery bombardment, it was established through an enemy prisoner today.

The bochos were just starting to invade the American lines when the gas containers fell in their midst, killing a great number and sending others fleeing.

After the deluge of gas subsided and the barrage died down, the Germans attempted to start their raid again, but were stopped almost in their tracks by American artillery, machine gun and rifle fire.

I witnessed this first American gas projector attack from a front line trench. Every doughboy impatiently awaited the "zero" hour which had been set at 2.30. Promptly on the second, the silence was broken by a terrific explosion from our trenches, as several batteries of projectors, fired simultaneously by electricity, sent more than a thousand gas containers screaming toward the German trenches in the Bois de Montmare.

Great Blast in Hun Lines.

After the flash, the walls of the departing projectiles died away, and it seemed almost a minute before a very loud explosion was heard in the Hun trenches Then we knew that certain specified German positions had been drenched with gas.

For several minutes an uncanny silence ensued. After this interval star shell signals were sent up and the American artillery cut loose. This terrific barrage of gas shells and high explosives died down and again there was comparative quiet. The boches were apparently still too astonished to reply.

The American artillery laid down another barrage and this time the Germans answered. The whole area became an inferno. Every village behind the American lines was subjected to heavy fire, mostly gas shells, but there was not a single American casualty. When the bombardment finally ceased a comparatively few Huns emerged from their trenches, but were swept back by a perfect deluge of shrapnel and bullets. This, we learned from a prisoner, was to have been a German retaliatory raid.

Huns Forced to Take It.

The projector attack, of course, was timed for a favorable wind. The Germans were so excited they failed to take this into consideration. As a result much of the gas loosed against the American front lines was blown back into their own trenches.

The barrage laid down by our artillery boxed in the comparatively small area deluged by gas, preventing the Huns from fleeing to other parts of their lines and forcing them to stay and take it.

American aviators reported later in the day that gas clouds extended 10 kilometers (more than six miles) behind the German forward lines.

Five American bombing planes which dropped 38 bombs on the railway station, yards and tracks at Conflans (20 miles east of Verdun), doing heavy damage, returned safely Tuesday night despite an encounter with several enemy planes.

MORE "CHICKEN FEED" NEEDED TO PAY TAXES

Mint Urged to Turn Out Some New Coins to Facilitate "Making Change."

Washington, June 21.—A strong demand has arisen in many sections of the country for new coins to meet the changing war time needs. Scores of letters to congress and treasury officials have urged the adoption of 2½ and 12½ cent pieces and also a 2 cent piece to facilitate war tax payments on small articles at the stores and theaters, and slight increases in many items. Thus far, however, Secretary McAdoo has discouraged any changes, although there is a bill now before congress which would establish a 2 cent piece. Both McAdoo and Director of the Mint Baker believe the war has not yet developed a need for the new coins sufficiently urgent to offset the complications resulting from making present established systems of handling small coins accurately and quickly.

By United Press.

Amsterdam, June 21.—Cavalry regiments have been rushed to Vienna, where extremely serious bread riots have broken out, according to advices from German sources today.

The mobs are reported to have stoned Premier von Seydler's residence and to have plundered bakeries. Establishment of martial law is declared likely.

The burgomaster has declined to guarantee a return to order, his demand for dried vegetables to make up for the lack of bread, having been refused by government officials.

London, June 20.—Heavily censored messages received in Stockholm indicate that peace demonstrations were recently held in Berlin, Hamburg and Cologne and that several workmen were killed and many persons arrested, says a dispatch to the Morning Post. The police and military dispersed crowds of demonstrants.

GERMANY CAN'T DELIVER.

Amsterdam, Wednesday, June 19.—A Vienna dispatch published in the Berlin Zeitung Am Mittag, gives an official statement of the Vienna city council on the food situation in that city. The statement reads:

"Germany promised some weeks ago in a state treaty, to undertake responsibility for the meat supply for both the civilian population and the army whether the supplies were drawn from Ukraine, Rumania or Germany's own reserve stock Deliveries at first proceeded smoothly For the last eight days, however, Germany has been in arrears of her quota."

The statement adds that urgent appeals have been sent to the German officials saying that the situation is acute particularly in munitions centers

DEMAND SPEEDY PEACE.

Amsterdam, June 21.—The Vienna city council on Tuesday, according to a dispatch received here, passed a resolution protesting against the reduction of the bread ration. The Vienna labor council after conferring for many hours on the same subject passed a resolution renewing its demand for the "speediest general peace, notwithstanding the great obstacles at present in the way of peace endeavors."

Protests against this rationing have been vehement from various quarters, the Vienna city council on Tuesday adopted a resolution of protest and the labor council in that city emphasized its protest by the passage of a resolution renewing its demand for a speedy general peace.

AUSTRIA OUT OF GRAIN.

London, June 21.—Austria's grain supplies have completely run out and such food of this nature as she is getting is coming from what German has alloted to her from the Ukrainian supplies, according to indications in a Copenhagen dispatch to the Exchange Telegraph company. This message quotes an interview with Herr Paul, the Austrian food minister, obtained by the Vienna correspondent of the Berlin Tageblatt in which the minister confirmed the news of the recent reduction in the Austrian bread ration. This, he said, was due to insufficient supplies from Bessarbaria and Hungary.

The entire 1917 harvest from these sources had been distributed and consumed, the minister stated, and the Rumanian harvest also has been used up.

ADVANCE BREAD PRICES.

Amsterdam, Wednesday, June 19.—The Berlin Vorwaerts, the German socialist organ, in announcing the increase in the price of bread to five pfennigs per pound says this price will bring the land owners 1,000,000,000 marks surplus profits and necessarily will be followed by increases in the cost of milk, butter and beef.

WHOLE COUNTRY ARGUSED.

Amsterdam, June 21.—Vienna dispatches to German newspapers say that the reduction of the bread ration in Austria-Hungary caused immense excitement throughout the dual monarchy. All Austrian newspapers without distinction of party protest against the measure, demand its removal and ask immediate help from Germany and Hungary.

BULGARIA SHORT OF FOOD.

Amsterdam, June 21.—According to the Germania, of Berlin, the food situation in Bulgaria brought about Premier Radoslavoff's resignation.

The food problem in that country, the newspaper adds, is becoming increasingly difficult. Its supplies are entirely exhausted and the nation is asking advances of grain to cover the time until the next harvest. The central powers, however, Germania declares, cannot give Bulgaria this aid to the extent desired.

WILL DEMAND PEACE.

Tempting Dessert.

Did you know that one delicious way of cooking rice for dessert is to use fruit juice to cook it in, such as you have left over from a can of fruit or stewed fruit, instead of water? Rice cooked in raspberry juice or sirup left from canned or stewed raspberries is delicious and attractive, as it takes up the color as well as the flavor. Served with cream, it makes a dainty dessert. Cook it in the proportions of one tablespoonful of raw rice to one-third or slightly more of a cupful of the juice.

MERCHANT MARINE BRINGS MARKET TO FARMERS' DOORS

Great Fleet of Ships Necessary to Haul Farm Products Abroad at Low Freight Rates.

To the farmer in the Mississippi valley, busy about his barns and outbuildings, the question of a merchant marine seems very far away.

"Why," he occasionally asks himself, "should I be interested in steamships, sailing from ports a thousand miles away? I have never been to the Atlantic seaboard. Ships, whether sailing under the United States flag or the Union Jack, concern me not at all."

There is, however, a reason, and a good reason, why the farmer should be interested in this government's efforts to put thousands of steel and wooden ships afloat as quickly as possible.

The American farmer today is growing wheat, corn, oats and other produce that must be transported abroad to supply our own armies and those of our allies in France. When the war is over the wheat, corn and oats will continue to flow toward war-stricken Europe. With thousands of ships to carry this produce, the freight rates will be correspondingly cheaper than they would be with only hundreds of bottoms available instead of thousands.

The fact that freight rates are cheaper will not, however, abate the hunger of the millions in Europe clamoring for the wheat, corn and oats. The market there will remain the same and the present loft prices will be little changed. If it costs the grain dealer less to ship abroad, he will be able to pay higher prices to the farmers.

The farmer is just as much interested in cheap freight rates as he always has been interested in cheaper freight rates on land. His market lies, not in Chicago and Minneapolis and Duluth, where a box car hauls his grain, it lies thousands of miles across the ocean where ships are carrying his produce. The farmer must help build ships and cut his freight rates to Europe.

Someone sagely remarked (and many wise men since have repeated the proverb): "In times of peace prepare for war."

Germany has improved on the proverb, or twisted it, and over in the kaiser's realm it now reads: "In times of war prepare for peace." Germany is not so intent on winning this war that she has forgotten about the peace to come. The German reichstag has agreed, as a tentative policy, on a grant of $375,000,000 to facilitate the building of merchant ships. The bill provides that the vessels shall be available within four years after peace is declared.

In other words, the German government is determined, not only to win this war, but to win commercial war to follow, by providing bottoms to carry, not only its own goods, but also the commerce of other nations whose ships it is sinking every day.

The United States government has wisely set about to frustrate this Hohenzollern move, as much a military project as the hurling of new German divisions against the French and British lines in France and Flanders. This government has instituted a shipbuilding program that will supply us with steel and wooden freighters to carry men, food, munitions and machinery to Europe in the course of the war and after peace is declared. It needs money for this great shipbuilding plan, if it is to defeat Prussianism now and after the war. The American farmer not only displays his patriotism by lending the government money to pursue its purpose, but conserves and builds his future interests.

HERE'S PLEA FROM FRONT

Lillian Gish Says You'd Buy Bonds If You Saw War Itself.

By MISS LILLIAN GISH,
[Movie Star Once in War Zone.]

If you had seen the war as I have, you would buy Liberty bonds.

I have seen a mother standing in the doorway of her little home, and in the room into which she looked were the mangled bodies of her two babes.

I have seen between two and three hundred mothers massed outside a schoolyard gate, screaming and tugging at the "Bobbies" to let them enter. In the wrecked schoolhouse were the torn and battered bodies of school children. A Hun raider had bombed them.

In London, on the Strand, I have seen row after row of stretchers bearing the broken bodies of men and women on a street strewn with shattered glass. These were civilians, not soldiers; sleeping in their homes when the building fell.

These things I have seen. I have heard all night long a terrific cannonade in the world's greatest city, the burst of shrapnel and the sound of bombs. Outside my window I have heard the cries and moans of dying human beings, victims of the enemy in the air.

This is not talk. These are things I have seen and heard; and yet I have seen and heard so little it is hardly worth talking about.

But it makes me want to buy Liberty bonds.

Everybody's Doing It.

No one in a crowd of men is so despicable as a poor spender. Don't put your hand in your pocket and keep it there. Buy Liberty bonds while others are buying.

PEOPLE OF FRANCE SUFFER FOR FOOD

Their Wheat Ration Has Been Reduced Two-Thirds But They Do Not Complain—Ours Cut Only One-Half.

If the Soldiers Do the Fighting, Cannot We Sacrifice Some of Our Luxuries in Food?

Wheat Rations.	Per cent.
For French people, cut	66
For French soldier, cut	20
For American civilian, cut	50

Amazing facts were disclosed by M. Tardieu, French high commissioner to the United States, in his address to the Southern commercial congress, emphasizing the need of increased shipments of wheat from this country to the allies.

While the food administration is asking the people of the United States to cut their wheat consumption from three pounds to a pound and a half a week or, if they will, to totally abstain from the use of wheat flour until the next harvest, the French people are on bread cards allowing only about one-third the average consumption of wheat products in that country.

Even the bread ration of the French soldier has been cut nearly 20 per cent.

Feeding horses and cattle on grains that can be used for bread has been prohibited.

By killing the live stock that cannot be fed, the French people have had meat to eat, which, in turn, has reduced their consumption of cereals.

The manufacture of pastry and biscuits and fancy bread has been prohibited in France.

Sugar consumption has been reduced 40 per cent.

Rice consumption has been reduced 61 per cent.

Imports of oils and fats have been reduced 48 per cent.

Yet the French have fought for four years. With the American soldiers and "with unconquerable steadfastness," said M. Tardieu, their army "is still holding over two-thirds of the western front."

Out of the 35,000,000 population of France, 7,000,000 soldiers have gone to the front.

Over a million men have been killed.

Over a million men have been maimed.

From March to September, 1917, France lived on 70 per cent of her normal food supply.

For months the shipment of wheat from this country has been short a third of the quantity required by our allies.

"Within the last weeks," said Commissioner Tardieu, "there have been in France agricultural districts which had for days to put up with a complete, absolute deprivation of bread. Americans, who are now sharing our burden of blood and death on the battle line, we are requesting you to share as well, in the rear, our burden of suffering."

CANADA TO EAT LESS BREAD

Cannot Make Mixed Cereal Bread and Must Do Without Usual Supply of Wheat Bread.

There are not sufficient supplies of barley, rye and oats in the Dominion to justify a regulation compelling bakers to produce a mixed cereal bread. For Canada, Victory must come through "less bread" instead of "Victory bread."

The food controller of Canada is urging Canadians to eat less bread. He asserts in a recent statement that by the end of spring, if the minimum needs of Europe are met, there will not be a single pound of wheat or flour on this continent in excess of what will be absolutely required for home consumption.

Make the Garden Count.

Aside from a moderate planting of perishable vegetables for immediate use, the substantial part of gardens should be developed to potatoes and beans.—Herbert Hoover.

THE VILLAGE POSTMASTER

How'd you like to be the postman?
Getting out of bed at five,
To make up mail for the morning train
Which sometimes don't arrive
Until four hours after due,
And meantime patrons ask:
"What makes it late? Was there a wreck?
Are you sure it hasn't passed?"

2

Then in comes all the kids from school—
The stout, the short, the frail—
They seldom send a letter out,
Yet always look for mail;
And one must search the boxes through—
The G. D. and the call,
For mail expected by these folks,
That never came at all.

3

And then again there is the man
Who never rents a box.
If you do not wait upon him quick
He goes out peeved, and knocks.
They send their letters out to Jane,
To Hank and Brother Tom,
And kick if you refuse to lick
The postage stamps thereon.

4

If parcel post does not arrive
At the time when it is due,
The local postman gets the blame,
Because it don't come through.
And sometimes when you hand out mail
To the man who has a "call,"
He'll look you in the eye and ask:
"Are you sure that this is all?"

5

Oh, the postman leads a jolly life—
That is, when he's asleep—
But the worries of his waking hours
Would make an angel weep.

Women Witnesses Criticized.

Judge Lush-Wilson, K. C., remarked at Exeter (England) county court to a woman litigant who continually interrupted: "Madam, I run the risk, I know, of criticism from your sex when I say that they are the most troublesome people I have to deal with. Why can't you women exercise the same amount of self-control in the witness-box as men have to do?"

"I took a good deal of trouble with the physical training of the little boy Edmond, whose health was not what it should be. And we also had with us, between us, the best of friends, the most devoted and affectionate counsellor, who staunched our wounds, kept up our courage, restored our gayety, and bestowed some of her trength and dignity upon our ove. Florence was there."

Don Luis felt his heart beating faster. Not that he attached the least credit to Gaston Sauverand's words; but he had every hope of arriving, through those words, at the real truth. Perhaps, also, he was unconsciously undergoing the influence of Gaston Sauverand, whose apparent frankness and sincerity of tone caused him a certain surprise.

"Fifteen years before, my elder brother, Raoul Sauverand, had picked up at Buenos Aires, where he had gone to live, a little girl, the orphan daughter of some friends. At his death he entrusted the child, who was then 14, to an old nurse who had brought me up and who had accompanied my brother to South America The old nurse brought the child to me and herself died of an accident a few days after her arrival in France. * * * I took the little girl to Italy to friends where she worked and studied and became what she is.

"Wishing to live by her own resources, she accepted a position as teacher in a family Later I recommended her to my Fauville cousins with whom I found her at Palmero as governess to the boy Edmond and especially as the friend, the dear and devoted friend, of Marie Fauville. * * * She was mine, also, at that happy time, which was so sunny and all too short Our happiness, in fact —the happiness of all three of us —was to be wrecked in the most sudden and tantalizing fashion.

"Every evening I used to write in a diary the daily life of my love, an uneventful life, without hope or future before it, but eager and radiant Marie Fauville was extolled in it as a goddess Kneeling down to write, I sang litanies of her beauty, and I also used to invent, as a poor compensation, wholly imaginary scenes, in which she said all the things which she might have said but did not, and promised me all the happiness which we had voluntarily renounced!

"Hippolyte Fauville found the diary. * * * His anger was something terrible. His first impulse was to get rid of Marie. But in the face of his wife's attitude, of the proofs of her innocence which she supplied, of her inflexible refusal to consent to a divorce, and of her promise never to see me again, he recovered his calmness. * * * I left, with death in my soul Florence left, too, dismissed. And never, mark me, never, since that fatal hour, did I exchange a single word with Marie. But an indestructible love united us, a love which neither absence nor time was to weaken."

He stopped for a moment, as though to read in Don Luis' face the effect produced by his story. Don Luis did not conceal his anxious attention. What astonished him most was Gaston Sauverand's extraordinary calmness, the peaceful expression of his eyes, the quiet ease with which he set forth, without hurrying, almost slowly and so very simply, the story of that family tragedy.

"What an actor!" he thought.

And as he thought it, he remembered that Marie Fauville had given him the same impression. Was he then to hark back to his first conviction and believe Marie guilty, a dissembler like her accomplice, a dissembler like Florence? Or was he to attribute a certain honesty to that man?

He asked:

"And afterward?"

"Afterward I travelled about. I resumed my life of work and pursued my studies wherever I went, in my bedroom at the hotels, and in the public laboratories of the big towns."

"And Mme. Fauville?"

"She lived in Paris in her new house. Neither she nor her husband ever referred to the past."

"How do you know? Did she write to you?"

"No. Marie is a woman who does not do her duty by halves; and her sense of duty is strict to excess. She never wrote to me. But Florence, who had accepted a place as secretary and reader to Count Malonyi, your predecessor in this house, used often to receive Marie's visits in her lodge downstairs.

"They did not speak of me once, did they, Florence? Marie would not have allowed it. But all her life and all her soul were nothing but love and passionate memories. Isn't that so, Florence?

"At last," he went on slowly, "weary of being so far away from her, I returned to Paris. That was our undoing. . . . It was about a year ago. I took a flat in the Avenue du Roule and went to it in the greatest secrecy, so that Hippolyte Fauville might not know of my return. I was afraid of disturbing Marie's peace of mind Florence alone knew, and came to see me from time to time. I went out little, only after dark, and in the most secluded parts of the Bois. But it happened—for our most heroic resolutions sometimes fail us—one Wednesday night, at about 11 o'clock, my steps led me to the Boulevard Suchet, without my noticing it, and I went past Marie's house.

"It was a warm and fine night and, as luck would have it, Marie was at her window She saw me, I was sure of it, and knew me; and my happiness was so great that my legs shook under me as I walked away.

"After that I passed in front of her house every Wednesday evening; and Marie was nearly always there, giving me this unhoped-for and ever-new delight, in spite of the fact that her social duties, her quite natural love of amusement, and her husband's position obliged her to go out a great deal."

"Quick! Why can't you hurry?" said Don Luis, urged by his longing to know more. "Look sharp and come to the facts. Speak!"

He had become suddenly afraid lest he should not hear the remainder of the explanation; and he suddenly perceived that Gaston Sauverand's words were making their way into his mind as words that were perhaps not untrue. Though he strove to fight against them, they were stronger than his prejudices and triumphed over his arguments.

The fact is, that deep down in his soul, tortured with love and jealousy, there was something that disposed him to believe this man in whom hitherto he had seen only a hated rival, and who was so loudly proclaiming, in Florence's very presence, his love for Marie.

"Hurry!" he repeated. "Every minute is precious!"

Sauverand shook his head.

"I shall not hurry. All my words were carefully thought out before I decided to speak. Every one of them is essential. Not one of them can be omitted, for you will find the solution of the problem not in facts presented anyhow, separated one from the other, but in the concatenation of the facts, and in a story told as faithfully as possible."

"Why? I don't understand."

"Because the truth lies hidden in that story."

"But that truth is your innocence, isn't it?"

"It is Marie's innocence."

"But I don't dispute it!"

"What is the use of that if you can't prove it?"

"Exactly! It's for you to give me proofs."

"I have none."

"What!"

"I tell you, I have no proof of what I am asking you to believe."

"Then I shall not believe it!" cried Don Luis angrily. "No, and again no! Unless you supply me with the most convincing proofs, I shall refuse to believe a single word of what you are going to tell me."

"You have believed everything that I have told you so far," Sauverand retorted very simply.

Don Luis offered no denial. He turned his eyes to Florence Levasseur; and it seemed to him that she was looking at him with less aversion, and as though she were wishing with all her might that he would not resist the impressions that were forcing themselves upon him. He muttered:

And there was something really strange about the attitude of those two men, one making his explanation in precise terms and in such a way as to give every word its full value, the other listening attentively and weighing every one of those words; both controlling their excitement; both as calm in appearance as though they were seeking the philosophical solution in a case of conscience. What was going on outside did not matter. What was to happen presently did not count.

Before all, whatever the consequences of their inactivity at this moment when the circle of the police was closing in around them, before all it was necessary that one should speak and the other listen.

"We are coming," said Sauverand, in his grave voice, "we are coming to the most important events, to those of which the interpretation, which is new to you, but strictly true, will make you believe in our faith. Ill luck having brought me across Hippolyte Fauville's path in the course of one of my walks in the Bois, I took the precaution of changing my abode and went to live in the little house on the Boulevard Richard-Wallace, where Florence came to see me several times.

"I was even careful to keep her visits a secret and, moreover, to refrain from corresponding with her except through the poste restante. I was therefore quite easy in my mind.

"I worked in perfect solitude and in complete security. I expected nothing. No danger, no possibility of danger, threatened us And, I may say, to use a commonplace but very accurate expression, that what happened came as an absolute bolt from the blue. I heard at the same time, when the Prefect of Police and his men broke into my house and proceeded to arrest me, I heard at the same time and for the first time of the murder of Hippolyte Fauville, the murder of Edmond, and the arrest of my adored Marie."

"Impossible!" cried Don Luis, in a renewed tone of aggressive wrath. "Impossible! Those facts were a fortnight old. I cannot allow that you had not heard of them."

"Through whom?"

"Through the papers," exclaimed Don Luis. "And, more certainly still, through Mlle Levasseur."

"Through the papers?" said Sauverand. "I never used to read them. What! Is that incredible? Are we under an obligation, an inevitable necessity, to waste half an hour a day in skimming through the futilities of politics and the piffle of the news columns? Is your imagination incapable of conceiving a man who reads nothing but reviews and scientific publications?

"The fact is rare, I admit," he continued. "But the rarity of a fact is no proof against it On the other hand, on the very morning of the crime I had written to Florence saying that I was going away for three weeks and bidding her good-bye. I changed my mind at the last moment; but this she did not know; and, thinking that I had gone, not knowing where I was, she was unable to inform me of the crime, of Marie's arrest, or, later, when an accusation was brought against the man with the ebony walking stick, of the search that was being made for me."

"Exactly!" declared Don Luis. "You cannot pretend that the man with the ebony walking stick, the man who followed Inspector Verot to the Cafe du Pont-Neuf and purloined his letter——"

"I am not the man," Sauverand interrupted.

"I am not that man. There is some inexplicable mistake in all this, but I have never set foot in the Cafe du Pont-Neuf. I swear it. You must accept this statement as positively true. Besides, it agrees entirely with the retired life which I was leading from necessity and from choice. And, I repeat, I know nothing.

"The thunderbolt was unexpected. And it was precisely for this reason, you must understand, that the shock produced in me an equally unexpected reaction, a state of mind diametrically opposed to my real nature, an outburst of my most savage and primitive instincts. Remember, Monsieur, that they had laid hands upon what to me was the most sacred thing on earth. Marie was in prison. Marie was accused of committing two murders! . . . I went mad.

"At first controlling myself, playing a part with the Prefect of Police, then overthrowing every obstacle, shooting Chief Inspector Ancenis, shaking off Sergeant Mazeroux, jumping from the window, I had only one thought in my head—that of escape. Once free, I should save Marie. Were there people in my way? So much the worse for them.

"By what right did those people dare to attack the most blameless of women? I killed only one man that day! I would have killed 20! What was Chief Inspector Ancenis' life to me? What cared I for the lives of any of those wretches? They stood between Marie and myself; and Marie was in prison!"

Gaston Sauverand made an effort which contracted every muscle of his face to recover the coolness that was gradually leaving him. He succeeded in doing so, but his voice, nevertheless, remained tremulous, and the fever with which he was consumed shook his frame in a manner which he was unable to conceal.

"At the corner of the street down which I turned after outdistancing the Prefect's men on the Boulevard Richard-Wallace, Florence saved me just as I believed that all was lost. Florence had known everything for a fortnight past. She learned the news of the double murder from the papers, those papers which she used to read out to you, and which you discussed with her. And it was by being with you, by listening to you, that she acquired the opinion which everything that happened tended to confirm: the opinion that Marie's enemy, her only enemy, was yourself."

"But why? Why?"

"Because she saw you at work," exclaimed Sauverand, "because it was more to your interest than to that of any one else that first Marie and then I should not come between you and the Mornington inheritance, and lastly——"

"What?"

Gaston Sauverand hesitated and then said, plainly:

"Lastly, because she knew your real name beyond a doubt, and because she felt that Arsene Lupin was capable of anything."

They were both silent; and their silence, at such a moment, was impressive to a degree. Florence remained impassive under Don Luis Perenna's gaze; and he was unable to discern on her sealed face any of the feelings with which she must needs be stirred.

"It was against Arsene Lupin, therefore, that Florence, Marie's terrified friend, engaged in the struggle. It was to unmask Lupin that she wrote or rather inspired the article of which you found the original in a ball of string. It was Lupin whom she spied upon, day by day, in this house. It was Lupin whom she heard one morning telephoning to Sergeant Mazeroux and rejoicing in my imminent arrest It was to save me from Lupin that she let down the iron curtain in front of him, at the risk of an accident, and took a taxi to the corner of the Boulevard Richard-Wallace, where she arrived too late to warn me, as the detectives had already entered my house, but in time to screen me from their pursuit.

"Her mistrust and terror-stricken hatred of you were told to me in an instant," Sauverand declared "During the 20 minutes which we employed in throwing our assailants off the scent, she hurriedly sketched the main lines of the business and described to me in a few words the leading part which you were playing in it: and we then and there prepared a counter-attack upon you, so that you might be suspected of complicity

"While I was sending a message to the Prefect of Police, Florence went home and hid under the cushions of your sofa the end of the stick which I had kept in my hand without thinking. It was an ineffective parry and missed its aim. But the fight had begun; and I threw myself into it headlong.

United States Now Is the World's Largest Exporter

From National City Bank, of New York, Bulletin.

The United States has suddenly become the world's l exporter of manufactures. Prior to the war we held third among the nations of the world as an exporter of manufactures clearly outranked in this line by Great Britain and Germany the opening of the war, however, and the suspension of Ger export trade, we took rank next to Great Britain as an exporte manufactures, and with the enormous foreign demand upon factories we have now passed Great Britain in the race, and st the head of the list of nations exporting manufactures

The world's exportations of manufactures in 1913, the l normal year in international trade were, according to the b compilation, stated in very round figures, Great Britain $2,000 000 of domestic manufactures exported; Germany $1,675,0 United States $1,099,000,000; France, $775,000,000; Belgium, ap mately $400,000,000 Austria-Hungary, $375,000,000; Italy, $27 000; Netherlands, $250,000,000; Japan, $225,000,000, Switzer $200,000,000; India, $125,000,000; Sweden, $100,000,000; C $77,000,000; Russia, $70,000,000, and Spain, $50,000,000, all of figures being in very round terms. Thus the grand total of ma tures entering international trade in the year before the war was about $8,000,000,000 ,of which the United States supplied one-eighth, or in round terms $1,000,000,000.

The chief countries which show a marked increase in export of manufactures during the war are the United States, Canada Japan. In the case of the United States the increase has especially in material for the battlefield and the use of the troops, but there has also been a large increase in exports of manufactures to the neutral world, Latin America, Asia, Oce Africa and certain countries of Europe.

The United States' export record in 1917 reached on man tured articles to $4,019,000,000—half of all the world's manufac in commerce.

Secretary McAdoo and Taxation--New Proposals

From the Bache Financial Review.

Of the problems requiring solution and affecting most importantly the ultimate value of securities as based on earnings, the problem of new taxation is the most prominent.

Secretary McAdoo has made a clear, clean cut statement which exposes the futility and the obliquity of the present law.

He does not believe sufficient economies are enforced upon the people of America by the amount of the present tax levy, and without such economies he sees no way in which the great financial operations of the government can be safely conducted.

Reform the Present Law.

A singularly forceful indictment of the present method of taxation is that in which he says that the tax rate cannot safely be made high enough under that law, because the test now is not how much of the profits are due to the war, but what relation the profits bear to the capital invested. A company with a swollen capital and huge war profits escapes.

Thus the existing excess profits tax does not always reach war profits. He says.

The one sure way is to tax away the excessive profits when they have been realized. I do not say this in a spirit of criticism of the corporations or business men of the country, who have for the most part loyally supported the government In entering into war contracts they take grave risks. They are called upon to make vast expenditures of capital for purposes which may prove unproductive after the war. They are not to be blamed, in these circumstances for asking for prices and terms which cover these risks.

On the other hand, when the risk has been liquidated by proper allowances and the contract has proved profitable, the government should take back in taxes all profits above a reasonable reward.

Of course, no one objects to reasonable profits; on the contrary, everyone should want and I am sure does want enterprise to be rewarded with reasonable or even liberal profits. Prosperity should be preserved and can be preserved, I believe, on the ba reasonable profits The proble statesmanship is to establish a relation between necessary ta and the earning power of the nat

NURSE DESIRES TO KILL A HUN

Gassing of Pet Dog on Belgian Front Arouses Baroness's Hatred of the Teutons.

London, (by mail).—The Baroness T'Serclaes and Miss Mairi Chisholm, two English women who have lived in a dugout on the Belgian front for three and a half years, caring for the Belgian troops, and who are known throughout the Belgian army as the "good women of Pervyse," recently arrived in London, suffering from the effects of a gas attack on the Belgian front in fighting there. Both have been seriously ill, but are now sufficiently recovered to be admitted to a convalescent hospital.

"We were accustomed to bombardment," said the baroness in an interview, "and our dugout has been hit 100 times since we lived there. But in this last attack the shelling was more dreadful than we have ever known.

"It was early, one morning, after a night long bombardment that we decided to venture out, knowing that there would be many wounded needing our care. While we were dressing, I heard a shell burst outside our dugout, and a moment later I found our orderly lying on the floor of the corridor. I rushed up to see I could do for him, when suddenly I felt as if a rope had been fastened around my neck.

"I could not breathe and was absolutely helpless. Miss Chisholm, too, was in agonies. My little dog, Shot, who had been with us for three years, came up and looked at me with wondering eyes, licked my hand and died. I don't think I had ever before felt that I actually hated my enemy, but ever since my dog was gassed I have longed above all else to kill a German!

"It was only about half an hour before we were taken away in an ambulance. The ambulance was smashed by a shell after a quarter of a mile, and we were picked up again and taken in a big truck to a base hospital. We were there several days before we were able to be moved to London."

The two "women of Pervyse" have been the only women who have been permitted to live and work at glian front. Hundreds of vo American and British, have be permitted to help them, but glian command would not eve a third woman at Pervyse.

In the early days they wor gle-handed, but a doctor, two bearers and a chauffeur came them later in their little casu tion. The nearest hospital is from Pervyse. Their station ways open, day and nig trival ailments as well serious wounds. Their dug made of concrete, and had a ing room, a kitchen and a s ing room. Alfalfa in New Zealand.

The raising of lucerne or alfalfa in New Zealand is receiving much attention of late, and the different varieties are being tested, with the result that there was cut during 1917 three crops of Turkestan lucerne with a yield of 6 1-5 long tons per acre of the Provence lucerne, weighing shortly after cutting 11½ tons of Peruvian per acre, 11 tons of Poitou, 11½ tons of Russian, 12 tons of Spanish, 12 1-3 tons of Hungarian, 14 tons of Patagonian, and 14¼ tons of Marlborough lucerne. It is estimated that the Patagonian and Marlborough lucerne, when converted into hay, would give an approximate yield of 3½ tons each, which at $19.46 per ton gives a total value of $68.13 per acre.

WHY WE MUST WIN THE WAR

If Conflict Ends With Conditions as at Present Germany Will Dominate, Writer Says.

He is right. Germany stands possessed of all she hoped to gain when she forced the war. She has reduced her allies to military and economic dependence. She dominates Belgium, northern France, Poland, Russia, Serbia, Montenegro and Roumania. More than 200,000,000 people are under the dictation of Prussia.

If the war ends with conditions as they are at present Germany's brutal policy of force will dominate the world.

Italy, France and Great Britain have a combined population of 118,000,000. They are much smaller in area than the Mittel-Europa empire would be, are detached from each other and confined within narrow limits on the south and west of Europe. Necessarily they would become second-class powers.

The United States, practically alone, would be left to face the aggression of a power with about twice the population, directed by autocratic rulers toward further conquest.

The Lucky Horseshoe.

When Lord French visited the little county town of Oldham to inspect the Rutland volunteers, he found time to leave a horseshoe on the castle walls. From time immemorial the lord of the manor has demanded a horseshoe from every peer of the realm on his first setting foot within the "lordship." The custom is carefully kept up, and the ever-increasing collection of horseshoes which hang on the walls of the hall of the castle numbers some 200, ranging in size from that of the ordinary racer to the Brobdingnagian proportions of a shoe seven feet long.—London Chronicle.

ROMANCE OF AN OLD MAN'S DARLING ENDS

After Three Weeks Hubby, 86, Stops Paying 18-Year-Old Bride's Bills.

New York.—It took only three weeks for James H. Hart, 86, and his 18-year-old bride to go from "Here Comes the Bride" to "I Won't Pay Her Debts." All of which goes to prove that a man who has reached the December stage of life cannot expect to be happy with a bride who is in the June of youth and frivolity. Neither will divulge the reason of their abrupt separation, but Sidney Rosenfeld, counsel for Mrs. Hart, says members of Mr. Hart's family, to whom the marriage came as a great surprise, caused all of the trouble. Meantime, Mr. Hart is warning merchants that he will not be responsible for debts contracted by his girl wife. Mrs. Hart first met Mr. Hart in a Broadway barber shop, and it was over her work table as a manicurist that she agreed to be an old man's darling.

London (by mail).—The minister of munitions has made an order to be known as the ammonia control order, 1918, directing that no person shall, as from June 1, produce or manufacture any ammoniacal or ammoniacal product except under a license. No license is to be required to manufacture (a) crude ammoniacal liquor or sulphate of ammonia in small quantities, (b) any other ammoniacal product, in quantities not exceeding half a ton, during any one calendar month.

No person shall supply any ammonia or ammoniacal product (other than crude ammoniacal liquor or sulphate of ammonia) to any person, except under a license, but no license shall be required to supply not more than 56 pounds of anhydrous ammonia during any calendar month.

All persons engaged in producing or manufacturing any ammonia or ammoniacal product or in any manufacture, trade or business in which any ammonia or ammoniacal product is used shall carry out and comply with all instructions and directions which may be issued or given by or on behalf of the minister of munitions with a view of avoiding loss or waste of ammonia.

WOMAN AGAINST GERMAN PAPERS AND TEACHERS

New York.—The American Relief legion which is composed of the "mothers and wives of the men fighting in France" adopted the following resolution:

"Whereas, The printing of newspapers, pamphlets, periodicals, etc., in the German language may be used for the dissemination of German sentiment tending to give aid and comfort to the enemy, and in any case the display of such papers on newsstands and in the stands of those who read them in public outrages the feelings of every loyal American citizen; and,

"Whereas, There are many men and women teaching the German language in our schools who are aliens, or whose loyalty to our government is questionable, therefore, be it

"Resolved, That the American Relief legion call upon the president of the United States to appeal to the congress of the United States to pass suitable laws forbidding the printing of any papers, books or pamphlets in the German language, the teaching of German in our public schools, and the employment of any man or woman who is not a citizen of the United States or whose patriotism and loyalty is questioned in any of our public schools."

ESTABLISH REFUGE FOR WILD WATER FOWL

New Orleans, La.—Jefferson Island, former home of Joseph Jefferson in Iberia parish, southern Louisiana and named by him "Bob Acres," after the character in "The Rivals," made famous on the stage by the actor, is to be developed into a sanctuary for wild fowl by Lawrence Jones and J. Lyle Bayliss, of Lexington, Ky., who recently purchased the property.

It comprises 10,000 acres. A contract has been awarded for the construction of a dam along one edge of the property in order to reestablish a cypress swamp drained some years ago. When the water accumulates it is proposed to establish an immense heronry in order that the many species of herons in Louisiana, especially the egret, may build nests and raise their young over water, as is their habit.

In addition, the new owners of "Bob Acres" have petitioned the Louisiana commission to set aside Lake Pleigneu, adjoining the property, as a wild water fowl refuge. The lake is a noted resort for ducks during the winter months and they flock there by the hundreds of thousands.

More than one-third of the land embracing Lake Pleigneu is included in "Bob Acres" and owners of other property adjoining have signified their desire to prohibit the shooting of wild fowl on the body of water. Under authority granted by the state, the conservation commission will prohibit shooting when a petition signed by all property owners is received and establish it as the first of a series of interior refuges planned during the coming year.

PRISONERS OF WAR NEAR FIRING LINE

Italian Front.—Much has been heard of prisoners of war compelled to work behind the lines of battle exposed to the fire of opposing artillery, but the story of how these men are "recruited" remained to be told by a correspondent of the Giornale d'Italia of Rome. He says: "Since Austria knows that our men dread the process of recruiting Italian prisoners followed by the Austro-Germans and that whenever it is to take place the prisoners hide in their huts, burrow in the ground, obstinately clinging to every corner of their living tombs, the Austrian commands have hit upon surprise visits by a force of armed men. They advance in extended formation and seize and take in everyone they find anywhere.

"Whenever they lay hands on a soldier he is forced to submit. There never has been a man hunt of the kind which was not attended by the shooting of some one who resisted, by bloodshed or death. It has been one of the chief causes of the rancor and hatred existing between the Italian prisoners in Austria and their captors."

MEXICAN MATCH A CURIOSITY

Is Made of Short Piece of Cotton String, With Head at Each End.

The Mexican friction match, from our point of view, is a curiosity. For one thing, it is not made of wood, but is a short piece of cotton string. Secondly, it has two heads.

There is an undeniable advantage about a match with two heads. If one fails to light there is another in reserve. But the Mexican matches, to do them justice, rarely go out. One can strike them successfully in a fair breeze.

This is because the cotton string is coated with wax. In Mexico there are factories in which such matches are turned out by ingenious machines, but billions of them are made by hand in laborious fashion, the strings being dipped with phosphorus composition by girls and boys whose wages are a few cents a day.

One match in Mexico is really two matches. Thus, when the native starts a fire or lights a cigarette with a fresh one he tucks the string back into his pocket for use next time.

First Fiction Known.

The oldest work of fiction extant is thought to be the "Tale of Two Brothers," written 3,200 years ago by the Theban scribe Ennana, librarian of the palace of King Menepthah, the supposed Pharaoh of the Exodus. The tale, it appears, was written for the entertainment of the crown prince, who subsequently reigned as Seti II. His name appears in two places in the manuscript, probably the only surviving autograph signature of an Egyptian king. This piece of antique fiction, written on nineteen sheets of papyrus in a bold hieratic hand, was purchased in Italy by Mme. d'Orbiney, who sold it in 1857 to the authorities of the British museum, where it is now known as the D'Orbiney papyrus.

Be sure to ask for the double strength Othine, as this is sold under guarantee of money back if it fails to remove freckles.—Adv.

Cutting Olive Trees Forbidden.

The felling of olive trees is forbidden by a decree published at Rome, which prohibits also the cutting of the principal branches of such trees except when pruning. It is provided that the regulations may be extended to mulberry trees and fruit trees by ministerial decree. The present decree is effective from the day of its publication until the end of the agricultural year following that in which peace is established.

Treatment of Prisoners.

There is still talk in some quarters of Wales of a German invasion. A thousand years ago, however, invasions were quite a common thing along the Welsh shores. The Vikings came and went pretty much as they pleased. They burnt and massacred in a way that would have delighted the Germans. On one occasion they burnt St. David's, and actually cooked and ate the bishop—which, no doubt, delighted the anti-church people of those days. On the other hand, when the Welsh caught a Viking they flayed him alive and nailed his skin to the church door. There was no softness with prisoners such as is exhibited today.

MR. SAMUEL HARVEY AND MISS VIVA RIDDER MARRIED

Saturday evening at nine o'clock occurred the marriage, at the home of the bride, of Mr. Mr. Samuel Ashley Harvey and Miss Viva Malinda Ridder. The marriage was a quiet home affair and only the most intimate friends of the happy couple were present at the ceremony, which was solemnized by the Rev. A. H. Meyer, of the Methodist Episcopal church.

We can hardly say that the marriage of this couple came as a surprise, for their engagement has been known to the friends of the young people for some time who now extend their congratulations.

The young people are well and most favorably known to the people of Klemme and vicinity. The bride is a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Fred H. Ridder, of this city, and is a young lady who possesses those rare qualities which go to make the best of home makers. She is also a talented pianist. The groom, Mr. Samuel Harvey, has made his home in Klemme for several years, having come here from Jersey City, N. J., where his parents now reside. He has made a large number of friends while here and who pronounce him to be a young man of high ambitions and a good fellow in general.

This happy young couple left Sunday, via. auto, for Charles City, where they will make their home for the present as the groom has a good position there in the munition department of the Hart-Parr Co.

The Times joins with the many friends of the young couple in wishing them happiness and the best there is in life.

The loss to the contractor will be about $300 or more. The wall which caved in was about fifty feet in length.

BUILD A SILO, MAKE MONEY AND SAVE FOOD

By J. F. DEEMS, United States Food Administrator for Iowa

In my judgment every Iowa farm should have a silo.

My own experience and observation have convinced me of the great value of silage; wholly aside from the fact that its value has been so thoroughly demonstrated and its importance so firmly established by long years of actual operation on farms in this and other states that there no longer is room for question or debate.

The silo is to the feed yard and the barn what the cook stove and the fruit jar are to the home. Man does not think of eating his food without preparation, and especially does he make an effort to preserve vegetables and fruits in their natural state, because much more palatable than when dried. Not only does he cook and season the foods which have not been preserved, so that they become edible and tempting to the appetite, but his constant effort is to bring to his table in the autumn and winter seasons the unaltered fruits and harvest of the springtime and summer. The reason is obvious. The same rule is applicable to the food provided for our herds, and in the silo we find the means of preserving in natural state the succulent grains which, because of their palatability, tempt the appetite and insure in increased measure the world's supply of meat and milk products.

But there is a more potent reason for the silo than this. It saves food, and that we all know is the prime necessity of this day and age. If we just husk our one hundred million acres of corn and leave the stalks in the field we lose perhaps half of the food value of the crop. If the corn in the field runs eight tons to the acre, 1¼ tons will be ears and the other 6¾ stalks and leaves. Formerly the ears were husked off and cattle were turned into the field to eat the leaves, consuming just enough of the unpalatable fodder to keep alive, while the stalks, representing the bulk of the tonnage and almost equal in food value to the corn itself, were entirely lost. Using the silo, the whole of the eight tons is saved and can be utilized for food because it is preserved with all its savory juices, providing for the manger and the feed box during the winter the identical food which the animal relishes and transforms rapidly into meat or milk in the growing seasons.

That is why is possible, and I know personally it has been done, by feeding silage, alfalfa and water to add 3½ pounds per steer per day.

We are told that there is nothing new under the sun—the Egyptians preserved fodder in immense sealed jars, Caesar built fodder vats along his highway, the Mexicans, even, have always preserved animal food in adobe vases. I think it was about 1875, the agricultural bulletins tell us, that Manly Miles of Lansing, Mich., made the first silo in America—an eight-inch pit in which fodder was covered with earth. Out of that domestic experiment has grown the practical silo of today. The farmer who has had experience with the silo appreciates its value, and it is pleasant to know that Iowa is among the half dozen states which lead in the use of this notable addition to our farm equipment. But it is even more gratifying that the Iowa State college is bending its energies to an effective and continuing campaign to put a silo on every farm in Iowa, an outcome at once of untold benefit to the agricultural industry of the state and a very material advantage to the individual farmer.

VIOLATORS OF FOOD LAWS SUFFER PENALTY

ONE IOWA MILL CLOSED FOR FIVE DAYS AND PAYS A $100 FINE TO THE RED CROSS.

Food Administrator Deems called Otto Boening, manager of the St. Ansgar (Ia.) mills, to Burlington a few days ago and confronted him with evidence that he had sold flour in excess and without substitutes. Mr. Boening admitted his guilt and voluntarily subscribed $100 to the Red Cross of Mitchell county. Administrator Deems also ordered his mill closed for five days.

The food administration will not tolerate violation of the rules and regulations. Administrator Deems has issued the following notice:

"To All Millers Manufacturing and Grinding Wheat for Wheat Flour: We are in receipt of information to the effect that millers in various parts of the state have received wheat from farmers and have issued credit due bills and are holding a certain amount of flour for the farmers to receive as they need it for their supplies.

This method of holding flour for the farmers in excess of the regular 30 days' supply as delivered to them when wheat is brought in, is a direct violation of the rules of the United States food administration. Therefore any credit due bills that you have supplied to farmers must be canceled immediately by you and such flour must be placed on the market in the regular way for distribution wherever it is needed.

"UNITED STATES FOOD ADMINISTRATION,

"By J. B. DEEMS."

ICE CREAM GOES AT SOCIALS

But Fourth Meal Must Not Be Reestablished, Says Food Administration.

Food Administrator Deems has consented to the serving of ice cream at socials, etc., but he prohibits the addition of other foods. In a statement issued a few days ago he says:

"While the food administration does not modify its opposition to the 'fourth meal,' it feels that during the next three months it may not be unwise to permit the liberal use of ice cream.

"It is desirable, however, that ice cream alone be served, at socials, etc. [illegible] tion of wheat products, for in- would be indefensible. If those who plan ice cream refreshments can be made to understand that the inclusion of additional food will be a violation of the fourth-meal rule, I think we may permit the ice cream to be served during June and July and perhaps August, without interfering with the food conservation program.

"The food administration desired to secure economy in the consumption of all kinds of meats without the reinstating of the meatless day. There is now an abundance of milk products which can well be substituted in various forms for meat. If less milk is used, less milk will be produced. Farmers will be obliged to sell their dairy cattle because of the high cost of feeding them and the failure to find a market for the product and this country will face the same conditions from which the people of Europe are now suffering. Milk is cheap animal food. There is at the present time a surplus of both cheese and butter. If these are not used an important outlet for surplus milk has been removed and milk will diminish."

Hoarding Defined.

By HERBERT HOOVER.

Any person in the United States who buys more foodstuffs than he customarily keeps at home in peace times is defeating the food administration in its purpose to secure a just distribution of food and in its great endeavors to reduce prices.

There is much insidious propaganda in the country against food saving and increased production. All opposition to production and savings is direct assistance to the enemy.

CUT OUT THE WHEAT.

KLEMME BUSINESS MEN AND CITIZENS PLAN TO HELP FARMERS

A number of business men in Klemme have started a new kind of a patriotic movement and one which is a great benefit to the farmers, and through the farmers in this way will also help to win the war. It is their plan to get out every evening as soon as the grain cutting begins and to send men out in cars to help the farmers shock their grain. The workers will leave Klemme about four-thirty or five p. m. and send 8 or 10 men to each field. In this way the farmers are assured of getting the grain shocked and out of danger of rain. Similar plans are also under way in many other towns and we want Klemme to be the first town organized for this work in the county. Let's get going now.

SURPRISE PARTY

On the evening of June 28th, the Surgical Class met at the home of Miss Hulda Johnson from where they proceeded to Mrs. Wm. Fuller's, at which place a farewell surprise was held on their instructor, Mrs. Elmer Fuller.

A most enjoyable evening was spent, after which a light luncheon was served, and all retired for the evening, wishing Mrs. Fuller good luck in her new home.

To show appreciation for her service to the class, she was presented with a beautiful sterling silver thimble, for which she promised each a piece of her handiwork.

SUGAR RATION CUT DOWN 50 PER CENT

City Customers Can Buy but Two Pounds and Rural Customers Five at One Time.

The United States food administration for Iowa has received instructions from Washington that the amount of sugar that can be sold for general consumption purposes has been reduced from five pounds in the city to two pounds, and from ten pounds in rural districts to five pounds.

In other words, the retail grocer cannot sell over two pounds of sugar at one time to city or town customers and five pounds at one time to rural or country customers, except for canning purposes, and then only when the consumer signs our regular form canning certificate.

These rules must be adhered to rigidly, as matters have come to a point that the administration announces that violators should be dealt with severely, and their supply of sugar will be immediately cut off if it is found on investigation that they have sold in quantities greater than the amounts prescribed in the foregoing.

FRENCH POTATOES TAKEN BY GERMANY

ONE OF SERIOUS LOSSES OF SPRING OFFENSIVE WAS IN POTATO LANDS.

One of France's greatest losses in the enemy's spring offensive has been 50,000 acres of land planted with potatoes by her soldiers behind the lines.

Germany announces this capture to the German people with as much acclaim as if each one of these acres had been a gun, for Germany does not have to be told the value of potatoes. She herself has reduced potato production to such a science that with less than one-tenth our area she produces five times as many potatoes as we do in the United States!

Nevertheless, with this immense potato supply, she doles out her potatoes to her people, afraid that they will waste this valuable vegetable if she allows them to have too many at a time on hand.

Potatoes vs. Bread.

Last winter in Berlin the potato ration per week per capita was 7 pounds 10½ ounces. Until the possibility of getting rich wheat supplies from Russia opened up, there was considerable agitation throughout Germany for a larger potato ration, for the German hausfrau knew if she could put plenty of potatoes on her table her family would never miss the lack of bread.

In a recent potato bulletin gotten out by the English food ministry the following suggestion and recipes are given to the patriotic English housewife. They are equally applicable, however, to American housewives who are patriotically making potatoes figure more prominently on their tables than ever before in order to do with less bread.

Never Peel Spuds.

"Potatoes," this English potato bulletin warns, "should never be peeled before cooking. Everyone who peels a potato today is doing an unpatriotic thing in wasting the nation's food and is directly helping the U-boats to starve us out.

"The best part of the potato lies next to the skin and even thin peeling wastes three to four ounces in every pound. Potatoes should, therefore (except for such dishes as Irish stew) always be boiled in their skins. If baked in their jackets a layer of the best part sticks to the skin, and is usually wasted."

The bulletin also urges the English housewife who must put up lunches for her children or husband to eat away from home to use cold cooked potatoes in her sandwiches in place of bread.

1½ lbs. cold cooked potatoes	2 oz. margarine
1-4 pint milk	3 oz. grated cheese
	Salt and pepper

Mash the potatoes and mix in the cheese. Put the margarine and milk into a saucepan and heat. Then mix thoroughly with the potatoes. Season with salt and pepper, and place large spoonfuls of the mixture in separate piles, like drop cakes on a greased tin. Bake in a quick oven 10 to 15 minutes, or till a golden color.

USE MORE SAUER KRAUT IN IOWA

Food Administrator Deems Is Anxious That Prejudice Against Name Be Eliminated.

Food administrator Deems of Iowa has issued a statement urging the people to use more sauerkraut. It is very good food and the enlarged use of it and other vegetables will materially help the food conservation program. It has been found that people are giving up sauerkraut because they think the name is German. In fact it is of Dutch (Holland) origin.

THE KLEMME TIMES

RAY A. JORGENSON, PUB.

KLEMME, IOWA

The sheep of the western islands of Scotland are almost as stylish as the dogs that ride in automobiles on our own Fifth avenue in New York city. The canine aristocrats have occasional cavities in their teeth filled with gold, but the Scottish sheep have their entire set gold plated before they have any chance to decay. The gold plating is due to gold dust in the soil. As early as 1536 Hector Boece, bishop of Aberdeen, speaks of the remarkable appearance of the sheep that roam "the golden mountain" in central Aberdeenshire. Their wool is yellow, their flesh is red, flecked as it were with saffron, and their teeth are the hue of gold, he says.

A shabbily dressed little woman entered the State Savings bank at Oakland, Cal., and made her first payment on a $50 Liberty bond. "My husband and I have only one pair of glasses between us and this money was to have bought another pair," she said as she tendered the deposit. "I don't read much more, for my husband feels that he needs the glasses during the day while he is at work, and at night he likes to look over the paper He tells me the news, though, and I can see that we all have to get in and help if we want to win."

The period of enlistment in the regular naval service is ordinarily four years, at present it is or the duration of the war The period of enrollment in the naval reserves is four years but members are called into active service only in a national emergency such as this war In times of peace members are only called to perform three months' service at sea during four years, in order that they may keep in touch with ship routine, drills, regulations, etc.

Babies are the most popular things in Bartlesville, Okla., according to Mrs. C. L. Kellam, matron of the Provident association. Recently she had a baby under her charge to adopt She announced it in the local paper The next day five women were on hand at her office at 8 o'clock. They passed the entire morning at her office, arguing as to which one should get the child During the day more than 100 telephone calls were made of Mrs Kellam, wanting particulars about the baby.

Watchful officials on Peaks island, Me., discovered intermittent flashes of light from one of the cottages. The investigators decided they could decipher part of the code and finally raided the cottage. The owner seemed entirely taken by surprise and shortly explained the mysterious flashes by showing how the wind had played through an open window with the curtain, now causing the light to show and again cutting it off.

As a fair illustration of the rabbit pest in certain portions of New Zealand, and especially in the drier sections of the South island, it is stated that on the estate lately taken over by the New Zealand government, comprising 12,446 acres of freehold and pastoral run of 19,250 acres, there were killed or captured about 120,000 rabbits in order to clear up the property so as to make it suitable for the location of returned soldiers.

The shipments of Siamese products to the United States for 1917 amounted in value to only $190,079, against $195,262 in 1916 and $434,122 in 1915. The decrease may be accounted for principally by the congestion of ransshipments at the Asiatic ports Hong-Kong and Singapore.

NO RESTRICTION ON SMALL FIREWORKS

Council Bluffs, Ia., June 28.—J. J. Hughes, United States explosive inspector for Iowa, has outlined what fire works may be used on the Fourth os follows:

In order to prevent explosives from falling into disloyal hands, the government has enacted an Explosive Act, requiring everyone who buys or sells explosives or ingredients thereof, to procure a license.

The term "explosives" includes certain varieties of fire works. The government favors the sale and use of fire works and the early patriotic training instilled by harmless fire works need not vary from former years. President Wilson has declared that he would be very sorry to see the Fourth of July celebrations omitted this year of all years.

However, some precautions are necessary. Fire works which may be bought as heretofore by anybody and without license are as follows:

Chinese fire crackers, American fire crackers, toy torpedoes, serpent, sparklers, or toy paper caps, when retailing for not more than 10 cents per package. There may be some harmless fire works not mentioned in the above list, and, so long as there is a disposition on the part of the dealers and purchasers to observe the law, no trouble will arise from the sale or purchase of any harmless fire works retailing for not more than 10 cents.

Fire works not outlined above may be sold to persons of 16 years of age or over, and each purchaser of such fire works must obtain a purchaser's license of the local licensing agent. This license must be produced each time a purchase is made.

Fireworks that may be sold without a license must be sold for 10 cents or less. The number of 10 cent packages is not limited.

If you live in a county seat, the licensing officer will be found in the court house, either the county clerk or county attorney, or county auditor. In other cities and towns the licensing officer is usually a justice of the peace. The fire works dealers will be able to advise where a license may be secured.

CHARGE RAILROADERS STOLE GOVERNMENT COPPER

Council Bluffs, Ia., June 28.—Orville Goodwin, Albert Blake and Jesse Heller, Wabash railroad switchmen, were today bound over to the federal court in the sum of $5,000 each for hearing on a charge of wholesale theft from railroad cars. In the arrest of these men, federal officials think they have uncovered a scheme of large proportions for the larceny of government shipments of copper. The arrests were made in the Wabash yards.

The men are charged with the theft of more than $5,000 worth of copper, at this time but it is believed that considerable more will be brought to light after a thorough investigation. A large quantity of copper in 400-pound bars was obtained at the time of the arrest. Sales of considerable magnitude are said to have been made in this immediate vicinity and it is thought the plan contemplated large sales in other cities.

DEMANDED RECOGNITION FOR THEIR FIRE CHIEF

Cedar Rapids, Ia., June 28.—When the new central fire station was accepted by the city Saturday a bronze tablet was screwed to the wall bearing the names of the mayor and councilmen, architect and contractor, but did not have the name of fire chief Mohrbacher who had assisted in designing the building and has been on the department a quarter of a century.

The chief was not invited to the ceremonies incident to accepting the new building Saturday and the committee representing firemen appeared before the city council with a statement that unless the tablet was removed or the chief's name added the firemen would refuse to use the building. The council ordered the tablet removed at once. It is claimed the acts were deliberate attempts to belittle the chief because of friction between him and Martin Evans, commissioner of public safety

FARMER ACUSED OF BADLY TREATING CHILDREN

Fremont, Neb., June 28.—Responding to the request of three neighbors, that officers be sent hurriedly to the home of Ora Cleaver in the east part of the county, J. C. Clark county attorney and W. A. Lowry, deputy sheriff, rushed by automobile to the vicinity indicated. There they found indignant neighbors threatening a "rope party" because of alleged brutality on the part of Oro Cleaver toward Bernhardt Hagg, age 8, and Ada McConnell, age 12. The children were recently adopted by Cleaver from an orphanage at Lincoln. Cleaver was arrested and later released on his own recognizance. The children said that Cleaver insisted upon them weeding 100 rows of onions 65 feet long every day and whipped them when they failed. A black eye and broken tooth were claimed by the boy to have resulted from his punishment. The girl exhibited welts and broken skin on her back. A hearing will be given Cleaver.

AN IOWA HOTEL IS DESTROYED BY FIRE

Blaze Originating In Horse Sales Barns Burned Two Valuable Animals.

Corning, Ia., June 27.—The large sale barn occupied by Dr. R. F. Readhead, veterinarian, caught fire in the top of the haymow and was soon consumed. The wind carried the flames to the old Lindell hotel across the street south from the livery barn, and that building was soon burning. The hotel was a large frame one and made an intense fire. Some of the equipment was carried out before the building was demolished, but the loss will be heavy.

In the sale barn four head of valuable horses were burned. The building was a frame one, very dry, and there was a large quantity of hay stored in the mow. It is rumored that the hay had been piled up to an electric light wire in the top of the building, which caused the fire.

MERCHANT POLICEMAN KILLED BY ROBBERS

Council Bluffs, Ia., June 26.—Elcaney Townsend, aged 50, merchants' night policeman, was shot and killed by burglars who were making a raid on the Woolworth 10 cent store here. Three of the burglars were in the store and two were on guard in an alley where entrance had been made to the store. Apparently Townsend surprised the two men in the alley and probably was trying to overpower them when one of the robbers secured Townsend's gun, held it against his side and fired. A large hole was torn entirely through the body and the flesh was burned by the heavy charge.

The shot awakened James Bradley, living nearby, and he and Ben King, undertaker, were soon on the spot. They saw the three men emerge from the store by a fire escape and the five entered a large touring car and escaped, although a policeman on another beat who heard the shot was quickly on the scene and central office had been notified and had a detail of men hurried to the place. A safe had been dragged from the front part of the store to the rear and then taken to the basement, where an attempt had been made to open it. Manager Price, of the store, says nothing whatever was secured by the thieves. Policemen Townsend had only recently been appointed. He left no family.

HIS DEATH CAUSED BY A LIVE WIRE

Stanton, Ia., June 27.—Investigation of the death of Axel Flood, aged 27, who was found dead along the Burlington railroad right of way four miles east of Stanton, revealed an unusual circumstance. The only mark upon Flood's body was a burn on the head.

There is a deep cut at the point where the body was found and there is a narrow strip of ground between the fence and the cut. The high powered transmission line of the Red Oak Electric company runs through the cut. One of the poles had been burned down, had fallen toward the tracks and rested on the fence, leaving the live wire only five or six feet from the ground. Circumstances indicated that Flood was walking a long and looking down, as he had been gathering wild strawberries, and that his head came in contact with the wire.

NOTED CATHOLIC PRELATE IS DEAD

Archbishop J. J. Keane, Retired, Gives Up Battle After Long Illness.

Dubuque, Ia., June 24.—The Most Rev. John Joseph Keane, former rector of the Catholic University of America and retired archbishop of Dubuque, died early today. The funeral will be held next Wednesday.

He was a native of Ballyshannon, Ireland. He came to the United States in 1848, and received all of his education here.

He took the degree of A. B. from St. Mary's seminary, Baltimore, of A. M. in 1865, and S. T. B. in 1866 from the same institution.

In addition to the scholastic honors, he has been given three honorary degrees, D. D. from Laval college in 1889, and from Manhattan college in 1892, and LL. D. from Harvard in 1893.

Ordained a priest in 1866, he became assistant pastor of St. Patrick's church in Washington, D. C., and later consecrated bishop of Richmond, Va.

He was transferred to the titular see of Jasso in 1888 and was elevated to the dignity of archbishop of Damascus in 1897.

Archbishop Keane, while he as a rule confined his activities to strictly church work, a few years ago took a leading part in the suppression of intemperance, in Dubuque and northeast Iowa river towns with the result that for the first time in history saloons in this and other river towns observed state saloon regulations.

Because of declining health he retired from active church work some years ago, being succeeded by the present Archbishop J. J. Keane, who is no relative. In later years after regaining his health in a measure, the retired prelate had no regular church assignment but was kept busy most of the time filling special assignments.

In his private life deceased was most democratic. He liked the great out doors and mornings and evenings in good weather was accustomed to take long walks over the Mississippi river bluffs and far into the country, unattended. He used a walking stick not as a support, and walked with long strides and did not appear to tire easily.

CATHOLIC PRIESTS TO USE ENGLISH LANGUAGE

Dubuque, Ia., June 24.—Archbishop James J. Keane, of the Dubuque diocese, embracing several states in the middle west, delivered an address to the Catholic clergymen in retreat at Dubuque college here yesterday, urging a policy of unswerving loyalty to the administration and thoroughgoing cooperation with every movement inaugurated by the government for the successful prosecution of the war. He exhorted each pastor to become a self appointed agent in his particular district to carry out every measure of the government for the conservation of food.

The archbishop urged the pastors of all congregations where foreign languages have been spoken to act in the spirit of Governor Harding's proclamation, restricting the use of such languages to cases of real necessity. He encouraged the practice already widely established of singing church hymns only in English.

He paid a compliment to the clergy of the archdiocese, representing as it does many different nationalities, for their devotion to the country's welfare, and urged upon them highest ideals of patriotism as the law of their thoughts and action in the nation's present emergency. He insisted upon complaince with all governmental measures as an obligation in conscience, binding every citizen of the United States regardless of his station or origin.

PREACHER PERSISTS IN USE OF GERMAN

Waterloo, Ia., June 24.—Rev. Henry Prekel, pastor of Emmanuel Lutheran church, this city, hurled defiance at the judge advocate's court, the branch of the local service league. He stated he would continue to preach sermons at his church in the German language on a 50-50 basis. This he did last Sunday, which caused him to be hauled up before Judge Platt, of the judge advocate's court.

He stated he has had the authority from Gov. W. L. Harding, and produced a letter which appeared to have been tampered with, the word "preaching" being converted into the word "preaching." He denied changing the word, but asserted it was in this wording when he received it.

It also developed at the hearing another Lutheran church, of near Cedar Fall, has been preaching in German entirely. However, the Waterloo minister uses one-half English and one-half German.

The court did not take any action today, but developments are expected and an effort will be made to prevent the local minister from using German.

Paris In War Zone Is Still Gay As Ever

BY FRED S. FERGUSON,
United Press Staff Correspondent.

Paris, June 27.—The official order that Paris has been placed in the army zone means more to Americans than a mere passing notice. It means that America's "Washington of Europe" is the war zone.

From the offices occupied by Americans throughout the city to the sky where American aviators are on guard day and night, the heart of France beats with the heart of America.

War is the only thought of Paris, but the broad, shaded boulevards, the shop windows displaying feminine finery, the beautiful women and the uniformed men thronging the streets bespeak everything but the war zone. The city has the appearance of a vast park, with sunlight streaming down on the crowds, the sidewalk cafes and taxicabs and military automobiles hurrying about.

Sitting on benches or strolling in the moonlight along the Champs-Elyses are American boys—some fresh from the trenches, others newcomers with French girls on their arms. Their voices drift to the air like the whispering of lovers in shaded lanes at home.

British, French, Belgian, Australian, Italian, Portuguese and Canadian officers, and soldiers of all democracies of the world mingle with Americans, bent on the same mission—to save the city that is the symbol of all that is best in the world from the crushing power of barbarism, typified by the boche.

ENLARGED ARMY PLAN OUT SOON

Senate Drops Pending Legislation After Baker and March State Project Not Matured.

WILL PROVIDE NEW DATA

Class 1, Numbering 3,300,000, Will Be Exhausted By July Calls—New Legislation Sidetracked.

By United Press.

Washington, D C., June 27.—The war department is planning to call 877,000 men between August 1 and January 1, next, Senator Chamberlain told the Senate this afternoon.

The calls by months follow.
August 300,000
September, 150,000
October, 150,000
November, 150,000
December, 125,000

BY ASSOCIATED PRESS.

Washington, D. C., June 27.—After Secretary Baker and General March, chief of staff had opposed revisions of draft ages limits and announced that within 60 or 90 days the war department would submit to congress a new and enlarged army program, the Senate military committee today decided to oppose any legislation to change the draft ages

Senator Hitchcock, of Nebraska, gave figures stating that in August when the final call on men in Class 1 will have exhausted that class, there will be 3,300,000 men in the army and that the highest estimate of the number of American troops that will be in France by that time is 1,450,000

To Use Maximum Power.

No definite figures on the enlarged program were presented It is impossible at present, the officials said, to give any accurate statements but the government proposes to exert its maximum power in the war

Studies are being made of the problems of training clothing, transportation and feeding men, all of which are to be covered in detail in the new program under the authority which would be given the president in the army bill to call as many men to the colors as can be trained equipped and transported.

Secretary Baker, General March and General Crowder, it was stated, all opposed the amendment by Senator Johnson, of California, proposing that in future draft calls, states which have already furnished by voluntary enlistments an excess over their quotas shall be given credit for such excess. Senator Johnson was satisfied with the statement that the present system without credits is fairest and planned not to press his amendment

To Present Plans Soon.

In asking that the draft legislation go over for the present Secretary Baker and General March said that within 60 or 90 days, probably about the middle of August after the proposed recess of congress, the administration will submit a new comprehensive army program covering not only the number of men it is proposed to raise but also dealing with shipping and other problems

Secretary Baker said an "enlarged" program for the army is planned in a formal statement made after he had been closeted with the committee for nearly three hours with his aids.

"I presented to the committee statements," said Mr Baker, "that for the present there are enough men in Class 1 sufficient for our prospective needs and when the enlarged program of the United States is ready for presentation to congress we will at the same time have complete data on which to base any recommendations for change in the age limits of the draft"

Chamberlain To Explain.

Chairman Chamberlain prepared to make a statement to the Senate in connection with the amendments to the pending army appropriation bills of Senators Fall, of New Mexico and Hitchcock, of Nebraska, which respectively proposed making the age limits 20 to 40 years instead of 21 to 31

When the war department's enlarged program is submitted, members said the committee which virtually is a unit in favor later of extending the draft age limits, also plans to prescribe by legislation regulations regarding the classes of men who shall "work or fight", such regulations, it was said, probably would extend the "work or fight" principle.

YANKS TAKE OVER ANOTHER SECTOR

U. S. Troops Holding New Part of Front Line In German Alsace, Relieving French.

BY FRANK J. TAYLOR.
United Press Staff Correspondent.

With the American Armies in France, June 27.—An American unit has taken over a new sector in German Alsace, it is now permissible to announce. Already it has repelled several minor German raids.

This new sector is in the vicinity of Gebweiler. The line runs through an extremely rugged territory of mountains, deep ravines and dense forests. It is the third sector taken over by the Americans in Alsace and the second in German territory.

Details are now available of the German raid on the American lines north of Baccarat Sunday night.

The Germans laid down two heavy box barrages, completely surrounding two Franco-American outer positions. Simultaneously enemy planes bombed Badonville rand Neuviller, to the north.

During the barrage two groups of German infantry, each numbering more than 150, attacked the French and Americans who had been cut off. In one of the positions the Americans failed to give a foot, although they were outnumbered three to one. They fought until practically every one of them were casualties. Most of them received wounds that will incapacitate them only temporarily.

The other group of boches penetrated a village and took a few French and American prisoners. They fled before a counter attack.

On the west front the Germans are heavily bombarding the American positions, throwing large quantities of gas into Bois De Jury, Bois De Remieres, and other sectors.

MONTENEGRAN KING WAS NOT RECOGNIZED

Rome (by mail).—One haughty hotel porter of Rome was humbled on the occasion of the recent visit of King Nicholas of Montenegro to his daughter, Queen Helena, of Italy. "Uncle Nichclas," as he likes to be called by the people of Rome, came incognito and wore a plain business suit, instead of his national costume. Calling at one of the leading hotels, the king asked the porter to take him to the Baron Romano Avezzano, formerly Italian minister to Montenegro.

"Who shall I say wants to see the baron?" casually inquired the porter, looking at the white haired old king with the haughty stare of porters who are trying to protect distinguished persons.

Iowa to Furnish More Than 17,000 Yanks During July—Large Number of Negro Troops Are Drafted.

NEED YOUTHS OF 21 SOON

New Draftees to Be Moved In Four Sections to Facilitate Transportation to Cantonments.

Washington, D. C., June 27.—White and colored draft registrants numbering 125,525 were summoned to the colors for general military service in a call issued today by Provost Marshal General Crowder. Mobilization will take place at intervals during July starting with the entrainment of 33,259 white selected men on July 5.

Today's call combined with that for 220,000 to be mobilized July 22-25 ordered by General Crowder last night and with the various special calls previously issued will remove from civilian life during July 367,961 men, the largest number of men summoned in any one month since the draft became operative.

The call issued today is divided into four sections for entrainment purposes. From July 5 to 9, white registrants numbering 33,259 are to be entrained; from July 15 to 19, whites, 21,255; July 16 to 20, colored, 45,000, and from July 29 to 31, colored, 25,011.

Although the order issued last night for 220,000 men probably will deplete the present availables in Class 1, in most of the draft districts, it was pointed out that the bulk of men called for July will not go to camp until after the middle of the month and by that time it is expected the additions gained by reclassification and by the new registration of 21 year old youths will be available.

ALLIES SPOT HUN PLAN TO LOOT RUSSIA

Washington to Pay No Attention to "Peace" Remarks By Von Kuehlmann and Chancellor Hertling.

NEUTRALS SEE NEW HOPE

Queen of Holland May Take Initiative In Peace Move—Germany to Keep Out of League of Nations.

By Associated Press.

Apparently Germany has given up hope of reaching a decision on the field of battle, if the speech of Foreign Secretary Von Kuehlmann is an indication. He declared that peace must come through negotiations and said that the appearance on European fronts of soldiers from overseas had made this necessary. The secretary could give no idea of when the war would end. His effort was received coldly by the reichstag.

By United Press.

Amsterdam, June 27.—Foreign Minister von Kuehlman's first speech in the reichstag was received so unfavorably that he made a second one, according to advices received here today.

After the second speech, Chancellor von Hertling declared that Von Kuehlmann's utterances must not be interpreted as meaning that Germany's defensive intentions will paralyze her actions now, or that confidence in victory is shaken.

BY CARL D. GROAT,
United Press Staff Correspondent.

Washington, D. C., June 27.—Von Kuehlmann's latest peace offensive is regarded officially here like its predecessors—unacceptable and insincere.

State department and other authorities gave it scant thought or discussion. They did make it clear, though, that the United States will not hearken for a moment to such an apepal, which apparently has the plunder of Russia as its foundation.

As predicted a few days ago by the United Press, this latest peace offensive is intended evidently to lay the ground work for concessions in the west, provided Germany could have a free hand in the east.

Its attempt to lay the blame of starting the war upon Russia is considered a palpable foundation for a drive to annex Russia as a Teuton territory or exploit it under German control.

NEUTRALS TO START MOVE.

London, June 27.—Neutral leaders may seize upon the recent speeches of Foreign Secretary Balfour and Foreign Minister Von Kuehlmann as an excuse for proposing mediation, according to an Amsterdam dispatch to the Express today.

"It is understood that as a result of the Balfour and Von Kuehlmann speeches being considered as an invitation for neutral mediation, proposing a reasonable peace, the queen of Holland, the kings of Spain and Scandinavia, the president of Switzerland, or the governments of those countries, may soon offer mediation," the dispatch said. "Neutral leaders already have conferred on the subject."

HINT OWN WEAKNESS.

Amsterdam, June 27.—There will be no further discussion of President Wilson's four principles of a basis for general peace by Count von Hertling, the imperial German chancellor.

This announcement was made by the chancellor in the reichstag in the debate after the speech of Foreign Secretary von Kuehlmann. Proposal of a league of nations after the war is not looked upon with favor by Count von Hertling, who intimated that such a league might make it uncomfortable for Germany.

"I originally had no intention of taking part in this debate," said the chancellor. "The reasons for my contemplated reserve are obvious; namely, the experience I have had, together with my predecessors in previous speeches.

Couldn't Fool Allies.

"If we spoke our willingness for peace, that was regarded as a symptom of weakness and our immediately impending collapse. By others it was interpreted as a crafty trap.

"Did we speak on the other hand of our unshakable will to defend ourselves in a war conquest so criminally thrust upon us, it was said that it was the voice of German militarism to which even the leading statesmen must submit willy-nilly."

"I went a step farther on February 24 and expressly stated my attitude toward the message of President Wilson in which he discussed his four points and gave, in principle, my assent to them. I said that these four points of President Wilson might possibly form the basis of a general world peace. No utterance of President Wilson whatever followed this, so that there is no object in spinning any further threads there started.

"There is still less object, after statements which have since reached us, especially from America. These statements, indeed, made it really clear what is to be understood from a peace league of peoples or a league of peoples for the maintenance of freedom and justice.

"Our opponents made it clear that they would be the kernel of this league of peoples and that it would in this way not be difficult to isolate the uncomfortable upward strivings of Germany and by economic strangulation to extinguish her vital breath. I considered it as against this quite proper that the foreign secretary make a statement on the details of our political position in the east from Finland to the Black sea, and in my opinion he fulfilled the task thoroughly."

"On the other hand," continued Von Hertling, "some of his statements were given a more or less unfriendly reception in wide circles."

mission Huns Can't Win To Weaken Teuton Morale

BY J. W. T. MASON,
United Press War Expert.

York, N. Y., June 27.—The government has confessed reichstag that Von Hinden- cannot win the war for the empires.

is by far the most signifi- declaration in Foreign Minis- Kuehlmann's speech. His ent that peace cannot be on the battlefield but must by negotiation, is destined to far reaching consequences German morale. The German were led to believe that the ual slaughter of German man during the four western this spring would end with a Teutonic victory. that Von Kuehlmann has the naive admission that cannot be gained by such there must eventually be a ed reaction in Germany decline of Hindenburg's tion among his own people, lated by future historians Von Kuehlmann's revelation reichstag. It is difficult to w Hindenburg will be justi- ordering another offensive, er calls on the German people sacrifice themselves anew to the allies' lines must here- be associated with Von Kuehlmann's confession that peace cannot be won on the battlefields

Without naming the United States, Von Kuehlmann pointedly indicated that American troops are the obstacle to Germany's battlefield success. This he does by attributing the impossibility of a military decision to the number of powers engaged, "including the one from overseas." The inference is very plain. Von Kuehlmann has no wish to admit openly that Germany has ruined herself by forcing America into the war; yet, he is compelled to make known to the leaders of German public opinion exactly how the situation stands. For this reason he has adopted the method of verbal suggestion.

Germany is not yet beaten; but the German government has gone further than ever before in admitting that the German army cannot win. Whatever Hindenburg may do, and however the kaiser may boast, Von Kuehlman's speech means Germany henceforth can only cling to the defensive The German government's sole purpose now is to save what it can from the wreck of the war That is why Von Kuehlmann uses vague generalities about "historic boundaries" in describing Germany's peace terms

No. 9

Because Germany, Having Split the World in Half Is Now Trying to Devour the Halves

By CLARENCE L. SPEED,
Secretary of the War Committee of the Union League Club of Chicago.

We are fighting Germany, for one thing, because Germany, having split the world in half, is now seeking to devour the halves separately. She has driven a wedge straight through the heart of Europe, and into Asia, and is seeking to extend it to the Persian gulf.

This is no accidental happening, due to the downfall of Russia and the sudden shifting in the fortunes of war. Germany planned it all decades ago. She made no effort to keep the plans secret. She told us all about it. She had a reputation for making plans and sticking to them, from one generation to another; yet the world paid no attention. It seemed too preposterous even for Germany to attempt.

As long ago as 1895 a pamphlet, "Pan-Germany and Central Europe About 1950," was published in Berlin and had wide circulation. It laid the whole Mitteleuropa plan bare as follows:

"Poland and Little Russia (the kingdom to be established at Russia's expense) will agree to have no armies of their own, and will receive in their fortresses German and Austrian garrisons. In Poland, as well as in Little Russia, the postal and telegraph services as well as the railways will be in German hands."

In 1911 Tannenberg's book, "Greater Germany" was published. This was only three years before the war, but it showed that the idea of a German Mitteleuropa had not been allowed to languish. It says:

"The new kingdom of Poland is made up of the former Russian portion of the basin of the Vistula, and of Galicia, and forms a part of the new Austria."

How the plan has grown since then! Russia's collapse dropped whole provinces into the lap of the kaiser, and now Germany plans its empire on a scale which would dwarf that of ancient Rome. It is to embrace the original Central Europe, inhabited by some 73,000,000 Germans, make the Black sea a German lake, and extend clear to the Persian gulf through the vassal states of Bulgaria and Turkey.

The German government started to put its scheme for a Mitteleuropa into effect years ago when it began the construction of the Berlin-to-Bagdad railway. Little Serbia stood in the way, so Serbia was attacked and the world was plunged into war. In the opposite corner of Europe Belginm was invaded and crushed. The world then thought that this was only because Belgium offered the easiest route to France; but study of the Mitteleuropa plan of years ago shows that Belgium was included in the scheme of conquest.

"How does all this affect America?" one may ask. Germany was a late comer in the family of great nations. Most of the uncivilized world had been pre-empted by other nations before she arrived. Germany wanted colonies. To get them she would have to take them away from someone else.

Africa and South America offered the best fields for German colonization. England possessed the best part of Africa—the parts in which the white man might hope to settle and thrive. England had a mighty fleet, and a disposition to hold what she had, even though she did not show a disposition to fight for more.

There remained South America. It was divided among weak nations. It was protected only by the Monroe doctrine. This Monroe doctrine was a sacred thing to Americans, but, not being backed up by mighty armies and fleets, was not even a "scrap of paper" to the Germans. Can anyone doubt, should Germany succeed in welding into a mighty empire the 73,000,000 Germans and the 100,000,000 inhabitants of the vassal and conquered states of her Mitteleuropa, that her next step would be toward the west? The very fact that she had this empire would presuppose the defeat of England, so that no British fleet would stand between us and Germany when the time came for the kaiser to send his legions across the Atlantic.

"As in the East, so in the West," is a motto which, of recent weeks, has been much heard in Germany. At a conference of the national liberal party, held in March of this year, the following amazingly frank declaration was made:

"Our policy has been directed to making the government and majority turn away from the reichstag resolution of July 19. (Peace without annexations and indemnities). In that we have succeeded. Peace has just been made in the East under conditions in flat contradiction to the policy of July 19, and has received the support and assent of all the burgeois parties."

In other words, all Germany is now planning both annexations and indemnities, such as will leave her without a formidable opponent in the world.

Can we make peace now and leave Germany, flushed with victory, in possession of all she has gained and lusting for further conquest? If we did, would not the whole world live in perpetual terror of German aggression, each country awaiting its turn to be gobbled up? Can any red-blooded American talk about peace without victroy, victory so decisive that Germany will be forced to disgorge all it has seized, and the German menace be removed from the world forever?

OUR RATION OF BEEF IS CUT WEEKLY

We Can Eat Only a Pound and a Quarter a Week Until September 15.

By HERBERT HOOVER.

To the Public:

The demands for beef for our army and the allied armies and their civil populations for this summer are beyond our present surplus. On the other hand, we have enough increased supply of pork this summer to permit economical expansion in its use. It will therefore be a direct service to our army and the allies if our people would, in some degree, substitute fresh pork, bacon, hams and sausages for beef products.

We request all hotels and restaurants not to place on their menus or serve boiled beef more than two meals weekly, beefsteak more than one meal weekly, and roast beef more than one meal weekly.

We ask householders not under any circumstances to buy more than one and one-quarter pounds of clear beef weekly, or one and one-half pounds, including the bone, per person in the household.

The public will realize that the changing conditions of production from season to season, the changing situation in shipping, and therefore of the markets available to the allies, and the increasing demands for our growing army, with the fluctuating supply of local beef in France, all make it impossible to determine policies for long periods in advance.

We have recently asked for economy in all meat consumption. We wish now to emphasize a further reduction of beef, etc. It is anticipated that it will hold good until September 15th, 1918, and the co-operation of the public is most earnestly requested.

WHEAT IS NOT AN ESSENTIAL

State Medical Secretary Issues a Statement for the Food Administration.

Dr. Guilford H. Sumner, secretary of the Iowa department of health and medical examiner of the state, agrees with the other health experts who have assured Herbert Hoover and Food Administrator Deems of Iowa that wheat flour is not essential to the diet in order to preserve health and maintain strength. In a statement issued recently Doctor Sumner said, in part:

"Wheat is not the most nutritious substance which can be obtained, and any of the cereals, such as oatmeal, barley and rye may be substituted. In animals, as, for instance, in the horse, the same facts may be observed: The English race horses, well fed with oats, present a contrast to the puny Hungarian farm horses fed principally with hay.

"The people of this country have learned to live upon fine flour, and I have noted this for some time, that some of the elements which are very nutritious are taken away from the wheat and the amount of nutrition given is not what might be expected or what we ought to have.

"I believe that we could eat large quantities of rice as a substitute for wheat.

"I might say in this connection that it would be well to advise the use of milk, cottage cheese, for the dairy products are natural food elements and can be relied upon for human sustenance; therefore, allow me to state that the people of the United States could live a year if necessary without wheat entirely."

MUST BUILD FOOD RESERVE

Mr. Hoover Points Out Necessity of Continuing Our Conservation of Food After Harvest.

By HERBERT HOOVER.

"At a meeting of the federal food administrators in Washington, representing all 48 states, it was the unanimous view that even if the harvest does prove abundant it will be the first duty of the American people to place every grain they can save into storage as against possible bad years ahead. In consequence there should be no anticipation of unlimited wheat bread until the war is over.

Some of the most inconvenient restrictions can no doubt be modified with the arrival of a large harvest, but if we are honest with ourselves we will maintain restrictions, requiring the use of some substitutes both domestic and commercial; we will continue the requirements of high milling extraction and the elimination of the nonessential use of and waste in flour and bread.

"It is worth remembering that the famine in Egypt 8,000 years ago was stayed by governmental foresight and it does not require any illuminating dream to anticipate that so long as the war lasts, with its increasing drafts for soldiers and munition workers, the world will steadily produce less food. If we are wise a great harvest will mean the willing building up of great national reserves."

The maximum price at which farmers may sell cattle for slaughter in Switzerland has been fixed at 23 cents per pound on the farm. Maximum prices for meats have also been established.

Every producing farm is a dynamo of victory.

HAVE ONLY A THIRD OF WHEAT WE NEED

HOOVER TELLS THE PEOPLE MUST CUT CONSUMPTION OF WHEAT FLOUR TWO-THIRDS.

By HERBERT HOOVER.

Recent press dispatches widely circulated through the country have given the wholly false impression that there is no longer need for rigorous conservation of wheat and flour. The food administration declares that every aspect of the wheat situation, both present and prospective, intensifies the need for the greatest possible limitation in the American consumption of wheat and wheat products. If present restrictions should be in the slightest degree relaxed, it would result in serious want for the people of Europe before the new crop can reach the market.

The food administration's estimate of the position on the first of June indicates a total available supply until the new harvest, including the grain which will be available from the farms in country and terminal elevators and mill elevators, of about 56,000,000 bushels. Of this 30,000,000 bushels must be exported before new wheat is available for export, if we are to maintain the absolutely necessary shipments to our army and the allies. That leaves about 26,000,000 bushels for domestic consumption for the next two months.

The normal American consumption is something over 40,000,000 bushels a month so that the most liberal consumption at home would be only one-third of normal.

Saving Fat in Iowa.

Nonedible fats have been recommended by many demonstrators as desirable for home soap making. While this is no doubt practical in many households, a campaign is being carried on in some localities to collect fat to be sold to rat dealers for shipping to soap factories where the glycerin is extracted. The glycerin is then shipped to munition factories. Here is a hint for Iowa farmers who have saved a quantity of fat.

Horse flesh is included among the meats now rationed in England under the card system.

Dwarf Trees.

The Chinese influence on interior decoration extends to the wonderful dwarf trees which, once almost prohibitively expensive, are now to be had at really popular prices, commencing at about 60 cents for diminutive yews and cedars that look as if they had come out of a "Kewpies'" garden. Stately oaks, sycamores, cedars, standing at least 20 inches high, are wonderful with their gnarled and twisted branches and close foliage; they appear like ancient forest trees viewed from afar and through the "wrong end" of a telescope.

Famous Regiment.

The Buffs, the famous old "Nutcrackers," of which the king of Denmark was appointed colonel-in-chief on his recent visit to England, are one of the oldest corps in the British army. They were evolved from the old trained band in the days of Elizabeth, and because of this ancient connection with the capital they have the privilege of marching through the city of London with fixed bayonets, beating drums and flying colors.

Nature Never Made a Garden.

Nature makes glorious things enough, but nature alone never made a garden.

"Bedlam."

Bedlam is another example of the English fashion of telescoping words, and comes from Bethlehem. The priory of St. Mary of Bethlehem in London was converted into a hospital for the insane in 1402 and in the course of time the name was shortened to Bedlam, a word that came to be a synonym for madhouse. To open the doors and let the inmates escape would be "Bedlam let loose," and frequently the phrase is used to describe intolerable clatter and racket.

Be Fair With Children.

Do not keep a list of your children's faults constantly before you, and do not, if you would be happy and at the same time make these little ones happy, elaborate upon their failings before company. On the other hand, if you must speak of the day's events, emphasize their good deeds, tell of the splendid work done during school hours, and admit in the right spirit that these small members of the household save you many weary steps.

North American Moose.

The moose is the largest living representative of the deer family, and is found in North America. The elk is native of northern Europe and is considered by many zoologists to be the same species, except that it is smaller. A full grown moose may be six and one-half to seven feet tall at the shoulder and weigh 1,000 to 1,500 pounds. On account of endurance and strength the moose is frequently symbolic, persons of unusual power being said to be "As strong as a bull moose."

THE TEETH OF THE TIGER

"Monsier, to understand my actions thoroughly, you must remember that I was a student, a man leading a solitary life, but also an ardent lover. I would have spent all my life in work, asking no more from fate than to see Marie at her window from time to time at night. But, once she was being persecuted, another man arose within me, a man of action, bungling, certainly, and inexperienced, but a man who was ready to stick at nothing, and who, not knowing how to save Marie Vauville, had no other object before him than to do away with that enemy of Marie's to whom he was entitled to ascribe all the misfortunes that had befallen the woman he loved. . . . This started the series of my attempts upon your life Brought into your house, concealed in Florence's own rooms, I tried—unknown to her: that I swear—to poison you."

He paused for an instant to mark the effect of his words, then went on:

"Her reproaches, her abhorrence of such an act, would perhaps have moved me, but, I repeat, I was mad, quite mad, and your death seemed to me to imply Marie's safety And one morning, on the Boulevard Suchet, where I had followed you, I fired a revolver at you

"The same evening your motor car, tampered with by myself—remember, Florence's rooms are close to the garage—carried you, I hoped, to your death, together with Sergeant Mazeroux, your confederate. That time again you escaped my vengeance But an innocent man, the chauffeur who drove you, paid for you with his life; and Florence's despair was such that I had to yield to her entreaties and lay down my arms

"I myself, terrified by what I had done, shattered by the remembrance of my two victims, changed my plans and thought only of saving Marie by contriving her escape from prison. . . .

"I am a rich man. I lavished money upon Marie's warders, without, however, revealing my intentions I entered into relations with the prison tradesmen and the staff of the infirmary. And every day, having procured a card of admission as a law reporter, I went to the law courts, to the examining magistrates' corridor, where I hoped to meet Marie, to encourage her with a look, a gesture, perhaps to slip a few words of comfort into her hand. . .

Sauverand moved closer to Don Luis.

"Her martyrdom continued. You struck her a most terrible blow with that mysterious business of Hippolyte Fauville's letters. What did those letters mean? Where did they come from? Were we not entitled to attribute the whole plot to you, to you who introduced them into the horrible struggle?

"Florence watched you, I may say, night and day We sought for a clue, a glimmer of light in the darkness . . . Well, yesterday morning, Florence saw Sergeant Mazeroux arrive. She could not overhear what he said to you, but she caught the name of a certain Langernault and the name of Damigni, the village where Langernault lived She remembered that old friend of Hippolyte Fauville's. Were the letters not addressed to him and was it not in search of him that you were going off in the motor with Sergeant Mazeroux? . . .

"Half an hour later we were in the train for Alencon. A carriage took us from the station to just outside Damigni, where we made our inquiries with every possible precaution. On learning what you must also know, that Langernault was dead, we resolved to visit his place, and we had succeeded in effecting an entrance when Florence saw you in the grounds. Wishing at all costs to avoid a meeting between you and myself, she dragged me across the lawn and behind the bushes. You followed us, however, and when a barn appeared in sight she pushed one of the doors which half opened and let us through. We managed to slip quickly through the lumber in the dark and knocked up against a ladder. This we climbed and reached a loft in which we took shelter. You entered at that moment. . . .

"You know the rest: how you discovered the two hanging skeletons; how your attention was drawn to us by an imprudent movement of Florence; your attack, to which I replied by brandishing the first weapon with which chance provided me; lastly, our flight through the window in the roof, under the fire of your revolver. We were free. But in the evening, in the train, Florence fainted. While bringing her to I perceived that one of your bullets had wounded her in the shoulder. The wound was slight and did not hurt her, but it was enough to increase the extreme tension of her nerves When you saw us—at Le Mans station wasn't it?—she was asleep, with her head on my shoulder."

Don Luis had not once interrupted the latter part of this narrative, which was told in a more and more agitated voice and quickened by an accent of profound truth Thanks to a superhuman effort of attention, he noted Sauverand's least words and actions in his mind And as these words were uttered and these actions performed, he received the impression of another woman who rose up beside the real Florence, a woman unspotted and innocent of all the shame which he had attributed to her on the strength of events.

Nevertheless, he did not yet give in How could Florence possibly be innocent? No, no, the evidence of his reason, which had judged, both rebelled against any such confention

He would not admit that Florence could suddenly be different from what she really was to him: a crafty, cunning, cruel, bloodthirsty monster No, no, the man was lying with infernal cleverness. He put things with a skill amounting to genius, until it was no longer possible to differentiate between the false and the true, or to distinguish the light from the darkness.

He was lying! He was lying! And yet how sweet were the lies he told! How beautiful was that imaginary Florence, the Florence compelled by destiny to commit acts which she loathed, but free of all crime, free of remorse, humane and pitiful, with her clear eyes and her snow-white hands! And how good it was to yield to this fantastic dream!

Gaston Sauverand was watching the face of his former enemy. Standing close to Don Luis, his features lit up with the expression of feelings and passions which he no longer strove to check, he asked, in a low voice:

"You believe me, don't you?"

"No, I don't," said Perenna, hardening himself to resist the man's influence

"You must!" cried Sauverand, with a fierce outburst of violence. "You must believe in the strength of my love. It is the cause of everything. My hatred for you comes only from my love. Marie is my life. If she were dead, there would be nothing for me to do but die. Oh, this morning, when I read in the papers that the poor woman had opened her veins—and through your fault, after Hippolyte's letters accusing her—I did not want to kill you so much as to inflict upon you the most barbarous tortures! My poor Marie, what a martyrdom she must be enduring! . . .

"As you were not back, Florence and I wandered about all morning to have news of her: first around the prison, next to the police office and the law courts. And it was there, in the magistrates' corridor, that I saw you. At that moment you were mentioning Marie Fauville's name to a number of journalists; and you told them that Marie Fauville was innocent; and you informed them of the evidence which you possessed in Marie's favor.

"My hatred ceased then and there, Monsier. In one second the enemy had become the ally, the master to whom one kneels. So you had had the wonderful courage to repudiate all your work and to devote yourself to Marie's rescue! I ran off, trembling with joy and hope, and, as I joined Florence, I shouted, 'Marie is saved! He proclaims her innocent! I must see him and speak to him!' . . .

"We came back here. Florence refused to lay down her arms and begged me not to carry out my plan before your new attitude in the case was confirmed by deeds. I promised everything that she asked. But my mind was made up. And my will was still further strengthened when I had read your declaration in the newspaper. I would place Marie's fate in your hands whatever happened and without an hour's delay, I waited for your return and came up here."

He was no longer the same man who had displayed such coolness at the commencement of the interview. Exhausted by his efforts and by a struggle that had lasted for weeks, costing him so much fruitless energy, he was now trembling; and clinging to Don Luis, with one of his knees on the chair beside which Don Luis was standing, he stammered:

"Save her, I implore you! You have it in your power. Yes, you can do anything. I learned to know you in fighting you. There was more than your genius defending you against me; there is a luck that protects you. You are different from other men. Why, the mere fact of your not killing me at once, though I had pursued you so savagely, the fact of your listening to the inconceivable truth of the innocence of all three of us and accepting it as admissible, surely these constitute an unprecedented miracle.

"While I was waiting for you and preparing to speak to you, I received an intuition of it all!" he exclaimed. "I saw clearly that the man who was proclaiming Marie's innocence with nothing to guide him but his reason, I saw that this man alone could save her and that we would save her Ah, I beseech you, save her—and save her at once. Otherwise it will be too late.

"In a few days Marie will have ended her life. She cannot go on living in prison. You see, she means to die. No obstacle can prevent her. Can any one be prevented from committing suicide? And how horrible if she were to die! . . Oh, if the law requires a criminal I will confess anything that I am asked to. I will joyfully accept every charge and pay every penalty, provided that Marie is free! Save her! I did not know, I do not yet know the best thing to be done! Save her from prison and death, save her, for God's sake, save her!"

Tears flowed down his anguish stricken face. Florence also was crying, bowed down with sorrow And Perenna suddenly felt the most terrible dread steal over him.

Although, ever since the beginning of the interview, a fresh conviction had gradually been mastering him, it was only as it were a glance that he became aware of it. Suddenly he perceived that his belief in Sauverand's words was unrestricted, and that Florence was perhaps not the loathsome creature that he had had the right to think, but a woman whose eyes did not lie and whose face and soul were alike beautiful

Suddenly he learned that the two people before him, as well as Marie Fauville, for love of whom they had fought so unskilful a fight, were imprisoned in an iron circle which their efforts would not succeed in breaking And that circle traced by an unknown hand he, Perenna, had drawn tighter around them with the most ruthless determination.

"If only it is not too late!" he muttered.

He staggered under the shock of the sensations and ideas that crowded upon him. Everything clashed in his brain with tragic violence: certainty, joy, dismay, despair, fury. He was struggling in the clutches of the most hideous nightmare; and he already seemed to see a detective's heavy hand descending on Florence's shoulder.

"Come away! Come away!" he cried, starting up in alarm. "It is madness to remain!"

"But the house is surrounded," Sauverand objected.

"And then? Do you think that I will allow for a second——? No, no, come! We must fight side by side. I shall still entertain some doubts, that is certain. You must destroy them; and we will save Mme. Fauville."

"But the detectives round the house?"

"We'll manage them"

"Weber, the deputy chief?"

"He's not here. And as long as he's not here I'll take everything on myself. Come, follow me, but at some little distance. When I give the signal and not till then——"

He drew the bolt and turned the handle of the door. At that moment some one knocked. It was the butler.

"Well?" asked Don Luis. "Why am I disturbed?"

CHAPTER ELEVEN

ROUTED.

Don Luis had certainly expected this formidable blow; and yet it appeared to take him unawares, and he repeated more than once:

"Ah, Weber is here! Weber is here!"

All his buoyancy left him, and he felt like a retreating army which, after almost making good its escape, suddenly finds itself brought to a stop by a steep mountain. Weber was there—that is to say, the chief leader of the enemies, the man who would be sure to plan the attack and the resistance in such a manner as to dash Perenna's hopes to the ground. With Weber at the head of the detectives, any attempt to force a way out would have been absurd.

"Did you let him in?" he asked.

"You did not tell me not to, sir"

"Is he alone?"

"No, sir, the deputy chief has six men with him. He has left them in the courtyard."

"And where is he?"

"He asked me to take him to the first floor He expected to find you in your study, sir."

Does he know now that I am with Sergeant Mazeroux and Mlle. Levasseur?"

"Yes sir"

Perenna thought for a moment and then said

Tell him that you have not found me and that you are going to look for me in Mlle Levasseur's rooms Perhaps he will go with you All the better if he does."

And he locked the door again.

The struggle through which he had just passed did not show itself on his face, and, now that all was lost now that he was called upon to act he recovered that wonderful composure which never abandoned him at decisive moments. He went up to Florence She was very pale and was silently weeping He said.

'You must not be frightened, Mademoiselle. If you obey me implicitly, you will have nothing to fear

She did not reply and he saw that she still mistrusted him. And he almost rejoiced at the thought that he would compel her to believe in him

"Listen to me," he said to Sauverand "In case I should not succeed after all, there are still several things which you must explain."

"What are they?" asked Sauverand, who had lost none of his coolness

Then, collecting all his riotous thoughts, resolved to omit nothing, but at the same time to speak only what was essential, Don Luis asked, in a calm voice:

"Where were you on the morning before the murder, when a man carrying an ebony walking stick and answering to your description entered the Cafe du Pont-Neuf immediately after Inspector Verot?"

"At home"

"Are you sure that you did not go out?"

"Absolutely sure. And I am also sure that I have never been to the Cafe du Pont-Neuf, of which I had never even heard."

"Good Next question. Why, when you learned all about this business, did you not go to the prefect of police or the examining magistrate? It would have been simpler for you to give yourself up and tell the exact truth than to engage in this unequal fight."

"I was thinking of doing so. But I at once realized that the plot hatched against me was so clever that no bare statement of the truth would have been enough to convince the authorities. They would never have believed me: What proof could I supply? None at all — whereas, on the other hand, the proofs against us were overwhelming and undeniable. Were not the marks of the teeth evidence of Marie's undoubted guilt? And were not my silence, my flight, the shooting of Chief Inspector Anecon so many crimes? No, if I would rescue Marie, I must remain free"

"But she could have spoken herself?"

GIRL SERVED WITH MARINES IN 1812

And Lucy Brewer, Returned From Fields of Conflict a "Hero."

From the St. Louis Star.

Who will be this war's heroine in trousers?

A Deborah Sampson in 1776 laid aside her petticoats for a Minute Man's uniform without any of the stern Puritans being any the wiser, and a Lucy Brewer, in 1812, donned a jackie's costume, enlisted in the marine corps, and after a thrilling career in naval battles, where she conducted herself as a "hero," returned home, resumed her hoops and brocades and married a perfectly respectable man.

Up to the present, so far as is known, there are no "fellows" wearing the olive drab of the navy blue who should be attired in Georgette crepe waists and serge skirts.

Adventurous damsels who might be tempted to emulate the example of either of these early feminine fighters will find the entire details of Lucy's adventures and her methods of masculine camouflage in her own account of her experiences.

Like many a man patriot, Miss Brewer entered the war to escape an unhappy life at home. At 17 years old she had an unfortunate love affair, and her unfeeling father ordered her out of her home. Her parents were well to do, living in a small town in Plymouth county, about 40 miles from Boston. She took the name of "Louisa Baker" and went to Boston.

When war broke out between the United States and Great Britain she induced an officer of an American privateer, then lying in the port of Boston, to obtain for her a sailor's suit. She cropped her hair and donned it.

Lucy must have been what would be called in these days "a mighty good sort," for she immediately started out to see if she could "get by" as a man. In the pamphlet which she issued after her discharge from the navy she details her first day's adventures thus:

"Being garbed completely in a sailor's suit, I quit, unnoticed, my lodgings and passed into the public street. From my awkward appearance in attempting to assume the character of a man, I was not without my fears that I should be suspected. Nor were my apprehensions relieved until, passing through Court street, I ventured to accost one of my own sex. She answered, with a ready 'Yes, sir,' which strengthened my confidence that I should pass for a man.

"I then bent my course to the old market, where, entering a victualing cellar, I procured my breakfast.

"The remainder of the day, I spent pleased in being enabled to visit public places where women would not have been admitted."

The young woman "sailor" then obtained lodgings "without difficulty," and the next morning sought a passage southward. But the harbor was closely blockaded and no vessels ventured abroad, so she had to give up the idea of a southern cruise. She says:

"Passing through Fish street I entered a house where there was a public rendezvous for the enlistment of men to go aboard one of the United States frigates then lying in the harbor, and shortly bound on a cruise. I viewed this as a favorable opportunity to try my fortune in the public service of my country, provided I could avoid the search, which new recruits generally undergo. This I succeeded in doing by an artful strategem and entered as a marine, receiving my advance money and clothing, and the next day I was taken aboard."

WAR IMPOSES VARIOUS DUTIES ON WOMEN

London, (by mail).—The war has taught women not only how to drive cars, make shells, plough fields and become effective soldiers, but it also has taught many of them, who didn't know how before, to cook and to sew.

A writer in a London paper says he knows of several girls in a British government office who spend their evenings in learning cookery. "Most of them," he says, "come from homes where the things of the house have always been done for them by well-trained servants. I asked one of these girls why she was spending her spare time in learning how to broil cabbages and make potatoes look attractive.

"'I want to feel independent,' she said. 'I expect to be married shortly, and I should feel such a fool if my husband came home suddenly on leave and I couldn't cook him a decent dinner. We can't count on servants these days.'"

War work, the writer concludes, whether it is work in an office or in a hospital or in a factory, is teaching women to be business like and orderly. It is teaching them that if a thing has to be done at all, it is more pleasant and infinitely easier to do it well than to do it badly. And, above all, it is teaching women to be self dependent, giving them the desire to make a success of whatever they undertake.

Mothers Make Gas Masks.

Women who, as wives, mothers, and sisters of soldiers, have a deep realisation of the necessity for painstaking care in their work, make the gas masks for the American army.

At a plant the location of which is not made public, thousands of them are engaged in the delicate and intricate operations and in conducting tests on the finished products. They have been organized in military fashion and specially selected for the work.

"It soon became apparent that the type of women needed could not be secured through the ordinary channels of employment,' says a statement of the gas defense service, "and men were sent to localities displaying service flags to secure the services of women vitally interested who would be most loyal in their work and extremely anxious to send out perfect gas masks."

Sewing face pieces, assembling sections, and making sure that the finished mask will be impervious to gass requires a whole series of complicated operations. Schools were established, and the women selected were trained in special courses until they became proficient in all the divisions of the task, the statement adds.

After that they were assembled in divisions, companies, platoons, and squads, under women leaders, and the defense service says that the method produced "unusual results both in discipline and control of production. Friendly rivalry as to the quantity and quality of output is carried on between the different companies.

A Chesterfield Retort.

The fourth Earl of Chesterfield was on one occasion at a grand assembly in France where Voltaire was one of the guests. Suddenly the French writer accosted his lordship with the words:

"My lord, I know you are a judge. Which are the more beautiful, the English or the French ladies?"

"Upon my word," replied Chesterfield, with his usual presence of mind, "I am no judge of paintings."

Every Time I Eat POST TOASTIES (MADE OF CORN)

An Old-Fashioned Fourth.

By JOE CONE.

I hate to speak of "good ol' days," becuz it sounds, I vow,
Almost like castin' slurs upon the days of here an' now;
But I'm ol' fashioned, just a bit, as all my neighbors know,
An' so I miss a heap o' things that happened long ago.
Maybe I'm changed, I suppose I am, but things have changed as well,
An' whether they're improved, or wuss, it's mighty hard to tell;
But take that day of all the days when youngsters' spirits flow,
Do they have ha'f the fun we had in days of long ago?

Why bless your heart, we fairly b'iled with patriotic pride,
An' daylight found no boy asleep in all the countryside.
An open window o'er the shed oft left its tell tale track,
An' many breakfasts were untouched becuz we wern't back!
O, there were many things to do, things that must needs be done,
Like ringin' of the ol' church bell, an' load the sunrise gun;
An' there were things to be compared, an' things to swap, you know,
Like pin wheels, punk, an' paper caps, them days of long ago.

An' we had celebrations then, upon the village green,
With musie by the Gungy band, the best was ever seen!
What fun to hold the big bass drum, with thumpin' on behind;
A boy could walk a dozen miles or moren' never mind.
An' speakin'? Say, Judge Perkins he could make the people cheer,
An' folks they come from miles around to git a chance to hear.
An' then the races an' the games, sack races, don't you know,
An' climbin' of the greasy pole—them days of long ago.

Who tries to ketch a greasy pig now-a-days, I'd like to know?
Who has tub races on the pond like we had long ago?
An' then such wondrous things to eat! Home cookin', yes sir-ee!
I most kin taste them vittles now of back in Sixty three!
An' there was dancin' in the grove with Cloky fiddlin' loud,
With ruddy cheeks and sparklin' eyes all sprinkled through the crowd;
An' ev'ry Fourth was safe an' sane, as far as we could know,
An' every boy had loads of fun them days of long ago.

Them good ol' days in Gungy wump! I miss 'em, I confess,
When ev'ry Fourth was just one round o' youthful happerness.
I am ol' fashioned, just a bit, an' I don't want, I vow,
To say a single word ag'in the days of here an' now,
But I jest wish down in my heart the youngster of today,
Could see us celebrate the Fourth the good ol' fashioned way;
I really b'lieve there was more health an' happerness an' glow,
In celebratin' Gungy's way—the way of long ago!

COLONEL HALPINE'S POEM.

Read At The Founding Of The Gettysburg Monument.

As men beneath some pang of grief,
Or sudden joy will dumbly stand,
Finding no words to give relief
Clear, passion warm, complete, and brief
To thoughts with which their souls expand,
So here today those trophies rig
No fitting words our lips reach;
The hills around, the graves, t sky,
The silent poem of the eye,
Surpasses all the art of speech!

Today a nation meets to build
A nation's trophy to the dead,
Who, living, formed her sword and shield,
The arms she sadly learned to wield,
When other hope of peace had fled;
And not alone for those who lie
In honored graves before us blest,
Shall our proud column broad and high,
Climb upward to the blessing sky
But be for all a monument.

An emblem of our grief as well
For others, as for these, we raise;
For these beneath our feet who dwell,
And all who in the good cause fell,
On other fields in other frays.
To all the self same love we bear
Which here for marbled memory strives;
No soldier for a wreath would care,
Which all true comrades might not share,—
Brothers in death as in their lives.

On southern hill sides, parched and brown,
In tangled swamps, on verdant ridge,
Where pines and broadening oaks look down
And jasamine waves its yellow crown,
And trumpet creepers clothe the hedge,
Along the shores of endless sand,
Beneath the palms of southern plains,
Sleep everywhere, hand locked in hand,
The brothers of the gallant band
Who here poured life through throbbing veins.

Around the closing eyes of all,
The same red glories glared and flew;
The hurrying flags, the bugle call,
The whistle of the angry ball,
The elbow touch of comrade true,
The skirmish fire, a spattering spray,
The long sharp growl of fire by file,
The thick'ning fury of the fray
When opening batteries ... in play,
And the line ... a mile.

The foeman's yell, our answering cheer,
Red flashes through the gathering smoke,
Swift orders, resonant and clear,
Blithe cries from comrades, tried and dear,
The shell scream and the sabre stroke,
The volley fire, from left to right,
From right to left, we hear it swell,
The headlong charges, swift and bright
The thick'ning tumult of the fight,
And bursting thunders of the shell.

Now closer, denser, grows the strife,
And here we yield, and there we gain;
The air with hurtling missiles rife,
Volley for volley, life for life;
time to heed the cries of pain.
...uting, as up the hills we charge,
Or down them as we broken roll,
Life never felt so high, so large,
And never o'er so wide a range
In triumph swept the kindling soul.

New raptures waken in the breast,
Amid this hell of scene and sound,
The barking batteries never rest,
And broken foot by horsemen pressed,
Still stubbornly contest their ground;
Fresh waves of battle rolling in,
To take the place of shattered waves?
Torn lines that grow more bent and thin,
A blinding cloud, a maddening din,—
'Twas then we filled these very graves

Night falls at length with pitying veil,
A moonlit silence, deep and fresh.
These upturned faces, stained and pale,
Vainly the chill night dews assail;
Far colder than the dews their flesh
And flickering far, through brush and wood,
Go searching parties, torch in hand
"Seize if you can some rest and food,
At dawn the fight will be renewed,—
Sleep on arms!" the hushed command.

They talk in whispers as they lie
In line, these rough ... weary men.
"Dead or but wounded?" then a sigh,
"No coffin either?" "Guess will try
To get those two guns back again."
"We've five flags to their one, oho!"
"That bridge! 'Twas not there as we passed.
"The Colonel dead? It can't be so.
Wounded, badly, that I know,
But he kept his saddle to the last."

"... sure to send it in for all"
"... my tob acco' ... e"
"A bro... ... of ... eye ...
... ing dell"
"Good night boys, and God keep you all"
"What, sound asleep? Guess I'll sleep too."
"Aye, just about this hour they pray
For dad." "Stop talking, pass the word."
And soon as quiet as the clay
Which thousands will but be next day,
The long drawn sighs of sleep are heard.

Oh! men, to whom this sketch, though rude,
Calls back some scene of pain and pride;
Oh! widow, hugging close your brood,
Oh! wife, with happiness renewed,
Since he again is at your side;
This trophy that today we raise
Should be a monument for all,
And on its side no niggard phrase
Confine a generous nation's praise
To those who here have chanced to fall.

But let us all today combine
Still other monuments to raise;
Here for the dead we build a shrine,
And now to those who crippled pine
Let us give hope of happier days.
Let homes of those sad wrecks of war
Through all the land with speed arise;
They cry from every gaping scar,
"Let not our brother's tomb debar
The wounded living from your eyes."

A noble day, a deed as good,
A noble scene in which 'tis done,
The birthday of our nationhood,
And here again the nation stood,
On this same day its life was won!
A bloom of banners in the air,
A double calm of sky and soul,
Triumphant chant and bugle blare,
And green fields spreading bright and fair,
As heavenward our hosannas roll.

Hosannas for a land redeemed,
The bayonet sheathed, the cannon dumb!
Passed as some horror we have dreamed,
The fiery meteors that here streamed,
Threat'ning within our homes to come!
Again our banner floats abroad,
Gone the one stain that on it fell;
And bettered by His chast'ning rod,
With streaming eyes uplift to God.
We say, "He doeth all things well."

EASY TO MAKE FIGURES.

From the Kansas City Star.

German newspaper correspondents claim that 175,000 allied prisoners, 2,000 cannon and innumerable machine guns have been captured since the start of the present offensive, March 21.—Amsterdam Dispatch.

Impressive figures, aren't they? But it is easy for rapid calculators, like those German correspondents, to figure.

Years ago Joseph H. Choate, Thomas B. Reed and a wealthy man of sporting tendencies met at dinner in New York. The wealthy man had had a bad day at the races and complained bitterly of his luck.

"I have never gambled with cards," said Choate impressively, "or bet $1 on a horse race."

"I wish I could say that," replied the sport with a sigh.

"Why don't you, then?" Reed interposed. "Choate did."

Ready for a Riot.

From the Pittsburgh Chronicle Telegraph.

An auctioneer had been selling horses all day and his voice was getting a little husky, so that he was economizing as much as possible in the use of words and even syllables.

Early in the day he had shouted the bids, "One hundred dollars, two hundred dollars, three hundred dollars," etc.

Then he restricted himself to calling out "one hundred, two hundred, three hundred," etc.

When McCarty, attracted through curiosity by the crowd, came up, the auctioneer had further abbreviated his speech and was crying, "One hun, two hun, can't I get three hun?"

Off went McCarty's coat, and he sang out excitedly:

"Don't do this all yourself, young fellow. Let me in it. I can take care of a few of 'em."

The Effects of Opiates.

THAT INFANTS are peculiarly susceptible to opium and its various preparations, all of which are narcotic, is well known. Even in the smallest doses, if continued, these opiates cause changes in the functions and growth of the cells which are likely to become permanent, causing imbecility, mental perversion, a craving for alcohol or narcotics in later life. Nervous diseases, such as intractable nervous dyspepsia and lack of staying powers are a result of dosing with opiates or narcotics to keep children quiet in their infancy. The rule among physicians is that children should never receive opiates in the smallest doses for more than a day at a time, and only then if unavoidable.

The administration of Anodynes, Drops, Cordials, Soothing Syrups and other narcotics to children by any but a physician cannot be too strongly decried, and the druggist should not be a party to it. Children who are ill need the attention of a physician, and it is nothing less than a crime to dose them willfully with narcotics.

Doan's, However, Restored Mr. Roulston to Good Health. Results Have Lasted.

"Mornings I was so stiff and sore I could hardly get up," says A. C. Roulston, prop. blacksmith shop, 2349 Washington St., Roxbury, Mass. "The sharp pains through my kidneys were so bad I often thought I wouldn't be able to get to work. I couldn't rest comfortably and turned and tossed from one side to the other, with a dull, dragging backache. There were puffy spots under my eyes and I felt worn out all the time. I can honestly recommend Doan's for they have surely done me a world of good.

The present system of punctuation, now used in all modern languages with but insignificant variations, was introduced in the first half of the fifteenth century by a Venetian printer named Aldus Manutius. Manutius' system was adopted later by all printers until it finally established itself throughout Europe.—Louisville Courier-Journal.

TO ALL RETAILERS OF SUGAR

More drastic regulations are necessary in the distributio of sugar and you will please be governed by the following regulations, bearing in mind at all times that no consumer should use an amount of sugar greater than three pounds per person per month, exclusive of the amount used for canning and preserving purposes.

The amount used for canning should be reduced to the very minimum and it is the desire of the Food Administration that the very maximum amount of fruit and vegetables be canned with the minimum amount of sugar. Do not discourage the canning of fruit and vegetables, but try to impress upon your customers the necessity of using the very minimum of sugar in all canning operations.

Rule No. 1. Where consumers have bought twenty-five pounds of sugar for canning and desire another twenty-five pounds for the same purpose, permission must be had from your County Food Administrator before selling this additional quantity.

Rule No. 2. All retailers must file a statement with the Sugar Division at Ottumwa before July 15th, or certificates will not be granted for the balance of the year.

Rule No. 3. Each retailer must post a signed copy of statement "E" in a prominent place in his store so that the consuming public may understand that he is restricted in the sale of sugar.

Rule No. 4. The amount of sugar that can be sold at one time is two pounds to town customers and five pounds to rural customers. Retailers in large towns must not consider customers living in small nearby towns as rural customers, if there is a retail grocer in the town where the customer lives.

Rule No. 5. The only person to whom sugar can be sold without certificates are consumers or the boarding houses which feed less than twenty-five people on an average. You must get certificates from the purchaser if you sell to any manufacturer, hotel, restaurant, soda fountain, manufacturer, ice cream [illegible] in fact, any manufacturer who uses sugar in his products. Please bear in mind the fact that this rule will be enforced rigidly.

You should keep a record of all sugar sold for canning purposes and in the event of your being out of sugar additional certificates will be issued you to take care of your sales for that purpose.

Remember you are being allotted a certain amount of sugar monthly and you are expected, inasfar as possible, to limit your customers to three pounds per person per month, bearing in mind when your sugar allotment is used up for the month that you may be out of sugar, simply because you have allowed some of your customers to buy more sugar than they are entitled to.

Sugar certificates will be allotted to you about the first of each month with whieh to purchase sugar for that particular month only.

J. A. Love, Food Administrator for Hancock County.

"THE KAISER" COMING TO KLEMME, JULY 24

"The Kaiser, the Beast of Berlin," will be shown at the Idle Hour, both afternoon and evening, on July 24th. This picture is one of the best ever shown in any theatre and has been run in nearby large cities recently. This is a picture every patriotic American should see as it will give you a clearer idea of what the beast, the Kaiser, is doing and the methods he uses. When the picture was shown in one of the eastern cities of Iowa some patriotic fellow blazes away at the screen when the Kaiser's picture was shown and shot up a perfectly good screen, so please leave your artillery at home when you view the picture at the Idle Hour as Manager Parsons would perhaps object to having his screen shot full of holes. Watch for circulars and ads.

HOW TO USE BARLEY FLOUR

Home Economics Experts Tell How to Get Good Results With It.

Barley flour is the best, cheapest and most accessible substitute flour on the market. It is light colored and contains enough gluten to be used for wheat flour in any kind of recipe except, perhaps, yeast bread. The following precautions should, however, be observed in its use:

1. Barley flours are not uniform in quality and the amount of liquid to be added varies a little.

2. Barley flour absorbs more water than wheat flour, therefore the barley muffin or cake batter will seem a little stiffer than if made with an equal amount of wheat flour.

3. Since one cupful of barley flour weighs but three ounces, while one cupful of wheat flour weighs four, the flour should be sifted once and about two tablespoonfuls more added to each cupful of flour called for.

4. The addition of egg is almost necessary to secure a good muffin or biscuit mixture made with barley.

5. The flavor of barley mixtures is objectionable to some persons when used alone. This may be overcome if a small amount of cornstarch, potato flour, corn flour, cornmeal or mashed potatoes is substituted for part of the barley flour. A dash of mace or nutmeg improves shortcake doughs.

6. The better texture and more moisture are obtained in barley mixtures if one-fourth cupful of cold mashed potatoes are added with every cupful of barley flour.

7. Muffins, breads and cakes made with barley and other substitute flours should bake longer and at a lower temperature than those made with wheat flour.

BEANS SUBSTITUTE FOR MEAT

Food Administration Urges People to Eat All Kinds of This Staple Food.

Now that it promises to become necessary to watch our meat supply with increasing care, the possibilities of beans in the diet are brought again to the front.

The farmers of the country did their duty last year and brought out a larger crop of beans than ever before. According to the figures of the department of agriculture, the last crop of beans was about 15,000,000 bushels, an increase of 5,000,000 bushels over the normal crop. Considering the extraordinary demand for beans by the army and navy, this crop was not too large, and only unusual circumstances explain the fact that any beans are left over.

Last year there was a substantial increase in the colored bean crop—pinto beans, California pinks and soy beans—in the South and Southwest. This accession of new beans from unaccustomed quarters not only provided new stocks but required a partial rearrangement of the market.

Beans have long been a staple food for the army and navy. On account of their high nutritive value they enter largely into the diet of men in the field. Knowing this, Americans have for some time felt that it was the part of patriotism to leave their white beans for the soldiers. But the food administration now urges the use of all beans.

Beans are to be counted as a substitute for meat rather than for the cereals. They can well take the place of a meat dish on many occasions. Certainly with them in the diet there is less need for meat.

Make Your Own Potato Flour.

Make your own potato flour at home. It is easy and it produces a flour that is an excellent substitute for wheat flour. Here is the method:

"Use sound potatoes. Size is unimportant; wash thoroughly; bake. Put through a ricer and drop lightly in a thin layer on a shallow tray preferably perforated. Dry in a current of warm air over a stove, register, etc., or in a very cool oven, stirring frequently. Let become perfectly dry and grind the hard dry pellets through the fine blade of a food chopper, coffee mill or feed mill. The addition of hot water soaks the flour for potato soups or mashed potatoes or flour can be used in connection with other flours for baking. The excellence of the flavor depends on the choice of sound potatoes and the avoidance of scorching or browning. The keeping qualities depend on complete drying."

Red Cross News

By the Red Cross Reporter

Our shipment of goods, knitting needles and other supplies, arrived Monday evening and everything was in first class condition. Let all the members come to work and help do our bit.

New Member—Mrs. Baumeister.

All members of the Junior Red Cross are requested to be present at the Red Cross room on July 19 for work. Don't fail to be there.

While a little old the following item from the Mason City Globe Gazette of June 27, makes interesting reading for the ladies of the Klemme Red Cross:

"Mrs. Doris Stoddard of this city was in Klemme yesterday and while there called at the Red Cross work shop. Out of 200 members in the organization at that place there were 43 women present who were working for the chapter. It is doubtful if there are many chapters or auxiliaries in the state which can show a higher percentage of workers at a room than that."

BELMOND HAD GOOD CELEBRATION

Belmond had a very good program for the Fourth of July celebration and the celebration began about 9:30 with a Band Concert by the Garner Band. Next on the program was an elaborate parade which consisted mostly of patriotic floats. A patriotic address in the park by Hon. John Seneff, of Mason City was given just before noon. Out of town visitors had a picnic in the park and were served free coffee. The afternoon program opened up with a concert at 1:00 by the Garner Band which was followed by the Pageant which represented Four Centuries of American Freedom. Only half of this program was given as it started to rain. The pageant was very good of what we saw and it was too [illegible] that the rest of it could not be [illegible] ball game between Corwith [illegible] off. Street sports were scheduled at 5:00 p. m. but these also had to be called off as it was still raining. However the weather cleared up late in the afternoon and a good concert was given by the Garner Band. In the evening there was a dance at the opera house and a very good picture at the other theatre. So despite the rain we feel that Belmond can be highly commended on the excellent Fourth of July Celebration they gave.

Mr. C. C. Tessier, of Garner, is in Klemme this week wiring up houses for electric lights and fixtures. Mr. Tessier has taken over the entire business and stock of Chas. "SCOOP" SAYS, "THIS IS THE LIFE"

"Scoop" Larsen arrived in Klemme the Fourth of July from Chicago. "Scoop" is a truck driver in the 88th Division, 313th Supply Train and since he was here last spring on a furlough has been some busy man. When he left here last spring he went back to Camp Dodge from which place he went to Chicago and with the supply train drove on a hike to Milwaukee, Wis., where they took a bunch of trucks for repair and stayed there four days from which place they drove through to Baltimore, Maryland. This trip took them twelve days and they drove Liberty Trucks. They stayed at Baltimore three days and then went back to Chicago by rail over the Penn. R. R. They were at Chicago a few days and then took a sixty mile hike to Camp Grant, Ill., with a bunch of ambulances. From there they went back to Chicago on the train. "Scoop" left Chicago and [illegible] get here for the Fourth. He left again [illegible] a supply train through to Newport News, Va., with a bunch of army trucks which will be transported for over seas service. Oscar has made good as a truck driver and holds the position of Driver's Corporal in the 88th Div. Supply Train. He has one man working under him and he also acts as instructor. He says when they go on these drives they take about 180 5-ton trucks and that it is sure some sight to see this long train of army trucks winding along the country roads.

THE KLEMME TIMES

RAY A. JORGENSON, PUB.

KLEMME, IOWA

Very few people are aware that the royal house of Britain was established and continued by drawing lots—a distinct form of lottery. At Celle, in 1502, William the Pious, of Hanover, had seven sons like the man in the fairy tale, and they agreed, in accordance with the wishes of their father, and for the interests of the house, that only one of them should marry to continue the succession. Six silver balls and a gold one were placed in the reputed helmet of their ancestor, William the Lion, and drawn for. The prize fell to George, the youngest but one of the seven sons, who became the grandfather of George I of England, and the great - great-great-great-great-grandfather of our present king, George V.

Though the use of tally sticks in public offices was abolished by act of parliament in 1783, they continued to be used at the exchequer until 1834, giving Charles Dickens cause to complain in a speech at the inaugural meeting of the Administrative Reform association that the national accounts were kept very much as Robinson Crusoe kept his calendar on the desert island. In 1834 orders were issued to destroy all the tally sticks in the exchequer, whereupon two cartloads were set fire to one morning in the basement of the house of lords, and, as though by way of revenge, overheated the flues and burned the whole building to the ground.

That the Hittites were in constant communications with other nations, is shown by the fact that Egyption scarabs and amulets, Phœnician pottery and Greek terra cotta figures are found in the tombs of different periods. Bronze daggers and jewelry are fairly common, and a safety pin, 3,000 years old, has been found, that would still work Some stone age pottery, with the very ancient emblem of thunder or of the weather god, was found in the original kiln.

The United States flag always is hoisted over the Senate or House of Representatives when in session. The flag floats from the flagstaff of the White House while the president is in Washington, and its absence indicates the absence of the president from the capital It is displayed over the department buildings in Washington from 9 o'clock a m to 4.30 p m. every week day

The safest way to guard against spontaneous combustion in large piles of coal, according to the British fire prevention committee, is to insert vertically in the fuel heaps, at the time they are built, iron or earthenware pipes, about four inches in diameter. A ventilator should be provided for every 300 square feet and the ends should be at various depths

The salary of the president remained at $25,000 from the administration of Washington to President Grant's second term in 1873 At that time it was increased to $50,000, and in the administration of President Taft to $75,000, where it remained He has besides, an allowance of $25,000 a year for traveling expenses, which he does not have to account for.

Charles Frey, famous as the "rat catcher philosopher," proposes to do his bit to make the world safe for democracy but extremely unsafe for rats. He has sent a letter to President Wilson offering his services in the work of ridding the trenches and training camps of rats. He has made a lifelong study of the extermination of pests.

The Republican adds: "By the time her husband got home for breakfast she had the hide off."

Peter X. Senger, of Danville, Ill, president of the Eastern Illinois Druggists association, will either drop his middle initial or spell the name Xaviar in full in the future. A document he sent to to Washington was returned with the question as to why he had made his "mark" and not signed his name.

The citizens of Albany, N. Y., experienced a thrill on February 28, 1795, when 500 emigrants' sleighs passed through that city on their way to the distant and little known Genesee country of western New York. The Genesee valley was then considered the "far west."

Some time after Loyd's death a man named Hicks appeared and claimed to be the illegitimate son of the testator, and after a contest in the courts in California succeeded in establishing his relationship and right to share in the estate. As a result of the decisions of the California courts Hicks shared equally with the other heirs in the estate, but only insofar as the property in California was considered, the widow and legitimate children fighting his participation in the Iowa estate.

Forecast Is For Third Largest Production In History of United States.

Washington, D. C., July 2.—Cotton production this year was forecast at 15,325,000 bales today by the department of agriculture in its first estimate of this season's crop.

A huge cotton crop is in prospect this year, the department of agriculture today forecasting the production at 15,125,000 equivalent 500-pound bales.

A crop that size would be the third largest ever grown.

The condition of the crop on June 25 was 85.8 per cent of a normal, or 3.5 per cent better than on May 25, and 6 per cent higher than the 10-year average.

The acreage this year comes close to the record, being exceeded only by that of 1913

In 1913 the acreage picked was 37,089,000 The department of agriculture said there is comparatively no abandoned acreage at this time and from this it is inferred that the production forecast, which allows for one per cent abandonment of acreage, should be slightly larger.

Value of Baby Bonds.

From the Outlook.

A well known investment banker of New York, Mr John calls our attention to some facts regarding the baby bond with we think our readers should familiarize themselves.

There is one phase of all the Liberty loans which should re the most careful thought and attention. It is the particip interest of small subscribers, wage earners and people of every income.

For this great multitude the treasury department w determined to issue $50 and $100 denominations, commonly c "baby bonds." A year ago bonds, except to the well-to-do and w classes, were comparatively unknown, and not fully understood known.

It is well known that immediately the bonds were issued the p began to decline. This created doubt in the minds of small subscri and very large sums in small bonds were thrown over, not thr need, but through fright because of ignorance about a new uni investment. Unscrupulous persons paid $35 and $40 for $50 bonds, and $80 for $100 bonds.

The Liberty bonds prices in $1,000 pieces may fluctuate below for a time, but there is no remote fear at any time that they will fall to prices such as the poor small subscriber, through ignorance, stress, or coercion, has had to accept for his small bond extorted from him by harpies.

Therefore, I emphasize that the baby bond must be stabilized the basis of the $1,000 bond. The small subscriber must get the wea man's price. Let it be known that the baby bond holder can look in paper and know that the $1,000 price is his price With the approval of the treasury department I adopted this principle in of last year and maintain it.

What Mr. Muir points out can be illustrated by perce Say, for example, the second Liberty loan 4 per cent bonds are in the market at 96.70; that is to say, a $1,000 bond of the issue sells today for $967 or 3.3 per cent below par At this $50 bond of the second 4 per cent issue should bring in the $48.35. Holders of $50 bonds or bonds of any other denomi should, however, refrain from selling them at any price if the possibly do so. They are absolutely sure, and they will be full on the date which is printed on the face of every bond.

There is no security in the world today of any governm any bank, of any railway, or of any industrial company th sound and so sure of being paid as the Liberty bonds of the U States government.—Do not sell them unless you have to, and have to sell them because of some catastrophe or crisis in you affairs, insisting on getting the market price for them.

Petrograd a City Gone to Seed Where Hams Sell for $300 E

Only Change For Better Since Peace Came Is In the Weat Food So Scarce and Dear Even Relatives Rob One Another's Larders.

By the Correspondent of the London Chronicle.

The famine in Petrograd is becoming positively alarming. There is practically no food on the markets or in the shops. Quite two-thirds, if not more, of the latter are permanently closed for want of goods of all kinds besides foodstuffs. There is no flour, no sugar, potatoes, cheese, or milk, no grains or goats, and very little meat; all is under control unless accidentally or privately obtained.

The principal necessities of life have to be got when possible through friends and chance acquaintances at enormous cost, if one has money to pay for them, as the meager rations doled out by the authorities are absolutely inadequate for subsistence. The present ration of indigestible black bread, half-baked, with as much water as possible left in it to increase the weight, in only one-eighth of a pound per day, and often that is not forthcoming, on account of the hopeless disorder and universal thieving habit. Relatives and dependents rob one another of food without compunction. Hunger has no conscience. If a morsel of anything is left on the plate for later consumption it will disappear as soon as one turns his back. Every scrap has to be put under lock and key after each meal. In my own case the house committee which receives flour from the town authorities for distribution to us tenants could not account for nine poods of flour, so that we all had to go without any bread for two days.

In spite of special commissions and stringent measures against hoarding and speculation, profiteering goes on to a great extent among all classes. In fact, food is a far more valuable commodity than paper money, and secretly circulates instead of it. All conversation indoors and out is about food and how to get it. Half the working day is wasted in pursuit of sufficient to eat. As an illustration of how far disorganization and greed can go I may mention that no few than 15 cartloads of rotten hares were recently brought into the town and several attempts were made to foist them on to the municipal executive, but they were finally rejected and condemned. Good hares are being sold at $12.4 apiece according to the rate of exchange before the war.

The prices of other articles are quite fabulous. Hams are offered at $200 and $300 each. Butter costs $10 a pound, white flour $10 a pound, eggs 75 cents apiece, potatoes $1.45 a pound. With the exception of occasional limited sales, most of these articles can only be obtained privately.

In these circumstances the British community of Petrograd, which is now reduced perhaps to about 500 persons who were unable, for various reasons, to leave Russia, have felt obliged to induce the British consul and the incumbent of the English church to wire to London for a few edible supplies to help us tide over this serious crisis. I am told that a telegram to this effect has been sent to the foreign office, but so far no assistance is forthcoming. We do not want luxuries, but a few cases of crushed oats, for example, some sugar, margarine, and flour, would be a godsend.

There has been no essential improvement of internal affairs here; on the contrary, the situation in many respects has been going from bad to worse. The only real change for the better has been in the weather. With a sudden increase of temperature a change appeared in the general aspect of the ex-capital. The solar rays powerfully assisted artificial melters with fires of wood to thaw down the switchback, ice-caked roadways to the rough, uneven cobble stones and rotten wooden cubes of antiquated paving which have been so long unrepaired. The ice and frozen filth, covering the roadways two or three feet deep, was first broken up by gangs of men and women, with whom the bourgeois were requisitioned to cooperate, and at some places they were to be seen plying pick and shovel under the supervision of armed soldiers of the red guard. Resisting or, as the fashionable revolutionary jargon now goes, "sabotaging" persons who objected to taking part in this street-scavenging were threatened with heavy fines and imprisonment. In a few cases these penalties were enforced, but, like so many more of the tyrannical edicts lately issued, their general application was impossible, and the dominant proletariat had to be set to do the work at extravagant wages, far exceeding the salaries earned by educated men and the best skilled artisans before the war.

A Dilapidated City.

The return of summer does not bring any advantage to Petrograd. In piping times of peace 100,000 wo came into the city from the cou build and do necessary repairs war and the revolution have away most of these men and al peace has been signed and cannot be called a piping one, that the whole male population trained to arms, and that the ities are hastily recruiting a army, into whose ranks men ar enticed by enormously high many privileges. It is not lik we shall have many workmen other year Owing to the rigor climate, the destructive effects biting winter frosts, and the bl summer sun of Petrograd is which each successive generation habitants have had to rebuild by installments of annual rep that its dilapidated condition af years' neglect in this respect easily imagined. As all house ty is expropriated without co tion for the alleged benefit of tion, and put under the ma of very unwilling committees perienced tenants, who have their rent into the bosheviki ex it is not to be expected that terior wear and tear will be ma for some time to come. As for teriors of buildings, the walls cades of palaces, private hou shop-fronts, are all disfigured ly plastered successive layers posters, proclamations, and ad ments. Innumerable windows en, and much of the stucco ruined.

SAFE FARMING

Farmers' Chautauquas

Any Community That Really Wants One Can Have One

By P. G. HOLDEN

THE day when the people of every community should get close to the soil is here, and now I believe a Farmers' Chautauqua provides the best opportunity for a thorough discussion of the pressing and important problems of the farm and home. If Chautauquas for the entertainment and instruction of the people in the cities and towns can be held successfully, the Chautauqua can be used to bring farmers and their wives and children together to listen to discussions on rural betterment and to talk over with each other the problems that are vital to themselves.

The community that has a vision, that really wants a Farmers' Chautauqua, that is in earnest about it, can have one. The program should be adapted to the needs of the community and the people should organize and appoint the necessary committees on arrangements—men and women, boys and girls—who are wide awake, who will do things

Can Form Circuit.

A Chautauqua can be arranged for only one community, to last three or four days, with morning, afternoon and evening sessions, or several communities or counties can be organized into a Chautauqua circuit, so arranged that the Chautauqua in one community will follow that in another, or all the Chautauquas may be held simultaneously, the program permitting the speakers and demonstrators to appear at one Chautauqua after another without delay or inconvenience

The Chautauqua May Be Held in Town, or, Better, in the Country.

Secure Good Speakers.

Speakers should be secured on agriculture, live stock, dairying, fruit growing, good roads, poultry, gardening, home economics, canning, drying, etc., and demonstration material, large lecture charts, moving pictures and lantern slides on educational topics should be provided. Music, furnished by local talent, should also be a feature. The meetings may be held in town or, better still, under a large tent in a convenient grove in the country, where it will be easy to hold orchard or field demonstrations.

The Farmers' Chautauqua has been proven practical and highly successful. In Randolph County, Missouri, a three days' Chautauqua was held on the grounds of a country church during August. Five hundred dollars was raised in advance by the selling of tickets. In the mornings the women discussed Home Economics in the tent while the men visited neighboring farms to watch field demonstrations. In the afternoons the men used the tent and all joined in the evening sessions.

In Warren County, Kentucky, four Chautauquas were held in October, each opening Sunday morning and closing Wednesday evening, and these were followed by five one-day Chautauquas. All were held in the center of rural communities from five to eighteen miles from any town. No charge was made for admission. These Chautauquas resulted in the holding of a monster county convention of farmers at Bowling Green in November. At this convention the work done in the various community Chautauquas was crystallized into a general movement for the entire county.

Similar Chautauquas were also held in Madison and other counties in Kentucky.

FRENCH 'ACE OF ACES' WASTES NO LEAD

Rene Fonck's Busy Day Nets Six German Airplanes In Two Hours.

Paris (by mail) Lieut Rene Fonck the young French "ace of aces" fought three distinct battles in the air when on May 8, he brought down six German airplanes in one day His record never has been equalled in aviation All three engagements were fought within two hours. In all Fonck fired only 56 shots an average of little more than nine bullets for each enemy brought down, an extraordinary record in view of the fact that aviators often fire hundreds of rounds crippling their opponent.

The first fight, in which Lieutenant Fonck brought down three German machines, lasted only a minute and a half and the young Frenchman fired only 22 shots. Although Lieutenant Fonck is officially credited with bringing down 42 enemy airplanes in all, military aviators believe that he has sent down at least 60 machines. He is 24 years old, is cool in battle and handles both machine gun and airplane with great skill.

Fonck was leading two other companions on a patrol in the Moreuil-Montdidier sector on May 8 when the French squadron met three German two-seater airplanes coming toward him in arrow formation. Signaling to his companions, Lieutenant Fonck dived at the leading German plane and with a few shots, sent it down in flames. Fonck turned to the left and the second Hun followed in an effort to attack him from behind, but the Frenchman made a quick turn above him and with five shots sent the second Hun down to death. Ten seconds had barely elapsed between the two victories.

The third Hun headed for home, but, when Lieutenant Fonck apparently gave up the chase and turned back towards the French lines, the German went after him and was flying parallel and a little below, when Fonck made a quick turn, drove straight at him and sent him down within a half mile of the spot where his two comrades hit the earth. This ended the first engagement.

Several German observation balloons had been brought down by French aviators. Lieutenant Fonck returned to his camp and waited three-quarters of an hour for the Germans to learn of that fact and send their chaser planes to the scene of action. Then he, with two companions, went out to meet them. Above Montdidier he came upon a German plane which was regulating the enemy fire, dived 2,000 feet and sent the German plane to earth with a few shots Taking refuge in a cloud, Fonck lost his two companions Emerging from the mist to start for his own lines, Lieutenant Fonck saw before him four single seater Pfalz airplanes protected, at 1,500 feet above, by five German Albatrosses, making for the French trenches with the convoying planes leading. In a 10 second flight Fonck overtook the rear Pfalz machine fired and saw it fall

At the sound of his gun the two Pfalz machines in the center of the German group turned one to the right and the other to the left, to attack the daring Frenchman, but Fonck drove his airplane swiftly ahead and overtook the fourth Pfalz machine A few shots under its tail sent it down in flames and the victor flew off to safety leaving the two other Pfalzs and five Albatrosses wondering what had struck the squadron

YANKEE HORSES MUST UNDERSTAND LANGUAGE

BY FRED S. FERGUSON,
United Press Staff Correspondent.

With the American Forces in Picardy (by mail)—The American horse is an apt linguist.

Sold overseas to the French from America during the first three years of the war, he had to learn French to understand his new masters. Then sold back to Americans for service with his own army after the United States entered the war, he had to learn English, or rather American, all over again

Hundreds of these American horses were bought from the French when the first forces from the United States landed The drivers were constantly in trouble, and at first couldn't understand the reason.

"I had a team out during a review," said one driver, "and couldn't make 'em budge I yelled 'git-up' and everything else at 'em, and they just sort of looked aroun' like they thought I was foolish Then I remembered that I heard a frog yell 'Alley' at his horses. I yelled 'alley,' and away we went."

The horses now are a good deal like the soldier. They'll respond to either French or English commands.

BRAZILIAN COMPANY IN SHIPPING BUSINESS

Buenos Aires (by mail)—The Lloyd Brazilian Steamship company has established another new line of boats between Buenos Aires and Belem, Brazil with callings at Montevideo, Rio Grande, Santos, Bahia, Maceio, Recife (Pernambuco) and Ceara

This new service was inaugurated by the steamship Rio Janeiro, which sailed from this port recently with passengers, mail and cargo.

In a short time thereafter other boats were placed on this run It is believed that the new enterprise has been well planned and that its success is assured The greater part of the ships which once carried the traffic between these ports belonged to European companies and have since the war been placed on trans-Atlantic routes

WOMAN WOOER IS FINED $25

Sweetheart Appealed to Police When She Insisted That He Should Amuse Her.

Kansas City, Mo.—It cost a stenographer $25 to woo her sweetheart, Frederick Ruddeen, a paperhanger. The man sat on his front porch the other night as the woman approached, a box of candy under her arm She called a cheery greeting The response was indifferent

"Will you go with me to the party, Fred?" she invited.

"No thanks, it's too hot. Besides, I'm busy

The man resumed reading, apparently unconcerned about his visitor The woman played her last card tears But Ruddeen was unmoved

"I'll bet there is another woman in the case," exclaimed the stenographer. "And we've kept company just a month. You ungrateful men- I'll not leave this porch until you go with me, so there!"

Ruddeen raised his eyes, then looked past the woman

"Boy! Boy! Just a moment!" he called A taxicab stopped A chauffeur approached

"Come on Ruddeen remarked "You must have your way I'll go to the party"

The woman dried her tears Soon the entered the motor car Ruddeen whispered something to the chauffeur A moment spun and the car drew alongside a police station

"This is the park," remarked Ruddeen "Come!" He seized his companion by the arm and led her into the station where he asked the desk sergeant to place a peace disturbance charge against her

After hearing the testimony the court fined the woman The court said a parole would be considered

PROVIDE WORK FOR BLINDED SOLDIERS

An American Starts Those of France and England Doing Electrical Work.

London (by mail)—Blinded soldiers of France and Great Britain are being taught to earn their livings doing electrical construction following the system originated by an American, Dr Schuyler S. Wheeler, who recently returned to New York after spending three months here and in France introducing the work.

In its present stage the blind are taught to insulate coils for motors and dynamos and do a certain amount of assembling Dr Wheeler founded a blind workroom for this work about a year ago in Ampere, N. J., where he is president of a large concern manufacturing electrical machinery.

When it became known that the blind were able to do the work and to earn good livings in competition with "sighted workers," the French government invited Dr. Wheeler to come to France and teach the blinded soldiers. Subsequently, through Sir Arthur Pearson, the British authorities invited Dr. Wheeler to come to England.

In France two large electrical work rooms have been started for the blinded soldiers. The French branch of a large American electrical manufacturing company has founded one at their works in Neuilly-sur-Marne, where more than 500 will be installed Rene Vallery-Radot president of the council of the Pasteur institute, vice president of the Society of the Friends of Blind Soldiers, and soninlaw of the great Pasteur, has founded the other at Versailles, where several hundred soldiers are receiving instruction

In England, the British Electrical and Allied Manufacturers' association through Hugo Hirst, president of the General Electric Company, Ltd., working with Sir Arthur Pearson, head of St. Dunstan's and leader in the movement to aid the blinded soldiers, has agreed to foster the movement and give employment to all the blind who may be fitted for the work

Sir Arthur is most enthusiastic over the introduction of this new industry for the blind "The sincere gratitude of the blind community of this country," he said, "is due to Dr Wheeler for his public spirited and generous action in making the dangerous journey from the United States in order to give the benefit of his practical experience and advice. I have every hope that his action will mean congenial and profitable employment to hundreds, or perhaps thousands of blind."

In addition to the soldier blind, it is intended to teach the work to a large number of the blind women of the United Kingdom, for whom there is now practically no employment.

RAISE MORE WHEAT AND LESS DEVILTRY

Juarez, Mex.—"Mexicans in the north are raising less deviltry and more wheat" was the way an American mining man who reached here recently from a tour of the interior of Chihuahua state characterized the conditions in northern Mexico. In the fertile Laguna basin near Torrean, wheat has been planted instead of cotton this year because of the ravages of the pink boll weevil in that district last year which destroyed the cotton crop.

In the little valleys near Santa Rosalia, Jimenez and Pilar de Concho the native farmers have been harvesting their wheat crops and have found the yield much heavier than in former seasons. Along the Rio Grande and Conchos rivers in the Ojinaga district wheat harvests have been bounteous and the farmers in that district are prosperous. At Jimenez the old Hacienda Dolores mill, which was used as a fortress during the revolutions, has been started to grinding grain and the water power mills near Santa Rosalia are again operating after five years of idleness.

ITALY PROHIBITS THE EXPORTATION OF GEMS

Rome, (by mail).—The exportation of diamonds, rubies, sapphires, pearls and other precious stones has been prohibited. The reason for this action is that the depreciated value of Italian money has made it possible for dealers in Switzerland, France or Spain to buy these stones in Italy at the market price in lire and yet get a handsome bargain. As there has been accumulated in Italy for many centuries past large quantities of valuable stones, many of which since the war have been put on the market by needy owners, the fear has been expressed that Italy has been losing much of this form of her national wealth, through exportations, particularly to Switzerland.

IRISH PEOPLE ARE SWAYED BY PROPHECY

Implicit Belief In Legends and Dark Mysteries Made Most of By Sinn Feiners.

By K. WALTER.

Dublin (by mail).—You will have heard a great deal about the political state of Ireland, but it is impossible to understand the rebel sentiment of the country without knowing some of the extraordinary facts revealed to me by direct contact with the Irish people in these critical days. At first sight the success of Sinn Fein appears to be based on sheer political perversity—"England's difficulty is Ireland's opportunity" There is something in this so far as the political leaders are concerned, but the success of their appeal to the masses is not due to any political program Strange and mysterious influences are at work in the heart of Ireland. What follows is part of the result of a week's search for a clue to the present extravagance of feeling in the country; it is only a series of unconnected observations and stories, but taken together it will explain better than any political reasoning why the nationalists and the bishops and the labor leaders have at least for a time, thrown in their lot with Sinn Fein.

The country is buzzing with prophecies. You cannot talk to any one for more than a few minutes without some reference to them The ghosts of all the prophets of Ireland seem to have risen to the occasion. But it is not only that prophecies are being made and repeated and believed; prophecies are being fulfilled. The Black Pig has appeared. Let those smile who will; the prophecy of the Black Pig is one of the oldest and most accepted in Ireland. You never see a black pig in Ireland For generations the pious peasants have carefully killed off every pig that came into the world with a black skin. But now the black pig has been seen, a terrible creature that cannot be slain except by a silver bullet. He has been seen several times, and all the country knows it, marking his progress from day to day as anxiously as you and I follow the course of battle, and everybody knows that his path across the country is the path of the prophecy And at the same time there has come about a greater scarcity of silver than has ever been known, as indeed I can testify by many inconvenient experiences. So there will not be enough silver bullets to kill the Black Pig and he will complete his journey in order that the prophecy may be fulfilled, which said that there shall be no end to the war in Ireland until the great massacre, when the Black Pig shall travel through the country for a warning to the people.

This semi-mystical, semi-political belief in a coming final disaster, immense and inevitable, is common. The politicians have made the most of it. To the poetic mysticism of prophecy is now added the fiery warning of Sinn Fein that England is preparing the massacre and that the enforcement of conscription will be merely an excuse for the extermination of the Irish nation. And this mood of the day has not settled upon ignorant minds alone. I find the poet-painter-economist "AE" quite turned away from the comparatively reasoned view of affairs which he gave me a few months ago, and asserting vehemently though malevolent intentions of the English government.

There are two incidents showing how the popular mind works under these black influences. Sufficient time will have elapsed before this is published for the censor to permit their mention. A ship known to contain a certain staple food required in Ireland was torpedoed and sunk off the Irish coast The news ran over all the country in this version The English submarines are sinking the Irish food ships in order to starve the Irish nation. The other incident was the killing of several Irish fishermen, a submarine came to the surface near their boats and started shelling them. In the story that went through the country the submarine was an English submarine.

But among the many prophecies I might recount, the most romantic is one of which I happened to overhear the piecing together of information that is leading thousands to expect its early fulfillment. One man was telling another that the prophecy of Caravan was being remembered. This was the prophecy Two people whose names were given were to meet and marry in a certain fishing village, and they were to have a daughter whose name would be Mary and when the doom of the Irish nation was upon them, Mary would see ships coming in from the sea and she would leave her cottage wearing a petticoat of red to go to the village and give warning, and at the crossroads she would be killed, and that would be the sign of the end of all things The first part of the prophecy had been fulfilled 50 years ago, the man and woman named had met and married and made their home according the prophecy; and they had had a daughter and named her Mary. But when she grew up and was told of the prophecy concerning her, Mary had given up wearing the red petticoat, because she did not want to be killed at the crossroads; then she had married and left the village and it looked as if the rest of the prophecy would never be fulfilled although it was a true prophet who had prophesied because the first part of his words had come to pass. So said the first speaker. "I can tell you more about that," said the other. "Mary is a widow these many years and she's gone back to her old home and she is living in the cottage on the hill overlooking the sea. And," he added, as if that was final, "she's wearing the red petticoat."

The more exciting the political situation the more attention people pay to these prophecies and the more active are the agitators who make use of them. It is admitted that there are German agents among these agitators and it has been proved that money has been received from German sources through the revolutionary Irish leaders in America. Sinn Fein leaders are among them. They are working and praying for the defeat of the allies. They hate England and they hate America and the are counting on their friends in New York and Chicago to work for Germany, just as they are working for Germany in Ireland. With the help of the priests they are teaching the people to pray for a German victory. This is what an old woman told me: 'I used to pray nightly to God and His blessed Mother to keep the Germans out for they were bad and destroyed the convents and churches, but now I am praying they may win, as England is worse, and wants to wipe out the Irish." She added that she would rather see her son shot at home and "dacently" buried in Ireland.

The proposed extension of conscription to Ireland was the basis for rebel propaganda in that country, and among the disloyal Irish in the United States, previous to the rebellion of 1916. The German and rebel agents have succeeded by using the priests and the prophets in making the people believe that conscription is only an excuse for massacre and extermination. What other strange obsessions they have played upon or lodged in the Irish mind I must tell later.

PERILOUS JOURNEY THROUGH FINLAND

American Army Man Was Hurrying to Petrograd to Be Married.

Vologda, Russia (by mail)—A wild three day sleigh ride through the battle lines of the Finnish white guards and red guards brought Lieut. Alfred W. Kliefoth, of the United States army, to Petrograd just in time to keep his marriage engagement

Lieutenant Kliefoth, who was American passport control officer at Torneo, the Finnish border city at the Swedish frontier, left Torneo for Petrograd at a time when the railway communication was interrupted by the Finnish civil war. He was forced to leave his train, but obtained a sleigh and after three days' journey across the barren, snow covered and wolf infested interior of Finland, reached another railway line and made his way to Petrograd. On the night of February 20, after hurried preparations, Lieutenant Kliefoth and Miss Barbara Alexandria Leslie were married at one of the larger Petrograd churches. The next day Lieutenant Kliefoth and his bride left with a train of American refugees who were fleeing from Petrograd. But, instead of going all the way through to America as he had planned, Lieutenant Kliefoth was recalled from a little station on the Trans-Siberian railway to join the embassy staff at Vologda

Lieutenant Kliefoth's home is in Eon Du Lac, Wis. He is a graduate of the University of Wisconsin. He met his bride while attached to the American embassy at Petrograd. Mrs. Kliefoth is a Russian She is a daughter of General Leslie, a descendant of one of the Scotch officers at the court of Peter the Great, is a niece of Countess Tolstoi and was a lady in waiting at the Russian court in the old regime.

WILL GIVE MEDALS TO SHIP BUILDERS

Fleet Corporation Arranges Official Recognition For Employes.

From Emergency Fleet News.

Chairman Hurley, of the shipping board, has made announcement of a system whereby special services and special performances in the shipyards of the country will be recognized formally by the government.

At the suggestion of Charles M. Schwab, director general of the emergency fleet corporation, who has aroused the enthusiasm of the workers in the shipyards for an equitable method of recognizing the extra efforts being put forward to beat the submarines, a plan has been prepared by him and by Charles Piez, vice president, to provide government recognition of distinguished services both by whole organizations of ship workers and by individuals.

A competitive board has been created, composed of Rear Admiral F. F. Fletcher, a representative of labor who has not yet been selected, and two others. This board will decide upon the awards and determine the giving of the flags, badges and medals in accordance with the following plan:

There will be three methods of rewarding unusual and patriotic performances in the shipyards. First will be the awarding of a series of flags to the individual plants. Second, there will be service medals to the shipyard employes. Third, silver and gold medals will be awarded individuals who perform distinguished service of any sort.

The awarding of the flags will be based on a monthly competition in which every shipyard building vessels for the emergency fleet corporation will be eligible The competitive board, assisted by the emergency fleet corporation, will gather reports in a manner to be determined by the board, and on these reports will decide which shipbuilding plant each month has made the best record.

The yard that makes the best all around performance each month, with every factor considered, will be awarded the privilege of flying a special flag, combining the color blue with the United States shipping board flag. Every city having a shipyard will have its chance to help that yard win the honor of flying the "blue" flag. The shipyard that is rated second in performance will be awarded a flag binding the color "red" with the shipping board flag, and the third will be "white."

In each instance where a flag is awarded to a yard, it will fly at the masthead of that yard for one month, when it will be removed to the yard that is the subsequent winner. If any yard succeeds in winning first place three months in succession, a permanent flag will be awarded.

ONE-MAN MACHINE GUN RELIED ON BY GERMANS

With the American Army in France (by mail)—The simplifying of ordnance and unburdening of shock troops seem to be two of the principal points upon which the German effort has concentrated in the present offensive. They have employed no new arms or munition, but have sought to increase the intensity of fire by larger number of already existing arms and munitions. They consider that they have found one solution of this problem in the light machine gun, which can be carried and operated by one man.

Each company, today organized into three sections, has six machine guns, two to each section.

The light machine gun is said to embrace the mobility and the qualities of the heavy Maxim machine gun. The tripod is substituted by a simpler and much lighter support.

Situated as a rule at the wings of the section, encircling the rifles, this arm has for its purpose:

1—In an attack to force the enemy to dig in during the advance of the infantry and to reduce or paralize the machine gun nests or strong points of the enemy

2—On the defense, to guard the flanks in the front line and break up counter attacks.

Why We Fight

No. 4

Because Germany for Years Sought to Undermine Our Government and Our Ideals

By CLARENCE L. SPEED
Secretary of the War Committee of the Union League Club of Chicago.

We are fighting Germany for the right to live our own lives as we see fit. We are fighting for our laws, our ideals, our homes, our institutions.

"But, how," one may ask, "were all these things threatened by Germany before the war started? It is easy to see how they may be threatened now, for if we are defeated we are lost, but before the war started did Germany menace those things we hold most sacred?"

Let the Germans themselves answer. After you have read the evidence out of their own mouths, you may decide whether or not Germany planned to upset our institutions, our ideals, our very mode of life.

In 1901 the National German-American alliance was formed in the United States. In 1907 it was incorporated by act of congress. Its charter is now being attacked in that same body. One of the objects of the alliance, as officially announced, was "to check nativistic encroachments." In other words, to keep the Germans from becoming Americans. Another object was "to awaken and strengthen the sense of unity among the people of German origin in America."

"This alliance," its preliminary statement of aims concludes, "is pledged to bring its entire organization to the support of any state federation which is engaged in the struggle for any of these objects."

It was pledged, in other words, to have its members vote, not as individuals, but as German controlled units, for or against anthing of which they did not approve.

The desire for resisting "nativistic encroachments," was particularly abhorrent to American ideals, because the effort in this country has always been to keep politics free from racial or religious influences. Yet here was a body, proclaiming itself German in origin and thought, seeking to perpetuate this German feeling in the midst of America.

From its very start the alliance sought to foment discord with England. It always spoke of the American press as "the Anglo-American" press, and it carried out a long and well-directed campaign for the introduction of the German language into the schools and its use in civil life.

"The National Alliance," according to an issue of its official Bulletin before this nation entered the war, "is waging war against Anglo-Saxonism, against the fanatical enemies of personal liberty and political freedom, it is combating narrow-minded, benighted know-nothingism, the influence of the British, and the enslaving Puritanism, which had its birth in England."

"The race war which we will be compelled to go through with on American soil will be our world war," said the New York Staats Zeitung in fighting a proposal to amend the New York constitution to make ability to speak and write the English language a requisite for suffrage.

Ludwig Fulda wrote a book, "American Impressions." They were impressions of a German who had studied this nation with a view to seeing it ultimately Germanized. "Germanization is synonymous with causing to speak German," he said, "and speaking German means to remain German."

Wherever there were signs of discontent, of a movement which might tend to disrupt this country, or any other which Germany might find as a commercial rival, the German-American alliance was sure to be on the job. It gave support to the Irish-American societies, because these societies, before the war, were working for the separation of Ireland from England, a matter in which Germany, at that time, could have no legitimate interest. But Germany, even then, was preparing for war, and was doing every possible thing to weaken its coming enemies. A disorganized America, one filled with German reservists, would be in no position to side with her enemies, Germany figured. On this subject the much-quoted Bernhardi wrote:

"Measures must be taken at least to the extent of providing that the German element is not split up in the world, but remains united in compact blocks, and thus forms, even in foreign countries, political centers of gravity in our favor. The isolated groups of Germans abroad greatly benefit our trade, since by preference they obtain goods from Germany; but they may also be useful to us politically, as we discover in America. The German-Americans have formed a political alliance with the Irish; and, thus, united, constitute a power in the state with which the American government must reckon."

With the outbreak of the war in Europe the actions of the German-American alliance became bolder. The campaign for membership took on new vigor.

Can we talk of peace with a Germany, that, even in times of peace, is trying to disorganize our country, foment strife, and destroy our unity, simply because a strong, united nation on the other side of the world is not German? Can we make peace with a country that fills our land with paid emissaries in an effort to make its language supplant our own? Can we talk of peace while a government that considers the world its prey dominates Germany?

Why We Fight

No. 5

Because Germany Menaces the Freedom of the World and Russia Can no Longer Resist

By CLARENCE L. SPEED
Secretary of the War Committee of the Union League Club of Chicago.

We are in this war with Germany because it is a war for freedom more truly than ever before was a war fought for the liberty of man. In times past, it is true, men have fought for freedom from oppressors. Sometimes they have won and sometimes they have lost. But always there has been a place in this big world where those who had lost in the struggle at home might go and find a country where they might enjoy the liberty they loved.

Now all is different. If the forces which are fighting for freedom in this war are defeated, there will be no place in the whole world to which they may go to find a refuge from Prussian domination. Every land under the sun will be directly or indirectly under control of the victor; and if the victor is autocracy, freedom perishes.

The land where freedom is most imminently menaced by the legions of Prussian autocracy, at this moment, is the land where unwonted freedom temporarily has run riot and has lost the power to fight for itself—Russia. We are fighting for the freedom of Russia, and must continue to fight for it until Russia learns what freedom means, and is again able to fight. If we do not, freedom will die in Russia; Prussian autocracy will rule and exploit the country for its own benefit; and the very forces which overthrew the czar will be turned against the freedom not only of themselves, but of other lands.

In years gone by, when the forces of revolution were showing themselves here and there in Russia, they had the sympathy of America in spite of the methods of terrorism of which we did not approve. When the czar and the kaiser, leaders of autocracy, were locked in a death grapple, Russia still had our sympathy, because she was fighting on the side of those who were seeking to safeguard the world from Prussian militarism.

When the czar was deposed over night American feelings were mixed. There was joy at the downfall of an old, and sometimes cruel autocracy, but there was fear that Russia would become too disorganized to fight further, coupled with the thought that perhaps the revolution had come too soon to be effective.

Then followed the brief regime of Kerensky, when it began to look as though freedom in Russia might be an organized freedom, prepared to fight for its rights, and all America hailed the Russian revolution as a blessing. It had become absolutely correct to say that the war was a war of democracy against autocracy. No pro-German could longer point to the czar, whenever an argument arose.

Finally came the bolsheviki revolution, in which Kerensky was overthrown. Russian industry and Russian society were disorganized, and Russian armies ceased to fight. The kaiser's armies pressed on unopposed, took what they desired in spite of a signed peace, and Russia appeared to be about to pass completely under control of Germany. America stood aghast at the prank freedom had played, and American opinion turned largely against Russia, but thinking men refused to give up hope. Russia was and still is incapable of offering resistance, but Russia is not resigned to autocracy. It devolves upon others to fight for the freedom Russia must have.

The experience of other nations has been that men who loved freedom were willing to fight for it, and to die for it if necessary. The Russian attitude of nonresistance was something new in the world, and is hard to understand. The bolsheviki represented the extreme idea of liberty. To them freedom meant not the right of the majority to choose their form of government, but the right of the individual to be free from all forms of governmental restraint. They would tear down the old order completely, at one stroke, and set up the millenium. They would divide the land, the factories and the tools among the workers, and have no masters henceforth.

Even in Russia, however, there were dissenters. Some took up arms; and the bolsheviki, who fought the Germans not at all, fought their brothers most ferociously. The result was anarchy, lawlessness, massacre, the disorganization of the railways and the failure of the food supply. The millenium refused to come at the mere decree of the bolsheviki. It was shown that there must be organization and government of some sort.

Russia will not longer fight side by side with her former allies. So insiduous has been the German propaganda that, in many instances, Russian hatred of the allies seems to be deeper than hatred of Germany.

Therefore the United States cannot render direct aid to the struggling people of Russia. She cannot send them armies and supplies, for they have refused to do battle for themselves. To fight for Russia she must fight on the western front. She must do her share toward humbling the kaiser, and forcing him to relinquish his grasp on the East.

That is why we cannot talk peace with Germany as long as the kaiser has one single Russian province under his heel.

C. W. Wiles is having his side walk in front of his house put into repair this week.

Miss Loretta Lawhorn returned from Cedar Rapids Monday for a visit with Klemme relatives and friends.

Mrs. Quandt, of Belmond, came Monday for a few days visit at the home of her parents, Mr. and Mrs. T. Blank, and family.

Mr. and Mrs. B. R. Lau leave for Minneapolis Thursday, accompanied by Miss Minnie Lau, where she will spend some time with them at their summer cottage at Silver Lake.

Roy Newman returned to his home at Wing, North Dakota, after spending about three weeks visiting with Klemme friends.

We had a letter from Phil Gorkow the other day. He is with Ringlings Circus Band and they are now playing in the east and through New York. They expect to hit Iowa in August.

A number of the Klemme band boys went to Garner Tuesday evening to assist the Garner band. In turn the Garner band will send down a bunch of palyers to help out the Klemme band. In this way both bands are greatly benefited.

The concrete foundation for the new Wellemeyer Building has been completed and the other work will begin. The workmen have been somewhat delayed on account of the one wall caving in for them.

The Klemme Band gave a very good concert on the Klemme streets last Wednesday evening and there was a large crowd in attendance. They will give a concert every Wednesday evening when the weather is favorable.

Roy McElmurray came back from the Park hospital at Mason City Sunday. He had been confined to the hospital for seven weeks following a serious accident while working on a farm. Roy is feeling good, he says, but a little weak yet. He got out of the hospital the Fourth of July, and no doubt lost little time in getting into the fresh air once more.

Bohemia's Forest Area.

Bohemia has a forest area equal to 29 per cent of its total area, and the quantity of wood cut annually averages 6,474,105 cubic yards, of which 4,316,070 cubic yards are suitable for building and manufacturing, and the remainder for fuel. Bohemia exports annually about 1,307,900 cubic yards of forest products to Germany.

Saved by His Hobby.

There was an official on one of our great railroads who was retired at seventy. "He'll die now," said his friends kindly. But he didn't. Instead, he became interested in the wild flowers, and now he is too busy in looking for the ram's head orchid, and trying to find a new station for the hart's tongue fern, and tramping around in the woods and fields in all kinds of weather, even to think of dying. Anyway, he wouldn't have time until he's finished his monograph on the willows of the United States.—Lippincott's.

Dwarf Trees.

The Chinese influence on interior decoration extends to the wonderful dwarf trees which, once almost prohibitively expensive, are now to be had at really popular prices, commencing at about 60 cents for diminutive yews and cedars that look as if they had come out of a "Kewpies'" garden. Stately oaks, sycamores, cedars, standing at least 20 inches high, are wonderful with their gnarled and twisted branches and close foliage; they appear like ancient forest trees viewed from afar and through the "wrong end" of a telescope.

CHAPTER ELEVEN (Continued.)

"And confessed our love? Apart from the fact that her womanly modesty would have prevented her, what good would it have done? On the contrary, it meant lending greater weight to the accusation. That was just what Lupin—who, Heaven knows how, had foreseen matters appearing only [illegible] the police thought [illegible] the mystery of the [illegible] Wednesday.

"He [illegible] explain the [illegible] to us.

"I can explain them. We [illegible] Leauville's jealousy. He [illegible] to her self. And then again, why did he suspect us? We [illegible] it into his head that [illegible] not to kill Lupin. Where [illegible] his fears, his premonitions [illegible]? It is a mystery. He [illegible] letters [illegible] which letters [illegible] books of the [illegible] [illegible] Monsieur [illegible] [illegible] [illegible]

"You [illegible] know either what [illegible] done after leaving [illegible] between 12 and 2 in the [illegible]

"No. [illegible] Edward by [illegible] Arsène Lupin not [illegible] what she was doing? More [illegible]

"You were [illegible] that evening [illegible] of the murder, at [illegible] Street. What were you doing there?

"I was going to the Boulevard Saint-Michel and I passed under Marie's windows. Remember that it was a Wednesday. I came back on the following Wednesday, and, still knowing nothing of the tragedy or of Marie's arrest, I came back [illegible] the second Wednesday—which was the evening on which you found out where I lived and informed Sergeant Mazeroux against me."

"Still wrong. Did you know of the Morrington inheritance?

"No, for Florence either and we had every reason to think that Marie and her husband knew no more about it than we did.

"That barn at Damigni was it the first time that you had entered it?

"Yes, and our astonishment at the sight of the two skeletons hanging from the rafters equalled yours."

Don Luis was silent. He cast about for a few seconds longer to see if he had any more questions to ask. Then he said:

"That is all I wanted to know. Are you, on your side, certain that everything that is necessary has been said?"

"Yes."

"This is a serious moment. It is possible that we may not meet again. Now you have not given me a single proof of your statements."

"I have told you the truth. To a man like yourself, the truth is enough. As for me, I am beaten. I give up the struggle, or, rather, I place myself under your orders. Save Marie."

"I will save the three of you," said Perenna. "The fourth of the mysterious letters is to make its appearance tomorrow: that leaves ample time for us to lay our heads together and study the matter fully. And tomorrow evening I shall go there and, with the help of all that you have told me, I shall prove the innocence of you all. The essential thing is to be present at the meeting on the 25th of May."

"Please think only of Marie. Sacrifice me, if necessary. Sacrifice Florence even. I am speaking in her name as well as my own when I tell you that it is better to desert us than to jeopardize the slightest chance of success."

"I will save the three of you," Perenna repeated.

He pushed the door ajar and, after listening outside, said:

"Don't move. And don't open the door to anybody, on any pretext whatever, before I come to fetch you. I shall not be long."

He locked the door behind him and went down to the first floor. He did not feel those high spirits which usually cheered him on the eve of his great battles. This time, Florence Levasseur's life and liberty were at stake, and the consequences of a defeat seemed to him worse than death.

Through the window on the landing he saw the detectives guarding the courtyard. He counted six of them. And he also saw the deputy chief at one of the windows of his study, watching the courtyard and keeping in touch with his detectives.

By Jove! he thought, "he's sticking to his post. It will be a tough job. He suspects something. However, let's make a start."

He went through the drawing-room and entered his study. Weber saw him. The two enemies were face to face.

There was a few seconds' silence before the duel opened, the duel which was bound to be swift and vigorous, without the least sign of weakness or distraction on either side. It could not last longer than three minutes.

The deputy chief's face bore an expression of mingled joy and anxiety. For the first time he had permission, he had orders, to fight that accursed Don Luis against whom he had never yet been able to satisfy his hatred. And his delight was all the greater because to hold every trump, whereas Don Luis had put himself in the wrong by defending Florence Levasseur and tampering with the girl's portrait. On the other hand, Weber did not forget that Don Luis was identical with Arsène Lupin, and this consideration caused him a certain uneasiness. He was obviously thinking:

The least blunder, and I'm done for."

He crossed swords with a jest.

"I see that you were not in Mlle. Levasseur's lodge, as your man pretended."

"My man spoke in accordance with my instructions. I was in my bedroom, upstairs. But I wanted to finish the job before I came down."

And is it done?"

"It's done. Florence Levasseur and Gaston Sauverand are in my room, gagged and bound. You have only to accept delivery of the goods."

"Gaston Sauverand!" cried Weber. "Then it was he who was seen coming in!"

"Yes. He was simply living with Florence Levasseur, whose lover he is."

"Oho!" said the deputy chief, in a bantering tone. "Her lover!"

"Yes; and when Sergeant Mazeroux brought Florence Levasseur to my room, to question her out of hearing of the servants, Sauverand, foreseeing the arrest of his mistress, had the audacity to join us. He tried to rescue her from our hands."

"And you checkmated him?"

"Yes."

It was clear that the deputy chief did not believe one word of the story. He knew through M. Desmalions and Mazeroux that Don Luis was in love with Florence, and Don Luis was not the man, even through jealousy, to hand over a woman whom he loved. He increased his attention.

"Good business!" he said. "Take me up to your room. Was it a hard struggle?"

"Not very. I managed to disarm the scoundrel. All the same, Mazeroux got stabbed in the thumb."

"Nothing serious?"

"Oh, dear, no; but he has gone to have his wound dressed at the chemist's."

The deputy chief stopped, greatly surprised.

"What! Isn't Mazeroux in your room with the two prisoners?"

"I never told you that he was."

"No, but your butler——"

"The butler made a mistake. Mazeroux went out a few minutes before you came."

"It's funny," said Weber, watching Don Luis closely, "but my men all think he's here. They haven't seen him go out."

"They haven't seen him go out?" echoed Don Luis, pretending to feel anxious. "But, then, where can he be? He told me he wanted to have his thumb seen to."

The deputy chief was growing more and more suspicious. Evidently Perenna was trying to get rid of him by sending him in search of the sergeant.

"I will send one of my men," he said. "Is the chemist's near?"

"Just around the corner, in the Rue de Bourgogne. Besides, we can telephone."

"Oh, we can telephone!" muttered Weber.

He was quite at a loss and looked like a man who does not know what is going to happen next. He moved slowly toward the instrument, while barring the way to Don Luis to prevent his escaping. Don Luis therefore retreated to the telephone box, as if forced to do so, took down the receiver with one hand and, calling, "Hullo! Hullo! Saxe, 2409," with the other hand, which was resting against the wall, he cut one of the wires with a pair of pliers which he had taken off the table as he passed.

"Hullo! Are you there? Is that 2409? Are you the chemist? . . . Hullo! . . . Sergeant Mazeroux of the detective service is with you, isn't he? Eh? What? What do you say? But it's too awful! Are you sure? Do you mean to say the wound is poisoned?"

Without thinking what he was doing, the deputy chief pushed Don Luis aside and took hold of the receiver. The thought of the poisoned wound was too much for him.

"Are you there?" he cried, keeping an eye on Don Luis and motioning to him not to go away. "Are you there? . . . Eh? It's Deputy Chief Weber, of the detective office, speaking. Hullo! Are you there? I want to know about Sergeant Mazeroux . . . Are you there? . . . Oh, hang it, why don't you answer!"

Suddenly he let go the instrument, looked at the wires, perceived that they had been cut and turned round, showing a face that clearly expressed the thought in his mind.

"That's done it. I've been tricked!"

Perenna was standing a couple of yards behind him, leaning carelessly against the woodwork of the arch, with his left hand passed between his back and the woodwork. He was smiling, smiling, pleasantly, kindly, and genially.

"Don't move!" he said, with a gesture of his right hand.

Weber, more frightened by the smile than he would have been by threats, took good care not to move.

"Don't move," repeated Don Luis, in a very quiet voice. "And, whatever you do, don't be alarmed. You shan't be hurt, I promise you. Just five minutes in a dark cell for a naughty little boy. Are you ready? One, two, three! Bang!"

He stood aside and pressed the button that worked the iron curtain. The heavy panel came crashing to the floor. The deputy chief was a prisoner.

"That's a hundred millions gone to Jericho," grumbled Don Luis. "A pretty trick, but a bit expensive. Good-bye, Morrington inheritance! Good-by, Don Luis Perenna! And now, my dear Lupin, if you don't want Weber to take his revenge, beat a retreat and in good order. One, two; left, right; left, right!"

As he spoke, he locked on the inside, the folding doors between the drawing room and the first floor anteroom; then, returning to his study, he locked the door between this room and the drawing room.

The deputy chief was banging at the iron curtain with all his might and shouting so loud that they were bound to hear him outside through the open window.

"You're not making half enough noise, deputy!" cried Don Luis. "Let's see what we can do."

He took his revolver and fired off three bullets, one of which broke a pane. Then he quickly left his study by a small, massive door, which he carefully closed behind him. He was now in a secret passage which ran round both rooms and ended at another door leading to the anteroom. He opened this door wide and was thus able to hide behind it.

Attracted by the shots and the noise, the detectives were already rushing through the hall and up the staircase. When they reached the first floor and had gone through the anteroom, as the drawing room doors were [illegible] the only outlet open to them was the passage, at the end of which they could hear the deputy shouting. They all six darted down it.

When the last of them had vanished round the bend in the passage, Don Luis softly pushed back the door that concealed him and locked it like the rest. The six detectives were as safely imprisoned as the deputy chief.

"Bottled!" muttered Don Luis. "It will take them quite five minutes to realize the situation, to bang at the locked doors, and to break down one of them. In five minutes we shall be far away."

He met two of his servants running up with scared faces, the chauffeur and the butler. He flung each of them a thousand-franc note and said to the chauffeur:

"Set the engine going, there's a sportsman, and let no one near the machine to block my way. Two thousand francs more for each of you if I get off in the motor. Don't stand staring at me like that. I mean what I say. Two thousand francs apiece: it's for you to earn it. Look sharp!"

He himself went up the second flight without undue haste, remaining master of himself. But, on the last stair, he was seized with such a feeling of elation that [illegible]

The room was empty.

What! he stammered. What does this mean? They're [illegible] Florence——"

[illegible] rtainly, unlikely though it [illegible] had hitherto supposed [illegible] and possessed a false [illegible] But how could they both have escaped, in the [illegible] detectives? He [illegible] around him. And then he [illegible] stood.

And [illegible] open chest he saw the [illegible] of a narrow descend[illegible] ladder.

In a second, Don Luis conjured up the whole story of the past: Count Malonyr's ancestress hiding in the old family mansion, escaping the search of the perquisitors, and in this way living through [illegible] the revolutionary troubles. Everything was explained. A passage contrived in the thickness of the wall led to some distant outlet. And this was how Florence used to come and go through the house, this was how Gaston went in and out in all security; and this also was how both of them were able to enter his room and surprise his secrets.

Why not have told me?" he wondered. "A lingering suspicion, I suppose."

But his eyes were attracted by a sheet of paper on the table. With a feverish hand, Gaston Sauverand had scribbled the following lines in pencil:

"We are trying to escape so as not to compromise you. If we are caught, it can't be helped. The great thing is that you should be free. All our hopes are centered in you."

Below were two words written by Florence:

Save Marie.

"Ah," he murmured, disconcerted by the turn of events and not knowing what to decide, "why, oh, why did they not obey my instructions? We are separated now——"

Downstairs the detectives were battering at the door of the passage in which they were imprisoned. Perhaps he would still have time to reach his motor before they succeeded in breaking down the door. Nevertheless, he preferred to take the same road as Florence and Sauverand, which gave him the hope of saving them and of rescuing them in case of danger.

He therefore stepped over the side of the chest, placed his foot on the top rung and went down. Some 20 bars brought him to the middle of the first floor. Here, by the light of his electric lantern, he entered a sort of low, vaulted tunnel, dug, as he thought, in the wall, and so narrow that he could only walk along it sideways.

Thirty yards farther there was a bend, at right angles; and next, at the end of another tunnel of the same length, a trapdoor, which stood open, revealing the rungs of a second ladder. He did not doubt that the fugitives had gone this way.

It was quite light at the bottom. Here he found himself in a cupboard which was also open and which, on ordinary occasions, must have been covered by curtains that were now drawn. This cupboard faced a bed that filled almost the whole space of an alcove. On passing through the alcove and reaching a room from which it was separated only by a slender partition, to his great surprise, he recognized Florence's sitting room.

Week End Finds Allied Nations New Cause For Added Confidence

Fizzle of the Latest Big German Blow on West Front Indicates That Power and Skill of the Associated Armies Is Growing Rapidly.

BY FRANK H. SIMONDS.

(Copyright, 1918, by the New York Tribune.)

The first thing to be said of recent operations on the west front is that the record is the most hopeful single circumstance since the German offensive began, on March 21. The latest phase of the "Battle for Paris" practically ended after three days, in a bloody check for the armies of the crown prince—a check recalling the Verdun episode and recalling it the more vividly because of successful French counter attacks.

Recognizing that the enemy still holds half of his strategic reserve, anywhere from 50 to 70 divisions intact, and that he has gained some valuable ground in his latest attack and still possesses the power to deliver another blow comparable with those in Flanders and on the Aisne, we have still the right to a measure of optimism based upon recent events.

Now, at the end of three months, with a loss of above 500,000, the German has drawn some 20 miles nearer to Paris, made large captures in prisoners and in booty, reoccupied around 2,000 square miles of France, more than half of it a desert as a result of German devastations. He has won signal battle successes, but he has defeated only one army, the Fifth British army, in such fashion as to impair its organization, and in the case of the French he has put no more than four divisions, those which held the Aisne positions, out of the campaign.

To balance his gains the German has lost three months, and these three months mean the arrival of not less than 400,000 American combatant troops in France, the insurance of the arrival of another 200,000 by July 1, and the consequent presence in France by August 1 of some 750,000 fighting troops representing the United States. More than this, three months have been allowed the British to repair past errors and to do two things: Draft more men from civil life into the army and draw out of "side shows" and from home and foreign garrisons more regiments and divisions for service in France.

Thus, by August 1 at the latest, possibly earlier, the allied situation in respect of numbers will be actually stronger than it was in March; despite any conceivable casualties they will have more men in line and in reserve than in the critical days of the battle of Picardy, and thenceforward the improvement will be rapid. The Germans, on the other hand, made their maximum concentration at the outset; they had either engaged or assembled all they had, and their situation, since they have no new reservoir of reserves, must henceforth become worse steadily.

Germany undertook to win the campaign of 1918, as Napoleon sought success in the Waterloo campaign by offsetting an eventual inferiority in numbers and resources by superior swiftness in concentration and attack. She caught her enemies napping, as the French emperor caught his. She has won her opening round as Napoleon won Ligny, but time and eventual numerical advantage were bound to turn against her unless she won a military triumph quickly, and after three months she has not won the triumph, nor is she near to supreme success. She has spent half her time, at least a third of her reserves, and the element of surprise following superior concentration is passing.

The measure of these assertions is found in the circumstances of the battle of Compiegne, the latest German attack. In this instance the Germans attacked on a front but little shorter than his operative front at the Aisne. He used, at least 20 divisions at the outset, as in Champagne. He employed the brief and intense bombardment, the rapid advance of huge masses. His small mobile field gun, of one and one-half inches, was relied upon, as usual, and his troops were assembled by secret marches. He employed exactly the tactics which had won him his earlier successes.

This time, however, there was no surprise. The French were ready; they surrendered their first positions after brief but sufficient defenses; their reserves entered the struggle before the German masses had submerged the troops in line, whose mission it was to delay the assailant [illegible] the reserves arrived. Thereafter [illegible] battle line rapidly stabilized itself [illegible] the third day French counter attacks had won back a great deal of ground [illegible] on the west flank the German advance had been definitely halted, and [illegible] German left along the Oise had been narrowed into a salient too small to permit further advance until it could be widened.

Accoringly on the sixth day the German broke off the battle.

In all the larger purposes, the German failed and his losses were colossal. His appropriation of "cannon fodder," the casualties he was willing to incur to attain his object, was exceeded before the fifth day, and on that day he definitely abandoned his attack, covering his abandonment with spirited but local operation on the flank of the edge of the Forest of Villers-Cotterets, which was without importance. In Picardy the Germans gained upward of 40 miles, in Flanders around 12; the Aisne drive netted but the last venture yielded eight, with a minimum of prisoners and guns, no ammunition booty, while the French were able to undertake successful counter attacks on the first day. In sum, two concentrated armies met, fought a pitched battle of five days, at the end of which the assailant gave it up after having paid a terrible price for local gains of indecisive value. Here is solid ground for confidence, the more solid because this happened in the third month of the offensive—proving allied power and skill in defense to be growing rapidly.

Is This Wall Street's War?

John Spargo, Socialist, in German Democracy Bulletin.

With this fact in mind, turn to the financial columns of any great American newspaper for the weeks immediately preceding the declaration of war in April, 1917. You will find that every time the prospects of a peaceful settlement with Germany improved prices rose on the stock exchange. On the other hand, every time the prospects of peace lessened and the chance of war increased, there was a marked fall of prices on the stock exchange.

There could be no stronger evidence that Wall street wanted peace and feared war.

When war was declared by congress prices on the stock exchange tumbled once more, proving that Wall street saw no prospects of great profits from our entry into the world strife.

It is true that American financiers had loaned money to the allied nations. They had loaned about $2,000,000,000, principally to England and France. That sum, of course, was but a small fraction of the total war debt of those countries. There is not one chance in 1,000,000 that they would have failed to pay their American creditors, even if they were defeated.

They might, in a condition of general bankruptcy, fail to meet the interest on bonds held by their own citizens, but they would not default on their American debt, except in case of a social revolution and the repudiation of all national debts. Such a revolution was and is extremely improbable.

If the $2,000,000,000 were ever in danger of being lost, big business, devoid of patriotism as charged, could have secured its investments without war. It would have been easy to get Germany to take the risk in return for American neutrality. That would have been a big bargain for Germany.

If you assume that Wall street controlled the government and that Wall street cared only for its billions, it need not have incurred the risk of war to save those billions. Mr. Morgan, or some other representative of Wall street could have said to Count von Bernstorff, the German ambassador: "We can not lose our $2,000,000,000. Either Germany must secure us against that risk or we must force our government to enter the war on the side of the allies." It would not have required 48 hours for Germany to effect a settlement satisfactory to Mr. Morgan.

For the sake of the argument, let us assume that without our aid the defeat of the allied nations was certain; that the $2,000,000,000 loaned by American financiers to the allies was certain to be lost as a result of that defeat; that it would have been impossible for Germany to guarantee the safety of the American investors. With all these assumptions made, it is easy to show the absurdity of the contention that Wall street's interests could be best served by war.

In the two and a half years prior to our entrance into the war American big business was reaping fabulous profits through the sale of supplies to neutral and belligerent nations. Sound financial judgment, uninfluenced by other considerations, must have desired above all else a continuance of those conditions.

Wall street does not lack intelligence. In April, 1917, it had the experience of European nations for two and a half years of war to guide it. From that experience Wall street could learn—as, indeed, could every intelligent person, that if we entered the war:

1. The immense war profits obtained through trade with European nations would practically cease.

2. Enormous burdens of taxation would be imposed upon profits and large incomes. (These two items alone would amount in one year to far more than the sum of the loans made to the allied nations).

3. Socialization, through government ownership, price fixing, limitation of profits, and other agencies, would be greatly extended and the opportunities for profit making greatly lessened.

4. Radical and revolutionary movement hostile to Wall street's interest would be strengthened.

5. Big business must be heavily taxed for many years after the war.

This is not theorozing; it is the plain lesson of the history of two and a half years of the war. With that history Wall street certainly was familiar.

I hold no brief for Wall street. Its ways are not my ways. Its interests are not my interests. Its people are not my people. But truth compels the repudiation of the utterly baseless charge that we are in this war at Wall street's instance.

It is not a "merchant's war" that we are fighting. It is a freemen's war. Not on Wall street's gain are we making our vast and tragic sacrifice, but for the freedom and peace of all mankind.

PAPERS IN MEXICO CLOSELY WATCHED

Carranza Will Permit No Criticism—Pro-Germans Have Full Sway.

Mexico City, (by mail)—Mexican newspapermen, as well as foreign correspondents, have been caught in the net which the government recently spread for what are termed "pernicious foreigners," eligible for deportation under Article 33 of the constitution and disseminators of false news. A policy of "forcible investigation" was the remedy applied to the editors of Redencion, an afternoon paper opposed to the government. This paper published stories of the alleged successes won by Gen. Louis Caballero recently in Tamaulipas, after he revolted against the government, and printed somewhat alarming stories of conditions in that state.

To prove its contention that the news printed was false, the government provided the two editors with an escort of a general and 20 men and sent them on a trip through Tamaulipas by way of Monterey to Tampico. Upon their return after a journey that lasted about a fortnight, the editors admitted they had not found the conditions prevailing to which they had referred. But, by implication, they stated it would have been foolish for them to expect to make an independent investigation with the escort that accompanied them.

Another editor whose arrest has been ordered and whose paper, El Hombre Libre, has not appeared for some time is Hugo Sol. He attacked the president and the administration. Attorney Emilio Ruz Quijano, responsible for the publication of Tilin-Tilin, (Ring the Bell) is also in the toils. His sheet, a weekly, published a number of cartoons of a nature that, aside from their political significance, would never have been permitted to pass through the United States mails. The cartoons were violently anti-governmental.

NATIVES OF SOUTH AFRICA BENEFITTED

London (by mail).—In the future history of South Africa the Botha government may be longest remembered as the author of the "Natives' Land Act." The measure is the greatest experiment that has ever been made in the administration of a mixed people. The land act commission appointed to review the division of land under the act between natives and whites, decided that the whites have been given an undue share. The native population of the country is about 3,500,000. The lands set apart for natives under the act amounted to 40,000,000 shares out of 300,000,000. The remainder was allotted to a white population of less than 1,500,000.

As the object of the act was to provide for the development of the native peoples under suitable conditions, the commission has decided that the natives must have a larger share. It remains now for the South African parliament to confirm the decision, after which various other reforms will be put into effect, among them the creation of native councils, the substitution of a system of paid agricultural labor for irregular squatting, and the extension of the franchise and of education.

Plan a Riley Statue.

The contract for modeling a life size statue of James Whitcomb Riley, which is to be placed in the yard of the court house at Greenfield, Ind., the birthplace of Indiana's beloved poet, has been awarded to Mrs. Myra R. Richards, an Indianapolis sculptor.

Riley posed before his death for Mrs. Richards, who is the only sculptor to whom he ever gave a sitting. The statue will be a bronze figure, which will stand on a solid granite pedestal.

FLIES FOR FRANCE, WINS PROMOTIONS

UNDERWOOD

Frank L. Baylies.

An American boy from New Bedford, Mass., has been cited in French army orders as follows:

"Frank L. Baylies, an excellent pursuit pilot, refused to enter the American aviation service as an officer in order not to quit the French escadrille in which he daily engages in combat."

Baylies, a young real estate operator in New Bedford, tried several times to enlist in the American aviation service but the doctors turned him down declaring that his eyes were bad. The French accepted him, and after he had put down a score of Germans made him a sergeant, and then a lieutenant. He won the croix de guerre long ago. He has won the title of "one of the sharpest-shooting pilots in the service."

PIGS MASCOTS OF AVIATORS

From Stars and Stripes.

"Pigs is pigs." Likewise, aviators is aviators. And aviators will have their little pastimes, war or no war.

Their latest little pastime—at least, at a certain camp—is the buying up and fattening of baby French pigs.

In their off hours, what time they are not swirling through the empyrean like the late Mr. Shelley's celebrated skylark, they drive through the quiet countryside looking for piglets. When they spot a likely one, they approach the owner, and then something like the following conversation ensues:

"Je vous donnerai, Monsieur (or Madame) 100 francs pour ce cochon."

"Mais non, mon Lieutenant, 125 francs."

"100 francs."

"125 francs!"

"Non!"

"Si!"

"Non!"

"Si!"

"100 francs, Monsieur (or Madame), c'est tout." The aviator makes out as if to go away. But Monsieur (or Madame) relents, and offers:

"Eh bien, mon Lieutenant; 100 francs!" And the pig who has been a wide eyed and wide nostrilled observer of the transaction, is without further ado hustled into the aviators car, curls his tail up in a major's lap (or in a captain's if there isn't any major handy), and is driven off in state.

His Pigship is quartered in his own kind's stockade, along with a number of other porcine purchases, and fed on the leavings of the aviators' mess—that is, on the fat of the land. He is given a bath. He is named. Already the cochon compound includes such dignitaries as Willie, Hindenburg, Ludendorff, and Tirpitz, while a noisily grunting young lady pig has been swept Big Bertha. They all look their parts.

At the end of a year of nose diving for truffles and doing the tail spin in an effort to bite their flanks, those flying pigs, with all they have had to eat, promise to bring in a good round 500 francs apiece in open market. And then—and then—the aviators expect to have quite a surplus for their mess fund.

NEVER GET COLD IN 'EM SAYS LAUDER.

From a Minstrel in France, by Harry Lauder.

Scotch (in kilts) the Highland soldier is a great deal more comfortable and a great deal more sanely dressed, I believe, than the city dweller who is frightened and underpaid within an inch of his life. I think it is a matter of official record, that can be verified by the reports of the army surgeons, that kilted troops are among the healthiest in the whole army. I know that kilted troops are among the least subject to abdominal troubles of all sorts, colic and the like. The kilt hangs long and warm around the stomach in several thick layers, and a more perfect protection from the cold has never been devised for that highly delicate and susceptible region of the human anatomy.

Women, particularly, are always asking me a question. I have seen them eyeing me in cold weather, when I was walkin' around, comfortably, in my kilt. And their eyes wandered to my knees, and I would know before they opened their mouths what it was they were going to say.

Oh, Mr. Lauder,' they would ask me. 'Don't your poor knees get cold—with no coverings, exposed to this bitter cold?"

Well, they never have! That's all I can tell you. They have had the chance in all sorts of bitter weather. I am not thinking only of the comparatively mild winters of Britain—although, up north, in Scotland, we get some pretty severe winter weather. But I have been in western Canada, and in the northwestern states of the United States—Montana, North Dakota, Minnesota—where the thermometer drops far below zero. And my knees have never been cold yet. They do not suffer from the cold any more than does my face, which is as little covered and protected as they—and for the same reason, I suppose—they are used to the weather.

Account of the Shooting.

London.—(by mail.)—The official Australian correspondent at the front in France gives the following account of Australian machine gunners' claims to have participated in the shooting down of Baron von Richthofen:

"About 11 o'clock on the morning of April 21 the troops along the Somme and Ancre had heard distant popping from two fleets of British and German airplanes which had been fighting high over the German lines, when a German plane was seen diving after a British plane. These two, detached from the fight, came so low that they were temporarily hidden by hills from the sight of the Australian gunners and troops around them. Presently the sound of approaching engines was heard and low over the crest of the hills by the river came the British plane, making directly towards a position where there were two Lewis guns. Behind his plane could be seen the wings of the German plane pursuing. The German was pressing the English plane desperately close and firing short bursts from a machine gun. When about 100 yards away from the nearest Lewis gun the German plane, which at first had been obscured by the British plane, was now sufficiently near to enable the guns to fire on it without risk of hitting the British machine. Both guns fired a burst. The German plane the next instant wavered unsteadily to one side, banked up and veered in a sharp circle to the left, then shot in a line sheer down a steep, long angle to the ground about 400 yards from the Lewis gunners. When the burst was fired an officer told me he clearly saw fragments of wood or metal flicked from the machine."

The Effects of Opiates.

THAT INFANTS are peculiarly susceptible to opium and its various preparations, all of which are narcotic, is well known. Even in the smallest doses, if continued, these opiates cause changes in the functions and growth of the cells which are likely to become permanent, causing imbecility, mental perversion, a craving for alcohol or narcotics in later life. Nervous diseases, such as intractable nervous dyspepsia and lack of staying powers are a result of dosing with opiates or narcotics to keep children quiet in their infancy. The rule among physicians is that children should never receive opiates in the smallest doses for more than a day at a time, and only then if unavoidable.

The administration of Anodynes, Drops, Cordials, Soothing Syrups and other narcotics to children by any but a physician cannot be too strongly decried, and the druggist should not be a party to it. Children who are ill need the attention of a physician, and it is nothing less than a crime to dose them willfully with narcotics.

"Mornings I was so stiff and sore I could hardly get up," says A. C. Roulston, prop. blacksmith shop, 2240 Washington St., Roxbury, Mass. "The sharp pains through my kidneys were so bad I often thought I wouldn't be able to get to work. I couldn't rest comfortably and turned and tossed from one side to the other, with a dull, dragging backache. There were puffy spots under my eyes and I felt worn out all the time. WE SAVE FOOD HERE FOR OUR SOLDIERS OVER THERE

By LORD NORTHCLIFFE

The real reason why we are taking all these food-control precautions in Great Britain is not to protect the civil population at all, but to see that the allied armies at the front get their full rations. I can imagine no greater selfishness on the part of a democracy than to eat its fill while it is allowing its soldiers in that dreary land in which they have been for three years to go short. The very work of a soldier demands that he should be the best-fed man in the world.

And not only have we to protect the food of the soldier. You are all aware that since the beginning of the war the ships of the British navy and those attached to it have increased tenfold. Sometimes we only think of the navy in terms of battleships, destroyers and submarines. Added to these are thousands of small craft, trawlers, drifters, observation ships, and on every one of these, summer and winter—and do not forget that we have a very severe winter in the North sea and North Atlantic—are men who must have their daily full ration to carry out their work with greatest efficiency.

Quite apart from our navy, which has prevented any German ship from appearing on the ocean for the last 18 months, are the men in the air. Can you conceive a man going through that hellish life, 18,000 feet up, clothed in electrically heated clothes and supplied with oxygen to enable him to breathe—can you imagine him doing that on half rations?

Can you imagine the boys in the trenches surviving a week if we had to cut down their pork and beans and the various things they have to eat? And can you imagine the men and women working in the factories and mines, here and in Great Britain, going short? These are some of the reasons to which we in Great Britain attach such enormous importance in the control of the food of the people.

The same considerations operate in the United States to lead people to save food that our soldiers, sailors, aviators, fighting forces over there may have food.

Why We Fight

No. 6

Because German Lust of Conquest Menaces in Many Ways Our Very National Existence

By CLARENCE L. SPEED
Secretary of the War Committee of the Union League Club of Chicago.

Any one of the reasons why we are at war with Germany, mentioned in previous articles of this series, would be sufficient justification for this nation taking up arms. Only extreme patience, coupled, often, with complete failure to recognize the seriousness of the German menace to America and the world, kept the United States out of the war for nearly three years before it finally decided to join in. In fact justification for war with Germany existed years before the conflict in Europe was begun.

It has been shown that Germany, for years, had been plotting within our borders, encouraging immigrants to became citizens and at the same time remain faithful to the kaiser. She filled our land with spies and agents of disorganization when, to all outward appearances, relations between America and Germany, were of the most friendly character.

From evidence supplied by the Germans themselves, it has been shown that Germany's doctrine that might alone is right would menace the very independence of the United States just as surely as it destroyed that of Serbia and Belgium, just as soon as Germany felt herself strong enough to make a formal attack. German lust of conquest knew no bounds.

Events of the last year have proven that Germany, having split the world in half by her creation of a Mitteleuropa, extending from the Baltic almost to the Persian gulf, was planning to devour the halves separately. The fact that our half of the world was being reserved for dessert was all the more reason why we should enter the war while a part, at least, of the other half was still making resistance.

Finally, when the collapse of Russia revealed the fact that Germany was fighting, not a war of self-preservation, but one of conquest pure and simple, and that the freedom of the entire world was menaced, any question of why we are fighting seemed superfluous.

The military party in Germany started the war because it believed the time ripe for conquest.

Proof that ambition, and not consideration of its own safety, prompted Germany to begin the war is given by the fact that Serbia and Belgium, two helpless little nations, were the first attacked.

Germany had under no compulsion signed a solemn treaty to protect the neutrality of Belgium. When she branded this treaty "a scrap of paper," she gave proof that all her treaties would be so considered when her interests demanded. In other words Germany's invasion of Belgium meant the tearing up of every treaty which existed between Germany and other nations. It was ample justification for America going to war at that moment.

This did not spur America at the time, but Germany's cruelties in Belgium, surpassing anything ever before known in modern history, gave further evidence that the world was not safe as long as such a government existed in it.

Then came Germany's conduct on the sea. With her battlefleet cravenly seeking shelter behind the defenses of the Kiel canal, Germany sent out her submarines and began a war on unarmed merchantmen. Women and children were her victims. American citizens by the score went down to death on the Lusitania. The United States made a protest, and Germany promised to mend her ways. This she did, for a time, until she could build a fleet of bigger and better submarines, and then her pirate sea warfare broke out with fresh vigor. How could we keep out of war when Germany, after ruthlessly killing our citizens, deliberatley closed the sea to us?

German plotters and spies, under the direct leadership of the German ambassador to this country, worked almost openly, blowing up industrial plants, sinking ships in our harbors, and menacing railroads and canals.

Germany, spurred by successes, openly began to announce plans for disciplining the United States. She scoffed at the Monroe doctrine, and tried to create a German state in Brazil which, in time would be strong enough to bring about a revolution and overthrow democratic government there.

By her huge armaments, her disregard of treaties, and her evident reliance on force alone, Germany was rapidly making the world an unsafe place in which to live, forcing all other nations to adopt the military system, or be at her mercy.

The German ambition to force German kultur on the remainder of the world was well exploited. Kultur, to the German mind, was not what culture is to us. It was the whole German system, of government, of commercialism and of life. There was no place for democracy in a world which bore the stamp of German kultur. If we valued our form of government, we had to go to war.

The fight which England and France took up from the beginning, and in which Belgium and Serbia laid down their lives, was America's fight from the first, and America's fight long before it began, had America but realized. Now America does dealize, and America cannot and will not make peace until the Prussian lust for conquest is curbed and the Prussian military power crushed for all time.

Wastes.

After urging citizens to avoid all waste of foodstuffs in the interest of food conservation, the federal food administration for Iowa calls attention to 17 common ways in which foods are wasted in the ordinary household, as follows:

In peeling potatoes, the loss is about 20 per cent.
In stale bread.
In bread crusts.
In table crumbs.
In kitchen garbage.
In fats of meats.
In meat and chicken bones.
In sour milk and buttermilk, that is thrown away.
In fats which we neglect to render.
In eating more than we really need.
In eating wrong kinds of food.
In frying meats and not saving the fats.
In not substituting other foods for beef, wheat and bacon, which are needed overseas.
In improper cooking.
In feeding too much protein (albumen in eggs and gluten in flour) to old persons and persons of sedentary habits.
In keeping too many domestic pets.
In leaving food uncovered to be wasted or spoiled by vermin.

Means Disbelief in Self.

No sadder proof can be given by a man of his own littleness than disbelief in great men.—Carlyle.

Food Administration Work Order

Must Register on or before Saturday Night!

All men between the ages of 15 and 60 years not actually engaged in farming are ordered to report to and register with the Mayor of this town on or before Saturday night, July 20, at 10:00 o'clock for work in harvesting the crops. You will be used if necessary at a wage not to exceed 40 cents per hour and your board. Show your colors.

By Order of J. A. LOVE,
County Food Administrator.

THRESHERS MUST KEEP RECORD OF GRAIN THRESHED

According to orders from the Government, every man operating a threshing machine must make reports on the grains threshed. Monthly reports are to be made on wheat and a report at the end of the season on other grains.

These reports are to be sent to the County Agent's office of the County in which the threshing is being done. Record books and report blanks are to be furnished by the Government and can be had at the County Agent's office. These record books will be sent to every thresher in the county, but in case some of them are missed, they should be written for or called for at the Agent's office.

These monthly reports on wheat will enable the U. S. Food Administration to furnish definite data to the Allies on the amount of grain which can be furnished them from this country during this year.

All threshers are requested to look after this matter accurately and get in touch with L. T. Nutty, County Agent, and get books and blanks.

KLEMME PEOPLE AUTO TO CAMP DODGE

Quite a number of Klemme people autoed to Camp Dodge last Sunday to spend the day visiting at the cantonment. There were three auto loads from here and they left about five o'clock Sunday morning. J. W. Berggren, wife and daughter, Barbara, and the Misses Blanche and Julia Lilljenberg composed one auto load. Marlin Croner, and brother Charles, Mrs. Schroeder and daughter, Selma, and Miss Dahlia Schroeder went in Mr. Croner's car. Another auto load was taken by Richard Bamman accompanied by Mrs. Schuldt and daughter Ella, and son, Oscar. There were also a couple of cars from Garner in the same party. They had an enjoyable visit at the camp and saw a number of the soldier boys they knew. They reached Klemme some time Sunday night.

When a paper cup has been used, it is generally regarded as fit only for the waste basket. But in Nashville, Tenn., there is a drug store proprietor who conceived the idea of making such cups useful for the planting of seedling vegetables of various kinds says "The Popular Science Monthly." He saves all those that have been used at his soda counter and turns them over to truck gardeners who are glad to make use of them. The plants are started indoors in these paper cups and afterwards transplanted outdoors without disturbing the roots. Such paper cups are just as serviceable as earthen pots and hold the additional merit of costing next to nothing.

Soap is almost unobtainable in occupied Belgium and the housewives are accordingly seeking possible substitutes. To them a chemist, through the medium of a Brussels newspaper, gives this advice: "Pour the hot water in which peeled potatoes have been boiled over the linen to be washed Allow it to soak until the following day, then rub it as you would in a lather, but without adding soap or anything else. The linen will come out of the tub perfectly white."

What is set down as the greatest cataract in the world is on the Iguazu river, which partly separates Brazil and Argentina. The precipice over which the river plunges is 210 feet bigh, that of Niagara being 167 feet. The cataract is 12,123 feet wide, or about two and one-half times as wide as Niagara It is estimated that 100,000,000 tons of water passes over Niagara in an hour A like estimate gives the falls of Iguazu 140,000,000 tons

IOWA CITY MAN IS GIVEN NOMINATION

Is Named For Superintendent By Republicans at Des Moines —Favor Woman's Suffrage.

Des Moines, Ia., July 13.—P. E. McClenehan, of Iowa City, was nominated for state superintendent of public instruction by the state republican convention on the second ballot. The ballot stood: McClenehan, 918; Joseph, 742½, and Barr, 23. Deyoe dropped out after the first ballot. Woodbury county on the second ballot turned the trick by casting 30 votes for McClenehan.

McClenehan has been connected with the state university of Iowa City for the past two years. He formerly was state high school instructor for the state board of education. The Second district members, put up a stiff campaign for their candidate right from the start, as did also the Third and Sixth districts, and it is largly due to their efforts and to the mixing qualities of McClenehan with the delegates as they arrived on the scene that the nomination went to him.

In the platform adopted the party declared for the ratification of a national prohibition amendment, equal suffrage, a protective tariff and the modification of election laws. The party also gave a rousing indorsement to Governor Harding and his administration—"his patriotic and verile leadership in the support of the war and all its activities." It came out strong for his English language proclamation, declaring, "and we especially approve his efforts to bring about universal public use of the English language in the state of Iowa."

THRESHERMEN TO GET TOGETHER SATURDAY

LeMars, Ia., July 13.—According to government statistics, there is a waste of grain in the threshing machines of the county ranging from 2 to 7 per cent. In other words, this amount of each farmer's crop goes into the straw pile. This year the matter has been taken in hand by the food administration and if possible this waste will be eliminated.

County Food Administrator E. E. Eastman has called a meeting of all threshermen in Plymouth county for next Saturday at the armory. The meeting will commence at 2 o'clock.

MONONA COUNTY THRESHERS AGREED

The meeting was under the direction of County Food Administrator J. A. Prichard and County Agricultural Agent Lester Shephard. A representative of the state food administration was present.

Dubuque, Ia., July 11.—Fred A. Granzow, a Mason City furniture dealer, convicted under the espionage act at Fort Dodge in June, was denied a new trial and was sentenced to three years at Leavenworth and to pay a $250 fine by Judge Reed here this noon.

Granzow's wife received word in the court room that her father had died in Wisconsin. After sentence was passed she collapsed. Granzow also wept bitterly.

State Senator A. H. Gale, of Mason City, pleaded for leniency for Granzow and a petition signed by hundreds of Mason City citizens was presented to the judge. Granzow's son is in the next draft call.

DES MOINES—A brand new nail head protruding from a barn floor enabled the Des Moines police to discover several hundred gallons of contraband whisky after they had practically abandoned their search of a bootlegger suspect's premises. The liquor had been concealed in barrels which had been sunk beneath the floor of the barn. When the nail was discovered a board in the floor was pried up and the store was discovered.

IOWANS MAKING GOOD IN WAR POSITIONS

E. C. Macy, of Ames, Has Important Work at Hog Island Yards.

Ames, Ia., July 12.—One of the biggest of the many jobs at the Hog Island ship yards, the world's greatest, is that held by an Iowa State college engineer, E. C. Macy. He is director of transportation at Hog Island and on him rests the task of moving and distributing the enormous amount of materials and supplies required to keep busy the army of 27,000 men employed in the yards, building ships and extending the yards themselves.

After Macy graduated from the engineering course at Ames in 1896 he was for a time county engineer of Story county. When that job had given him experience he went to the old Iowa Central railway as an assistant engineer. He remained as division engineer with the Minneapolis & St. Louis when that company took over the Iowa Central, but after a time he went to Idaho to take charge of a difficult piece of railroad construction. He came back to Iowa when the job was finished and had charge of reconstruction work of the Great Western. Then he went to the Stone & Webster Engineering corporation and worked on many of the largest projects, including the Galveston causeway. His wide experience in railway engineering won him his appointment to his present work. He is married to the daughter of an Ames citizen, F. C. Tilden.

"PLANT" CHOLERA HOGS AMONG HEALTHY ONES

Atlantic, Ia., July 12.—Breaking out of cholera on nine widely separated farms in northwest Adair county at about the same time, together with finding the swine herd on each of the nine farms a strange pig diseased with cholera has led to the quarantining of four townships and an investigation by officials to determine who is responsible for bringing the diseased animals into the neighborhood Dr. G. A. Kay, federal district veterinarian, and two assistants are at work on the strange case.

The fact that nine farmers found strange pigs in herds on farms scattered over four townships, that the strange pig was in each instance diseased and also was of a breed entirely different from the breeds in the neighborhood makes it apparent that some one has been practicing a new form of sabotage.

ESSEX, IOWA, MAYOR GIVEN EXONERATION

Shenandoah, Ia., July 12 — A coroner's jury fully exonerated O. W. Okerlin, mayor of Essex in this county, after an investigation into the death of Isaac Beck, who was killed by striking the cement walk when the mayor knocked him down.

Beck, who is a farmer, 43 years old, leaves a widow and eight children. It is said he was intoxicated and was causing trouble in Essex. Mayor Okerlin told Beck to go home. Instead, it was testified that Beck began cursing the mayor and attempted to strike the latter who knocked him down.

TIPTON—Judge John T. Moffit rather changed the order of things when instead of directing the sheriff to adjourn court as usual, he ordered that court be adjourned until after harvest. The judge is going to do his part and has obtained work with a farmer during the harvesting season, the wages to be fixed by the farmer at the close of the season, depending entirely on what he earns. Commencing Monday it is back to the land for Judge Moffit until the harvest is over

ALLIES GAIN 15 MILES IN GREAT DRIVE

Austrians Falling Back on the Skumbi River 25 Miles North of Berat, Objective of Italians.

BULGAR LINES MENACED

Germany's Smaller Ally May Be Forced Out of War—Uprising of Southern Slaves May Result.

London, July 12.—Italians on their offensive in Albania continue to advance, says a dispatch from Rome to the Central News agency. The Austro-Hungarians are falling back on the Skumbi river, 25 miles north of Berat.

Washington, D. C., July 12.—An official dispatch from Rome today reports unchanged advance of Italian troops in Albania with Berat as an objective. From the Voyusa the Italians have carried all positions to the Semeni in an advance of approximately 15 miles over a 50-mile front.

BY ED L. KEEN,
United Press Staff Correspondent.

London, July 12.—Italian forces, aided by French and Albanians, together with British naval units, are sweeping northward across practically the entire width of Albania in what may be one of the most important military and political offensives of the war.

According to the latest dispatches received here the allied troops in addition to making important gains on the 60-mile front between the Adriatic and the Devoli river, are threatening the Bulgarian right wing in the vicinity of Monastir, 115 miles from the sea.

Strike for Old Highway.

The main military objective of the Allies evidently is the old Roman road connecting Monastir with the sea, at Durazzo, possession of which would permit free movement of troops and supplies directly from the Adriatic into southern Siberia and would threaten the enemy's hold on a great portion of the occupied areas of that country.

Starting at the Vojutza river, the Italians, with the aid of British monitors have advanced to the Semeni river, a maximum gain of 15 miles. The nearest portion of the old Roman highway lies just the same distance northward along the Skhumbi river, west of Elbasan

But the offensive also has far reaching political aspects. Already, considerable forces of Albanians, under Essad Pasha, are fighting with the allies and are rendering valuable assistance. Any considerable advance by the French in the Monastir region will have its effect on Bulgaria, which is reported to be low in morale, both militarily and economically.

May Fire Slav Races.

The most significant angle, however, is the probable effect on the southern Slav nations of Austria, already on the verge of active revolt. A decisive allied victory in Albania may prove the torch that will ignite the whole of the discontented elements of the dual monarchy.

One of the significant phases of the Italian advance is the frank admission of reverses by the Austrian war office. The latest official statement from Vienna said the Austrians "in the face of pressure from strong enemy forces" had withdrawn across the Berat-Fieri line. Fieri already is in the hands of the Italians and Berat, the most important city in southern Albina appears about to fall.

LOCAL GAINS FOR BRITISH.

London, July 12.—In a local operation carried on last night south of the Somme east of Villers-Bretonneux, the British positions were improved, says today's war office announcement.

The Germans bombarded somewhat heavily the British positions east of Amiens on both sides of the Somme river.

FRENCH ENLARGE GAINS.

Paris, July 12.—French troops enlarged their gains between the Aisne and the Marne, taking the village of Corcy, the war office announced today.

"On the borders of the Reitz forest, the French enlarged their gains taking the village of Corcy, the station and castle and St. Paul farm," the communique said. "We captured 50 prisoners, including one officer."

"Two raids in the region of Maison Champagne and Mont Sansnom netted 10 prisoners."

COFFEE PLANTATIONS DAMAGED BY FREEZE

Defenders of Barleycorn Rallying in Last Trench To Block Vote in Senate

BY L. C. MARTIN.
United Press Staff Correspondent.

Washington, D. C., July 12.—In a final desperate effort to stave off war-time prohibition, Senate "wets" today planned to call up the wire control resolution. By keeping this before the Senate continuously until disposed of they hope to persuade Senate leaders to recess for the summer, leaving prohibition undisposed of.

A second move, counted on to be more effective, is the sounding of a warning that wartime prohibition, suddenly imposed will ruin banks holding liquor obligations and seriously interfere with the raising of war revenues under the new tax bill.

Senator Simmons, chairman of the finance committee is to present figures showing that more than $500,000,000 would be required to get out of the bond 170,000,000 gallons of whisky now on hand. The tax on this is $3.20 a gallon.

Can't Get Money, Claim.

Simmons will argue that it would be impossible to get the money necessary for withdrawal of the liquor. He will point out that many banks are heavily loaded with warehouse receipts and notes against which they have loaned large sums to distillers, wholesale grocers and druggists to pay taxes.

Unless the banks are given time to relieve themselves of this paper they will fail, Simmons will warn.

He will submit figures showing how prohibition will reduce the national revenues at a time when the need is for every dollar that can be raised, even at the expense of people's clothing. Upon the showing thus made Simmons is being urged to ask that the Senate allow the finance committee to work out a plan for gradual reduction of revenues and for safeguarding them. If this is agreed to, it would mean postponement of prohibition for a period considerable longer than the five months provided for in the measure now pending

If proponents of the telegraph resolution are able to force consideration of that measure Simmons will have his arguments and figures in readiness to use when needed.

"Drys" Are Confident.

"Drys" claimed today that prohibition is certain to pass the Senate is concerned was proved by the vote late yesterday on the motion of Senator Saulsbury that the prohibition amendment was out of order.

How They Voted.

The vote sustaining the chair's point of order follows:

Democrats—Gerry, Gore, Hitchcock, Jones of New Mexico, King, Lewis, Martin, Phelan, Pomerene, Ransdell, Shields, Simmons, Smith of Arizona, Smith of Georgia, Smith of Maryland, Smith of South Carolina, Underwood and Wolcott.—18.

Republicans—Baird, Brandegee, Colt, France, Frelinghuysen, Harding, Johnson of California, Kellogg, Knox, New, Penrose, Smoot, Wadsworth, Warren and Watson.—15. Total for, 33.

Against sustaining the chair:

Republicans—Borah, Colt, Curtis, Fernald, Hale, Jones of Washington, Kenyon, Lenroot, Nelson, Norris, Poindexter, Sherman, Smith of Michigan, Smith of Oregon and Sutherland.—15. Total against, 36.

THOUSANDS PAY FINAL TRIBUTE TO MITCHEL

New York, July 12.—The body of Major John Purroy Mitchel, former mayor of New York, was borne to its grave today as lines of silent thousands stood uncovered along the route of the impressive procession which escorted the bronze coffin.

The bell in the tower of the city hall, silent since the memorable day when Mitchel, then chief executive of the city, welcomed Marshal Joffre and his party, tolled slowly as the parade wound past. The subway hummed underneath, an airplane droned overhead, the scuff of marching feet sounded, sparrows twittered, but there was no sound from the throng which stood until the last man of that long procession had passed the coffin which rested on its black gun caisson at the entrance to the historic edifice.

Former President Roosevelt fell into line as the first man to follow the black caparisoned horse of the dead aviator. With him were others of renown. Joseph P. Tumulty, secretary to President Wilson, was in line as was Lieutenant General Bridges, of the British army.

Then came sailors, soldiers, police and the fire department of the city. Friends of the former mayor followed all afoot. Three carriages were in line, in addition to the vehicle which carried the body.

The aviator who had been wheeling overhead while preparations were made to start the cortege, followed the line up Fifth avenue, scattering flowers as he went.

Are the Packers Profiteers?

Plain Facts About the Meat Business

The Federal Trade Commission in its recent report on war profits, stated that the five large meat packers have been profiteering and that they have a monopoly of the market

These conclusions, if fair and just, are matters of serious concern not only to those engaged in the meat packing business but to every other citizen of our country.

The figures given on profits are misleading and the statement that the packers have a monopoly is unsupported by the facts.

The packers mentioned in the report stand ready to prove their profits reasonable and necessary.

* * *

The meat business is one of the largest American industries. Any citizen who would familiarize himself with its details must be prepared for large totals.

The report states that the aggregate profits of four large packers were $140,000,000 for the three war years.

This sum is compared with $19,000,000 as the average annual profit for the three years before the war, making it appear that the war profit was $121,000,000 greater than the pre-war profit.

This compares a three-year profit with a one-year profit—a manifestly unfair method of comparison. It is not only misleading, but the Federal Trade Commission apparently has made a mistake in the figures themselves.

* * *

The aggregate three-year profits of $140,000,000 was earned on sales of over four and a half billion dollars. It means about three cents on each dollar of sales—or a mere fraction of a cent per pound of product.

Packers' profits are a negligible factor in prices of live stock and meats. No other large business is conducted upon such small margins of profit.

* * *

Furthermore—and this is very important—only a small portion of this profit has been paid in dividends. The balance has been put back into the businesses. It had to be, as you realize when you consider the problems the packers have had to solve—and solve quickly—during these war years.

To conduct this business in war times, with higher costs and the necessity of paying two or three times the former prices for live stock, has required the use of two or three times the ordinary amount of working capital. That additional profit makes only a fair return on this, and as has been stated, the larger portion of the profits earned has been used to finance huge stocks of goods and to provide additions and improvements made necessary by the enormous demands of our army and navy and the allies.

If you are a business man you will appreciate the significance of these facts If you are unacquainted with business, talk this matter over with some business acquaintance—with your banker, say—and ask him to compare profits of the packing industry with those of any other large industry at the present time.

* * *

No evidence is offered by the Federal Trade Commission in support of the statement that the large packers have a monopoly. The Commission's own report shows the large number and importance of other packers.

The packers mentioned in the statement stand ready to prove to any fair-minded person that they are in keen competition with each other, and that they have no power to manipulate prices.

If this were not true they would not dare to make this positive statement.

Furthermore, government figures show that the five large packers mentioned in the report account for only about one-third of the meat business of the country.

They wish it were possible to interest you in the details of their business. Of how, for instance, they can sell dressed beef for less than the cost of the live animal, owing to utilization of by-products, and of the wonderful story of the methods of distribution throughout this broad land, as well as in other countries.

The five packers mentioned feel justified in co-operating with each other to the extent of together presenting this public statement.

They have been able to do a big job for your government in its time of need; they have met all war time demands promptly and completely and they are willing to trust their case to the fairmindedness of the American people with the facts before them.

PURPOSE OF ALLIED DRIVE IN ALBANIA IS NOT YET CLEAR

BY J. W. T. MASON.
United Press War Expert.

New York, N. Y., July 12.—Italian operations in Albania are puzzling for the moment as to the objectives which are being sought. The new offensive has come without any warning and it is difficult to determine what the Italian general staff has in mind. There are four possible reasons for the drive:

First, to supply the demand for new victories, which have been stimulated in Italy by the recent successes against the Austro-Hungarians.

Second, to create a diversion that will prevent the Austro-Hungarians from concentrating all their forces for a new attack along the Piave.

Third, to encourage the spirit of revolt among the Slav nationalities in Austria-Hungary.

Fourth, to prepare the way for an allied offensive in the Balkans.

Very likely the first three reasons are acting cooperatively. Whether the final, and by far the most important possibility, is being seriously considered must be regarded doubtfully until there is more evidence.

For the allies to attempt a major advance in the Balkans at this time would be a serious drain on their strength. Greek aid would be necessary to a very large extent and it is not probable that the Greek army is as yet supplied with munitions of war on a sufficient scale to give reasonable surety of success.

If, however, at a later time, it is the intention of the allies to attempt to overthrow the Bulgarians, valuable shipping space could be saved by moving supplies into Greece overland across Albania. An advance of but a short distance by the Italians beyond their present front would liberate excellent roadways for the purpose.

Asquith Says History Will Put Wilson In Class With Greatest

Former British Premier Ranks President With Washington and Lincoln and Says World Owes Him Gratitude For Clear Vision In Present Crisis.

London, July 12.—Praise of President Wilson's leadership in the war and his advocacy of a league of nations after the war was given by Herbert H. Asquith, former premier, in an address last night at the National Liberal club. The occasion was a "hospitality dinner to American officers."

Vice Admiral Sims, commander of the American naval forces in the war zone, paid tribute to the cooperation of the British and American navies and declared:

"The submarine menace now is at an end for we are destroying them faster than the Germans can build them."

Major General Biddle, commander of the American forces in England, announced that American troops were stationed at from 70 to 80 different points in England and Scotland.

Former Premier Asquith said:

"The United States has had the good fortune that in the supreme crisis of her national history the man whom she most needed for inspiration and guidance always has appeared. Thus came Washington and Lincoln. Washington and Lincoln are illustrious names which have passed into history. We must not attempt to anticipate history's judgement upon men still living, but I will venture to say that President Wilson has been the head of the American government in times no less trying than any in its annals."

"President Wilson has taken the greatest decision of our age and has carried his people with him in it.

"America has had her difficulties. They have not stifled, but have stimulated her energy and we grasp the opportunity tonight of acknowledging our unbounded admiration of the magnificent contribution America will continue to make in ever increasing measure.

"Probably the world owes its greatest debt to President Wilson for helping men whose vision has been blurred and blinded by the smoke of the battlefields to lift up their eyes and to look through it and beyond it. It is very difficult in time of war to keep a steady head and a clean tongue—President Wilson does both.

"There can be no clear peace that does not clear away the causes of war. It seems to me all important that we should realize a league of nations is a definite ideal. This is a large step in advance on the road of human progress. And when the goal is reached due honor will be paid to President Wilson as the greatest of its pioneers."

ALLIED AVIATORS MASTERS OF SKIES

Bomb All Night and Fight All Day, Carrying Arrial War-Fare Far Behind Boche Lines.

BY WILLIAM PHILIP SIMMS.
United Press Staff Correspondent.

With the British Armies in France, July 12.—Allied aviators apparently have attained absolute mastery of the air.

They are carrying on the aerial warfare behind the German lines. Although given the best weather of the whole war there is comparatively little battling, due to the extreme caution of the German airmen. Their activities are confined to night bombing, while the British bomb all night and fight all day when anything can be seen.

The boches conduct their bombing operations from an altitude of about 10,000 feet, owing to the fire from our "Archies."

The British bombers drop down to a height of 500 feet or even 50 feet before they let loose their high explosives. This makes for extreme accuracy.

A prisoner relates the tremendous havoc wrought on the Bapaume railway and station, where a British plane swooped low and dropped a bomb in the midst of troops waiting to board a train.

The British airmen are not allowing cobwebs to cover their machines. One well known aviator has brought down 25 boches in the last 30 days, his total now nearly equalling Baron Richthofen's. Another has more than 50 Germans to his credit, a dozen of which were downed during the past week.

London, July 11.—British airmen brought down 10 German planes July 9, while anti-aircraft guns accounted for another, the air ministry announced today. Three British machines were lost. Seventeen tons of bombs were dropped on enemy during the day and night.

AUSTRIAN LOSSES IN LAST BATTLE 250,000

Prisoners Confirm the Terrible Slaughter—Wheat and Potato Crops Poor.

By Associated Press.

Italian Army Headquarters, Wednesday, July 10.—Evidence secured from Austrian prisoners indicates that the Austro-Hungarian losses during the recent offensive, were in the neighborhood of 250,000. Other reports made by captives tend to confirm accounts of poor wheat and potato crops in Austria.

U. S. CONSUL SAFE.

Washington, D. C., July 11.—Safe arrival at Teheran, of Gordon Paddock, United States consul at Tabriz, was announced today by the state department. Paddock left Tabriz more than a month ago with a party of Americans and Europens when Tabriz was threatened by Turks, who afterwards seized the American consulate there and sacked an American hospital. The dispatch gave no details.

JEWISH COMMISSION TO VISIT PALESTINE

New York, July 12.—A commission representing leaders of Jewish faith will proceed to Palestine as speedily as war conditions will permit to investigate the status of Jewish religious institutions, it was announced here today. The announcement was made at the close of a convention of the Orthodox Rabbis of America. A committee was appointed to confer with Zionist organizations regarding the work of the Palestine mission.

ARCY AGAIN TO HEAD ASSOCIATED AD CLUBS

San Francisco, Cal., July 12.—No opposition developed today to the reelection of Wm. C. Arcy, of St. Louis, as president of the Associated Advertising Clubs of the World. Reelection of all the former officials and reflection of the selection of New Orleans as next year's convention city was the program for today.

Introduction of resolutions was expected to develop some interesting angles.

Final adjournment will be taken at noon.

AULGER BROS. SHOW HERE TUESDAY

"In Arizona" Played To A Large Crowd

Aulger Bros. Big Show arrived in Klemme Tuesday noon in two special Pullman coaches over the Rock Island.

Aulger Bros. have a fine band this year despite the fact that some of their ablest players have gone to war. They gave two concerts on the Main Street, one in the afternoon and one in the evening. Both concerts were much enjoyed. After the evening concert the band led the crowd to their big tent where they played "In Arizona." The play was very good from every standpoint and is above the range of the traveling show companies.

BIRDS NEED YOUR ATTENTION

Should Be Fed During the Winter Season When It Is Hard to Find Sufficient Food.

In winter the birds more than ever need your friendship. Perhaps not more than ever. In the summer, when the baby birds are just out of the nests, humankind can do tremendous work for the birds by keeping cats away. But next to that, perhaps the greatest service you can render your feathered friends is to feed them in the winter.

You can, if you wish, build your own feeding shelves. The whole point is that there should be a covered shelf, with sides toward three points of the compass. The opening should be toward the point least likely to suffer from the winds. Better still is it to have the little shelf on a pivot, so that it will swing with the wind and the opening will always stay on the sheltered side.

You can also buy a feeding shelf, of any one of several approved kinds.

For fair-weather feeding, a little cup of metal, painted green, at the top of a stake, with little crosspieces on which the birds can sit, is very useful. This sort of thing costs only a dollar and would make a pleasant spot in your garden for a couple of months now, and then in the spring again it could be used to advantage. It is high enough to be out of the way of cats.

Happiness in Love of Books.

No matter what his rank or position may be, the lover of books is the richest and happiest of the children of men.—Langford.

How Could She?

"Ah, Rosie," I said, as I held her pretty little pink hands in my big burly brown mitts, "you have told me repeatedly that you love me and that you would fulfill my every wish. I have done everything you requested of me. Your whimsied wish has been my one desire. We have gotten along perfectly together and wonderfully noble thoughts have raked my brain. After all this, how could you put such a high polish on your finger nails when you know I like a dull finish!"—Penn State Froth.

To Avoid Premature Old Age.

Men wear out too soon. In many vocations a man is an old man before he reaches his fortieth year. This is premature and for the most part unnecessary, and it constitutes a serious national economic loss. By improving a man's physique and assisting him to form healthy habits, ten or 15 years can be added to his industrial efficiency, and a substantial contribution will be made to the wealth and prosperity of the country.

Term That Is Misapplied.

The name daisy is said to have been given to the plant by the poet Chaucer, in the fourteenth century. He noticed that the petals folded at sunset and expanded at sunrise, and therefore called it day's-eye. Therefore, our best girl, who appears brightest in the evening cannot truthfully be called "a daisy."

The Light Ahead.

What lightens labor, sanctifies toil and makes a man good and strong, wise and patient, just and benevolent, both lowly and great, as well as worthy of intelligence and freedom, is the perpetual vision before him of a better world beaming through life's shadows.—Victor Hugo.

Queer Reckonings of Distance.

In rural Germany they speak of places being so many hours distant—meaning, of course, by walking; and in the rural parts of Schleswig-Holstein they say that a place is a pipe, or two pipes, or three pipes off, according to the number of pipes one could smoke while walking there. Shorter distances are reckoned by barks. A village under a mile away would be two or three dog's barks! It is as we say, "Within calling distance."

The Limit.

Two colored men were overheard deep in a discussion of various phases of dumbness. Finally, after a number of illustrations had been cited, one capped the climax by observing with great seriousness, "Yes, suh, dat nigger wuz dat dumb dat when he died and dey opened his haid at de morgue dey found his brain hadn't never been used."

Dogs Have Dreamland.

That the primitive man dreamed we have no doubt. Even animals do that. All of us have seen sleeping dogs go through the incipient movements of a chase, accompanied by faint yelpings, and the unmistakable muscular action which would carry them in pursuit of their quarry if exaggerated by the greater vitality of wakefulness.

Fasting to Induce Dreams.

Fasting for the purpose of inducing dreams may be traced back to a very early period. And the foremost believers in dreams were our own picturesque Indians. History tells us of certain tribes who enjoined rigorous fasting among children from a very early age, during which time special attention was paid to their dreams.

THE TEETH OF THE TIGER

BY

MAURICE LEBLANC

TRANSLATED BY

This time, he knew where he was. The exit, which was not secret, as it led to the Place du Palais-Bourbon, but nevertheless very safe, was that which Sauverand generally used when Florence admitted him.

Don Luis therefore went through the entrance hall and down the steps and, a little way before the pantry, came upon the cellar stairs. He ran down these and soon recognized the low door that served to admit the wine-casks. The daylight filtered in through a small grated spy-hole. He groped till he found the lock. Glad to have come to the end of his expedition, he opened the door.

"Hang it all!" he growled, leaping back and clutching at the lock, which he managed to fasten again.

Two policemen in uniform were guarding the exit, two policemen who had tried to seize him as he appeared.

Where did those two men come from? Had they prevented the escape of Sauverand and Florence? But in that case Don Luis would have met the two fugitives, as he had come by exactly the same road as they.

[illegible] They effected their exit was watched. But [illegible] it's my turn to escape now, and that's not easy. Shall I be myself by [illegible] like a rabbit?

He went up the cellar stairs again, attending to hostile matters, to slip into the courtyard through the outhouses, to jump into his motor and to force a way for himself. But when he was just reaching the yard near the coach-house he saw four detectives, four of those whom he had impressed upon up waving their arms and shouting. And he also became aware of a regular uproar near the main gate and the porter's lodge. A number of men were all talking together, raising their voices in violent discussion.

Perhaps he might profit by this opportunity to steal out side under cover of the disorder. At the risk of being seen, he put out his head. At [illegible] what he saw astonished him.

Gaston Sauverand stood with his back to the wall of the lodge, surrounded by policemen and detectives who pushed and insulted him. The handcuffs were on his wrists.

Gaston Sauverand a prisoner! What had happened between the two fugitives and the police?

His heart wrung with anguish, he leaned out still farther. But he did not see Florence. The girl had no doubt succeeded in escaping.

Weber's appearance on the steps and the deputy chief's first words confirmed his hopes. Weber was mad with rage. His recent captivity and the humiliation of his defeat exasperated him.

"Ah!" he roared, as he saw the prisoner. "There's one of them, at any rate! Gaston Sauverand! Choice game, that! Where did you catch him?"

"On the Place du Palais Bourbon," said one of the inspectors. "We saw him slinking out through the cellar door."

"And his accomplice, the Levasseur girl?"

"We missed her, Deputy Chief. She was the first out."

"And Don Luis? You haven't let him leave the house, I hope? I gave orders."

"He tried to get out through the cellar door five minutes after."

"Who said so?"

"One of the men in uniform posted outside the door."

"Well?"

"The beggar went back into the cellar."

Weber gave a shout of delight.

"We've got him! And it's a nasty business for him! Charge of resisting the police! . . . Complicity! . . . We shall be able to unmask him at last. Tally-ho, my lads, tally-ho! Two men to guard Sauverand, four men on the Place du Palais-Bourbon, revolver in hand. Two men on the roof. The rest stick to me. We'll begin with the Levasseur girl's room and we'll take his room next. Hark, forward, my lads!"

Don Luis did not wait for the enemies' attack. Knowing their intentions, he beat a retreat, unseen, toward Florence's rooms. Here, as Weber did not yet know the short cut through the outhouses, he had time to make sure that the trapdoor was in perfect working order, and that there was no reason why they should discover the existence of a secret cupboard at the back of the alcove, behind the curtains of the bed.

Once inside the passage, he went up the first staircase, followed the long corridor contrived in the wall, climbed the ladder leading to the boudoir, and, perceiving that this second trapdoor fitted the woodwork so closely that no one could suspect anything, he closed it over him. A few minutes later he heard the noise of men making a search above his head.

And so, on the 24th of May, at 5 o'clock in the afternoon, the position was as follows: Florence Levasseur with a warrant out against her, Gaston Sauverand in prison, Marie Fauville in prison and refusing all food, and Don Luis, who believed in their innocence and who alone could have saved them, Don Luis was being blockaded in his own house and hunted down by a score of detectives.

As for the Mornington inheritance, there could be no more question of that because the legatee, in his turn, had set himself in open rebellion against society.

"Capital!" said Don Luis, with a grin. "This is life as I understand it. The question is a simple one and may be put in different ways. How can a wretched, unwashed beggar, with not a penny in his pocket, make a fortune in 24 hours without setting foot outside his hovel? How can a general, with no soldiers and no ammunition left, win a battle which he has lost? In short, how shall I, Arsène Lupin, manage to be present tomorrow evening at the meeting which will be held on the Boulevard Suchet and to behave in such a way as to save Marie Fauville, Florence Levasseur, Gaston Sauverand, and my excellent friend Don Luis Perenna in the bargain?"

Dull blows came from somewhere. The men must be hunting the roofs and sounding the walls.

Don Luis stretched himself flat on the floor, hid his face in his folded arms and, shutting his eyes, murmured:

"Let's think."

CHAPTER TWELVE

"HELP!"

When Lupin afterward told me this episode of the tragic story, he said, not without a certain self-complacency:

"What astonished me then, and what astonishes me still, as one of the most amazing victories on which I am entitled to pride myself, is that I was able to admit Sauverand and Marie Fauville's innocence on the spot, as a problem solved once and for all. It was a first class performance, I swear, and surpassed the most famous deductions of the most famous investigators both in psychological value and in detective merit.

"After all, taking everything into account, there was not the shadow of a fresh fact to enable me to alter the verdict. The charges accumulated against the two prisoners were the same, and were so grave that no examining magistrate would have hesitated for a second to commit them for trial, nor any jury to bring them in guilty. I will not speak of Marie Fauville: you had only to think of the marks of her teeth to be absolutely certain. But Gaston Sauverand, the son of Victor Sauverand and consequently the heir of Cosmo Mornington—Gaston Sauverand, the man with the ebony walking stick and the murderer of Chief Inspector Ancenis—was he not just as guilty as Marie Fauville, incriminated with her by the mysterious letters, incriminated by the very revelation of the husband whom they had killed?

"And yet why did that sudden change take place in me?" he asked. "Why did I go against the evidence? Why did I credit an incredible fact? Why did I admit the inadmissible? Why? Well, no doubt, because truth has an accent that rings in the ears in a manner all its own. On the one side, every proof, every fact, every reality, every certainty; on the other, a story, a story told by one of the three criminals, and therefore, presumptively, absurd and untrue from start to finish. But a story told in a frank voice, a clear, dispassionate, closely woven story, free from complications or improbabilities, a story which supplied no positive solution, but which, by its very honesty, obliged any impartial mind to reconsider the solution arrived at. I believed the story."

The explanation which Lupin gave me was not complete. I asked:

"And Florence Levasseur?"

"Florence?"

"Yes, you don't tell me what you thought. What was your opinion about her? Everything tended to incriminate her not only in your eyes, because, logically speaking, she had taken part in all the attempts to murder you, but also in the eyes of the police. They knew that she used to pay Sauverand clandestine visits at his house on the Boulevard Richard-Wallace. They had found her photograph in Inspector Verot's memorandum book, and then—and then all the rest: your accusations, your certainties. Was all that modified by Sauverand's story? To your mind, was Florence innocent or guilty?"

He hesitated, seemed on the point of replying directly and frankly to my question, but could not bring himself to do so, and said:

"I wished to have confidence. In order to act, I must have full and entire confidence, whatever doubts might still assail me, whatever darkness might still enshroud this or that part of the adventure. I therefore believed. And, believing, I acted according to my belief."

Acting, to Don Luis Perenna, during those hours of forced inactivity, consisted solely in perpetually repeating to himself Gaston Sauverand's account of the events. He tried to reconstitute it in all its details, to remember the very least sentences, the apparently most insignificant phrases. And he examined those sentences, scrutinized those phrases one by one, in order to extract such particle of the truth as they contained.

For the truth was there. Sauverand had said so and Perenna did not doubt it. The whole sinister affair, all that constituted the case of the Mornington inheritance and the tragedy of the Boulevard Suchet, all that could throw light upon the plot hatched against Marie Fauville, all that could explain the undoing of Sauverand and Florence—all this lay in Sauverand's story. Don Luis had only to understand, and the truth would appear like the moral which we draw from some obscure fable.

Don Luis did not once deviate from this method. If any objection suggested itself to his mind, he at once replied:

"Very well. It may be that I am wrong and that Sauverand's story will not enlighten me on any point capable of guiding me. It may be that the truth lies outside it. But am I in a position to get at the truth in any other way? All that I possess as an instrument of research, without attaching undue importance to certain gleams of light which the regular appearance of the mysterious letters has shed upon the case, all that I possess is Gaston Sauverand's story. Must I not make use of it?"

And, once again, as when one follows a path by another person's tracks, he began to live through the adventure which Sauverand had been through. He compared it with the picture of it which he had imagined until then. The two were in opposition; but could not the very clash of their opposition be made to produce a spark of light?

"Here is what he said," he thought, "and there is what I believed. What does the difference mean? Here is the thing that was, and there is the thing that appeared to be. Why did the criminal wish the thing that was to appear under that particular aspect? To remove all suspicion from him? But, in that case, was it necessary that suspicion should fall precisely on those on whom it did?"

The questions came crowding one upon the other. He sometimes answered them at random, mentioning names and uttering words in succession, as though the name mentioned might be just that of the criminal, and the words uttered those which contained the unseen reality.

Then at once he would take up the story again, as schoolboys do when parsing and analyzing a passage, in which each expression is carefully sifted, each period discussed, each sentence reduced to its essential value.

Hours and hours passed. Suddenly, in the middle of the night, he gave a start. He took out his watch. By the light of his electric lamp he saw that it was 17 minutes to 12 o'clock.

"So at 17 minutes to 12 at night," he said, "I fathomed the mystery."

He tried to control his emotion, but it was too great; and his nerves were so immensely staggered by the trial that he began to shed tears. He had caught sight of the appalling truth, all of a sudden, as when at night one half sees a landscape under a lightning flash.

There is nothing more unnerving than this sudden illumination when we have been groping and struggling in the dark. Already exhausted by his physical efforts and by the want of food, from which he was beginning to suffer, he felt the shock so intensely that, without caring to think a moment longer, he managed to go to sleep, or, rather, to sink into sleep, as one sinks into the healing waters of a bath.

When he woke, in the small hours, alert and well despite the discomfort of his couch, he shuddered on thinking of the theory which he had accepted; and his first instinct was to doubt it. He had, so to speak, no time.

All the proofs came rushing to his mind of their own accord and at once transformed the theory into one of those certainties which it would be madness to deny. It was that and nothing else. As he had foreseen, the truth lay recorded in Sauverand's story. And he had not been mistaken, either, in saying to Mazeroux that the manner in which the mysterious letters appeared had put him on the track of the truth.

And the truth was terrible. He felt, at the thought of it, the same fears that had maddened Inspector Verot when, already tortured by the poison, he stammered:

"Oh, I don't like this, I don't like the looks of this! . . . The whole thing has been planned in such an infernal manner!"

Infernal was the word! And Don Luis remained stupefied at the revelation of a crime which looked as if no human brain could have conceived it.

For two hours more he devoted all his mental powers to examining the situation from every point of view. He was not much disturbed about the result, because, being now in possession of the terrible secret, he had nothing more to do but make his escape and go that evening to the meeting on the Boulevard Suchet, where he would show them all how the murder was committed.

But when, wishing to try his chance of escaping, he went up through the underground passage and climbed to the top of the upper ladder—that is to say, to the level of the boudoir—he heard through the trapdoor the voices of men in the room.

"By Jove!" he said to himself, "the thing is not so simple as I thought! In order to escape the minions of the law I must first leave my prison; and here is at least one of the exits blocked. Let's look at the other."

He went down to Florence's apartments and worked the mechanism, which consisted of a counterweight. The panel of the cupboard moved in the groove.

Driven by hunger and hoping to find some provisions which would enable him to withstand a siege without being reduced to famine, he was about to pass through the alcove, behind the curtains, when he was stopped short by a sound of footsteps. Some one had entered the room.

"Well, Mazeroux, have you spent the night here? Nothing new?"

Don Luis recognized the Prefect of Police by his voice; and the question put by the Prefect told him, first, that Mazeroux had been released from the dark closet where he had bound him up, and, secondly, that the sergeant was in the next room. Fortunately, the sliding panel had worked without the least sound, and Don [illegible] was able to overhear the conversation between the two men.

"No, nothing new, Monsieur le Prefet," replied Mazeroux.

"That's funny. The confounded fellow must be somewhere. Or can he have got away over the roof?"

A Convert to Liberty.

Erich Brandies, in the Saturday Evening Post.

When I left Germany I was 20 years old. I obtained leave of absence for one year. That leave was extended for [illegible]. That was the limit. Every German must serve his time when years old. Nothing can change that.

But, meantime, I had settled and married an American [illegible] less to say, German military service did not interest me [illegible]. Two weeks after my 25th birthday I received a formidable document from the military commander of Berlin. It was my notice that the day after I was expected to report for service I had [illegible] tried by courtmartial on a charge of absence without leave. The military court had found me guilty and imposed a sentence of 16 [illegible] military fortress, with the alternative of a fine of 160 marks. I present myself immediately for duty.

When war was declared in 1914 I again received a memorandum the royal seal of blue and white eagle. This time I was informed if I reported without delay to the nearest military authority amnesty would be granted to me.

I have reported for duty—to the war department of the United States; and I hope that a place will be found for me somewhere.

The German system is everywhere; it concerns itself with everything; it works at all times. If the system decides that [illegible] is the proper procedure, then nothing is permitted to stand in the way of execution of orders.

A cobblestone, a woman, a house, a child, a church, a cripple, an old man—all are military obstacles. The cries of stabbed combatants are horrible to the ears of a German soldier; but more horrible is the general's wrath.

The German loves his family. He is good to his wife, and children are dear to him. If you call him a Hun, a barbarian, you misunderstand him. He is a human being; more sentimental, more [illegible] than most of you.

But carved into his brain, into his heart, into his soul, are words that mean more to him than the Ten Commandments: God, for King and Fatherland!

That is what America is fighting for, to replace those words by the three others—Liberty! Equality! Fraternity!

BRITISH WOMEN LIST WAR OBSTRUCTIONIST

Mrs. Pankhurst Says Votes Will Be Used to Punish Lloyd George's Hecklers.

From the New York World.

Mrs. Emmeline Pankhurst, former leader of the militant suffragists of Britain, whose visits to this country have hitherto been made when she was classed as a "criminal" and were usually prefaced by a stay-over at Ellis island under guard, is in New York city again, the accredited representative of the British Woman's party.

She has not come to help her American cousins who are struggling for the passage of the federal suffrage amendment. In fact she has made no definite program for her visit, she said at the Hotel McAlpin. Her only object in coming is to strengthen the bonds between the women of the two countries in their war work, she added.

The British woman's party, which Mrs. Pankhurst says is very large and constantly growing, stands unitedly for a win the war program. Unlike the newly enfranchised women in New York state, the women of Great Britain have converted their suffrage organization into a political party, believing that their power is greater thus than it would be if distributed among the men's parties.

"The man running for office, not the party he represents, will be the determining factor for us," she said.

Britannia, the official organ of the women's party, carries on its front page of the issue of May 17 a long list of names of men who joined Asquith in an attempt to overturn the Lloyd George ministry.

"We shall not blacklist any man for any old suffrage grievance," she went on, "but we will blacklist any pacifist, defeatist or hinderer of the government in its war activities. This war must be won, and our whole support is going to the men who are doing all in their power to make for an allied victory."

The wartime platform of the Women's party includes plans for a higher standard of living, better housing, industrial justice and educational reforms.

"We want the working people to work fewer hours, but to accomplish more during those hours," Mrs. Pankhurst said. "When women went into the munition factories they found that there was an organized limitation on the output. We want the machines kept going during all the working hours, with no slacking, so that a great output will be assured. Thus the resources of the country will be more thoroughly utilized, the money returns will be greater and larger wages will be insured.

"There is not enough wealth in England for the needed improvements. If all the wealth were put together and then divided equally among all of the people, there would not be enough. We must make more money and then see that it gets into the right hands."

She said that the women of England will remain in the industries after the end of the war, but that there would be no danger of any lack of labor for the men who come back from the trenches able to work.

"There are many things that we need, which we have done without during the war," she went on. "All these industries will have to be started again."

Mrs. Pankhurst said England has enough to eat.

"Of course, we have not as much as you have over here, but we get along very well," she said. "The national health is better than it ever was, so that is evidence that we always ate too much."

As to her recent visit to Russia, Mrs. Pankhurst said the great mass of the Russian people "long for the allies to save them from German slavery."

AUSTRIANS BRUTAL TO ITALIAN PRISONERS

Italian Front—"If Austria has an obsession, it is to hunt for 'Irredenti,'" that is, Austrian subjects from the provinces that long belonged to Venice, who are fighting in the Italian army. The martyrdom of Battisti, of Filzi, and of Sauro has not been enough," says a correspondent of Il Giornale d'Italia of Rome. "Every camp of prisoners is searched again and again in the hunt for 'Irredenti.'

"Whoever succeeds in the odious work is handsomely rewarded. The commission is headed by an Austrian colonel noted for his low, brutal instincts and the face of a mastiff. With him go 10 ruffians. The colonel takes his station in the center of an immense hall at the angles of which, here, there and everywhere, the brigands who accompany him have placed themselves as if in ambush. One Hog Out of Every Four Being Sent Abroad.

Shipments of meat have been going to the allies for some time at the rate of 15,000 pounds a minute. As the shipments are kept up during a ten hour day they amount to 9,000,000 pounds daily. The meat goes to soldiers of the United States and the allies and to the civilian population of all the countries at war with Germany.

No industry in the country has played a more important part in helping to win the war than the American live-stock and meat-packing industry.

WHAT HE GOT FROM WAR.

A Veteran in American Magazine.

People ask me what I have got out of the war, what if anything. I have gained from all the experiences I went through. I hadn't analyzed it at first but now I think I know. All of us who have been over there have come back with a more serious outlook on life than we used to have. I was what I suppose you would call an individualist—and I was the individual! I thought chiefly of my fun, my happiness, my pleasures.

But I've learned that life is something more than a happy-go-lucky adventure. Perhaps going through some hardships of my own has made me more sensitive to suffering in others. I know what it is to be hungry, to be lonely, to be in physical pain. Seeing men's lives snuffed out in a moment can't help affecting your own attitude toward life and death.

INVASION OF ITALY ROMAN HISTORY AGAIN

Today the farmer's [illegible] of profit on his investment does not exceed 10 or 12 per cent.

"The question is, why does the government consider a legitimate profit for a man who stakes the whole of his capital on an industry in which he also expends the whole of his labor and abilities? If the government will fix that percentage, and the farmer's profits are in excess of that sum, then he may be accused of profiteering, but not till then."

Intended to Loot Paris.

Ambassador Morgenthau, in World's Work.

I was out for a stroll on August 3, 1914, and happened to meet the German ambassador. He began to talk about the German victories in France, the German armies, he said, would be in Paris within a week. The decisive factor in this war, he added, would be the Krupp artillery. And remember that this is," he said, "we are making war. And we shall make it without [illegible] considerations. We shall not be hampered as we were [illegible]. Then Queen Victoria, the czar and Francis Joseph interceded and persuaded us to spare Paris. But there is no one to intercede now. We shall move to Berlin all the Parisian art treasures that belong to the state, just as Napoleon took Italian art works to France."

It is quite evident that the battle of the Marne saved Paris from the fate of Louvain.

So confidently did Wangenheim expect an immediate victory that he began to discuss the terms of peace. Germany would demand of France, he said after defeating her armies, that she completely demobilize and pay an indemnity. "France now," said Wangenheim, "can settle for $5,000,000,000, but if she persists in continuing the war, she will have to pay $20,000,000,000."

He told me that Germany would demand harbors and coaling stations "everywhere." At that time, judging from Wangenheim's statements, Germany was not looking so much for new territory as for great commercial advantages. She was determined to be the great merchant nation, and for this she must have free harbors, the Bagdad railroad, and extensive rights in South America and Africa.

A Much Needed Arrest.

From the European Edition of the New York Herald.

The desk sergeant looked keenly at the vagrant who had just been brought into the station house. The vagrant was dirty and the officer ordered that he first be given a bath. Upon his return a wonderful transformation was noticeable.

"Heaven, man!" said the sergeant, "how long is it since you had a bath?"

"Why," said the vagrant, "I ain't never been arrested before!"

Where "Tip" Originated.

The campaign against tipping servants or waiters has called forth the authentic origin for the expression. The latest explanation is that the word "tip" originated in the old English coffee houses, where hung brass bound boxes into which customers were expected to drop coins for the servants. The boxes were inscribed "To Insure Promptness," and from the initial letters of these words came "tip." As the word today has little or no relation to celerity of service, the new explanation will doubtless leave the average person unenlightened concerning the word's origin.

A Great Responsibility.

THE responsibility attached to the preparing of a remedy for infants and children is undoubtedly greater than that imposed upon the manufacturer of remedies for adults whose system is sufficiently strong to counteract, for a time at least, any injurious drug. It is well to observe that Castoria is prepared today, as it has been for the past 40 years, under the personal supervision of Mr. Chas. H. Fletcher.

What have makers of imitations and substitutes at stake? What are their responsibilities? To whom are they answerable? They spring up today, scatter their nefarious wares broadcast, and disappear tomorrow.

Could each mother see the painstaking care with which the prescription for Fletcher's Castoria is prepared: could they read the innumerable testimonials from grateful mothers, they would never listen to the subtle pleadings and false arguments of those who would offer an imitation of, or substitute for the tried and true Fletcher's Castoria.

Can't Fool Chickens.

Jim Humbert, general manager of the Hutchinson street railway, one of the best known chicken fanciers in Kansas, says that the chickens are not fooled by the new daylight-saving law.

"No, sir," he remarked, "you cannot fool a chicken. I've tried it. When this new daylight law came along I wanted my chickens to act according to regulations, but they wouldn't budge. They simply refused to come off the perch until the regular sun time gave them the hour. You can fool a man on this daylight business, but you can't a chicken.—Hutchinson (Kan.) Dispatch.

Good Story Told of Retribution That Was the Lot of English Food Hoarder.

"We punish our food hoarders very severely," he said. "It's nothing unusual to arrest and fine an English food hoarder $1,000 for hoarding 30 or 40 pounds of tea or rice.

"Hence the food hoarder is a timid and jumpy animal. I heard the other day of a Liverpool banker who had bought and hidden in his office 50 pounds of cocoa. He was gloating over this hoard when two policemen were announced.

"'One minute,' the food hoarder gasped. 'Tell the policemen to wait one minute.'

"And then, pale and trembling—for he thought the policemen had come to drag him off to jail—rushed among his staff, distributing the cocoa in half-pound and pound tins.

"When the distribution was finished, he ordered the policemen to be admitted.

"And the policemen, bowing and scraping very humbly, asked him if he would be so kind and good as to buy a ticket for their benefit concert in the town hall."

HIS TIME WELL TAKEN UP

If Soldier Had Kept Promises He Might Have Had Some Trouble With His Captain.

He was a strikingly handsome figure in his uniform as he started out upon his round of farewell calls.

"And you'll think of me every single minute when you're in those stupid old trenches?" questioned the sweet young thing upon whom he first called.

He nodded emphatically. "Every minute."

"And you'll kiss my picture every night?"

"Twice a night," he vowed, rashly, patting the pretty head on his shoulder.

"And write me long, long letters?" she insisted.

"Every spare minute I have," he reassured her, and hurried away to the next name on his list.

There were ten in all who received his premises.

When it was over he sighed. "I hope," he murmured, wearily, "there won't be much fighting to do 'over there.' I'm going to be so tremendously busy."—London Opinion.

Can't Fool Chickens.

Jim Humbert, general manager of the Hutchinson street railway, one of the best known chicken fanciers in Kansas, says that the chickens are not fooled by the new daylight-saving law.

"No, sir," he remarked, "you cannot fool a chicken. I've tried it. When this new daylight law came along I wanted my chickens to act according to regulations, but they wouldn't budge. They simply refused to come off the perch until the regular sun time gave them the hour. You can fool a man on this daylight business, but you can't a chicken.—Hutchinson (Kan.) Dispatch.

Odds Against Bombs.

An ingenious person, says London Tit Bits, has calculated the chances of the average Londoner being hurt by enemy bombs. "Taking the area of London as 100 square miles," he says, "with a circle 60 yards in diameter as the area in which a bomb would cause serious inconvenience, and assuming the enemy succeeds in dropping 200 bombs in London every month all the year round; assuming also that there is an equal likelihood of a bomb dropping at any one point as any other, the war will have to last 2,000 years for it to be likely that a bomb will drop within one's own circle."

Hot Weather Poisons Hit The Stomach First

How to Keep Your Stomach Strong, Cool and Sweet

Hot weather always starts those quick chemical changes which produce poisons in meats, fish, fruits, vegetables, milk and food products.

Such summer poisons in foods not only make well stomachs sick but develop with dangerous rapidity in sensitive, sick or ailing stomachs and bowels.

These poisons not only generate gases and fluids which cause that bloated, lumpy feeling, heartburn, sour stomach, belching, acidity, but endless other stomach and bowel miseries.

A sure, safe, quick acting relief has been found which absorbs and neutralizes these poisons, too much acid and harmful gases. EATONIC Tablets, one or two taken after every meal, will keep your stomach sweet. You will have a good appetite to eat what you like, when you want it and be free from all those bad effects liable to come after a hearty meal in summer.

EATONIC Tablets are hot weather protectors for the stomach. They guard against the germs that lurk in the things you eat and drink. They rebuild listless appetites, promote digestion by aiding proper action of the stomach functions and insure speedy relief from indigestion and all stomach distress.

EATONIC is good to eat like candy. People from all over send grateful testimonials. Tens of thousands are obtaining relief with EATONIC every day but the best evidence is to let your raw stomach tell you the truth. Go to your druggist and get a big box of EATONIC. Tell him you want it for the prevention and cure relief of stomach and bowel disorders produced by hot weather poisons.

Then if EATONIC fails to satisfy you—return it to your druggist, whom you know and can trust. He will cheerfully refund your money. If your druggist doesn't keep EATONIC—drop us a postal. It will be delivered to your address and you can then pay for it. Address, H. L. Kramer, Pres., 1018 S. Wabash Ave., Chicago, Ill.

LOOK TO YOUR CLOTHING NEEDS NOW

Economist—trade journals—manufacturers—dealers, all advise that merchandise of the "usual trust-worthy reliable grades" is going to be scarce; and much higher.

In the mind of any well-informed man, there's no doubt on this point.

Not speaking of undesirable unsatisfactory goods that have not moved at regular prices, you can prove by investigating, that your kind of clothing is here in larger assortment than elsewhere in this vicinity; that you can save actual money by buying your outfit for man or boy here where you know a dollar's value goes with every dollar of merchandise.

Fatal Auto Accident at Swea City

Chalmers And Studebaker Cars In Two Mile Race Proves Fatal. One Man Killed

The state graveled road north of Swea City was the scene of a fatal auto smash-up last Friday evening

It seems that there had been a lot of argument between some Bancroft parties as to whose car could go the fastest. The race had been agitated for some time and finally they decided to put up a large sum of money and pull off the race near Burt. The authorities got hold of the information and put a stop to this The question had to be settled and so the Bancroft parties slipped over to the graveled road north of Swea City last Friday evening to pull off the race and settle the bet.

The Studebaker car was driven by Albert Godfreyson, of Bancroft, and his hired man, Leo Miller, rode with him in the race. The Chalmers car was driven by a Mr. Johnson, of Burt. It is reported that there was a big crowd out from Bancroft to witness the race, which was to be for two miles, the winner to take all bets. Everything was all set for the affair. Guards were posted along the road to stop all cars from going over the road. The race was begun and the two cars tore down the road at a sixty or sixty-five mile rate and had gone about a mile, the Studebaker in the lead by two telephone poles distance, when the car struck a bump, breaking the back wheel and rolling the car over four times. Godfreyson, the driver was thrown out after the car stopped rolling, but was not injured. Leo Miller, who was riding with him, was killed instantly. After the Studebaker had rolled over and slid about 100 feet the tank exploded and blew up the front end. All the wheels were broken, the wind shield and top clipped off. It is not definitely known whether Miller was killed before he left the car or whether the Chalmers car killed him as it flew past The Chalmers driver claims he did not pass the Studebaker. Miller's brains were strewn all over the car and in the road where he fell

It will evidently go hard with the parties who staged this affair as they will undoubtedly be called up for man slaughter, or for taking possession of the public highway and endangering the lives of people and for speeding.

We got the above information from a reliable party who went to the scene of the accident very shortly after it had happened. By that time the Bancroft bunch had cleared out. They all seem to tell a different story about the affair and the straight of it will be hard to get.

Cerro Gordo County will have a service flag representing its 2000 men who have gone to war. The flag will be unfurled on the first big day of the North Iowa Fair, at Mason City, Monday, August 12th. This announcement has just been made.

Plans in process of formation include a patriotic address by Governor Harding on that day and it is probable that the Governor will unfurl the flag. The first day will be a big day and in addition to Governor Harding and the service flag, Barney Oldfield, veteran race track driver of the world will be seen in action.

The Fair managers are planning other features and to bring the agricultural interests of Northern Iowa closer together, a banquet of county agents from Northern Iowa is being planned. This will be in charge of Roy F. O'Donnell, county agent for Cerro Gordo county Farm Improvement Association of the County.

Entertainment numbers have been almost completed by the program committee. In addition to the appearance of Oldfield on the first day, harness races will be provided on Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday, while motor races will be run on Friday, August 16th. In addition to concession entertainments and vaudeville the "Battle of Nations" will be shown in Fireworks in the evenings.

THE NEW SUGAR RULES.

The United States food administration has announced new rules for cutting down the quantity of sugar allotted to manufacturers of products requiring sugar. While the ration of the householder and the patrons of hotels and restaurants remains at three pounds per month, and sales to consumers in cities are limited to two pounds and consumers in the country to five pounds at a time (25 pounds being sold for home canning) ice cream makers get but 75 per cent of what they had in the same months last year, soda fountains and candy makers get but 50 per cent and so on. The reasons given by the food administration for the restrictions follow: "A number of beet sugar factories in Europe have been lost as a result of the recent German drive. These factories have been dismantled, and their output, therefore lost to the allies for the period of the war, regardless of what success the allied armies may have in recapturing the territory where these factories are located. Shortage in the crops of certain countries have developed, due to labor difficulties and other conditions, and a considerable amount of sugar has been lost through sinking by submarines. It has been necessary to withdraw considerable shipping which has heretofore been used for the transportation of sugar, in order to transport our army overseas and more adequately to supply our army, as well as those of the allies."

TWINE TO FARMERS CHEAPER IN 1919

THEY WILL HAVE SUPPLY AT THREE CENTS OFF AND SAVE ABOUT $6,000,000.

Binder twine for the harvest of 1919 will cost American farmers about three cents per pound less than they have paid this year; the estimated total saving to grain growers of the United States is $6,000,000. This announcement of the U. S. food administration follows an arrangement it has made with the Comision Reguladora, the Yucatan monopoly controlling sisal, whereby the Comision has contracted to sell 500,000 bales of sisal to twine mills of this country at a price three cents per pound less than a year ago.

That quantity of sisal represents the principal supply of fiber needed to manufacture binder twine for the grain harvest of 1919. To maintain an economical operation of twine mills in the United States, sisal is contracted for about a year ahead and is manufactured into the finished twine throughout the year By the new arrangements, the cost of sisal will be approximately 16 cents wholesale at gulf ports compared with 19 cents per pound for the sisal used in making the twine for the present harvest

Since its early investigations of binder twine, which is a vital element in our grain harvest, the food administration has maintained that the Comision Reguladora of Yucatan must sell its sisal at more reasonable prices if it expects to retain this country as a large customer. Sisal growers have complained, however, of the high cost of food and supplies which they secure from the United States. With the hope of establishing a better understanding between Mexican and American producers, the food administration proposes an exchange of agricultural commissions. A commission of Mexican farmers has been invited to visit the United States and study the production and distribution of articles they secure from this country.

In case the proposal is accepted, the food administration plans to have a committee of American farmers visit Yucatan to study methods and costs of sisal production. Such an interchange of study is expected to prepare the way for mutually satisfactory conditions in future sisal arrangements.

ASSESSING BIG PENALTIES

New York Firm Fined $25,000—Iowa Company $1,000.

The J. Kulla company, flour dealers, 2 Stone street, New York city, has been given the alternative of paying $25,000 to the Red Cross or going out of business entirely for violations of the United States food administration rules. The company has not indicated whether it will pay the money or take the alternative.

After a full investigation it was established that this firm was guilty of selling flour and substitutes at excessive margins of profit and making sales of flour without proportionate sales of substitutes

Charles Howson of Dewitt, Ia., has been required to give the Red Cross $1,000 for selling flour without substitutes.

GERMANS SQUEEZE STARVING BELGIUM

STORY OF THE TERRIBLE WANT OF ONE OF THE VICTIMS OF THE SAVAGE HUN.

The United States food administration is in receipt of a letter from Tournai, Belgium, which gives the details of one phase of the horrible treatment to which the victims of Germany are subjected and the very necessities of life wrenched from the clutch of starving men and women and babies by the soldiers.

The letter very clearly summarizes some of the reasons why the people of the United States, surrounded by luxuriant abundance of food, should give a little of their plenty that starving people over there may be saved while our soldiers are fed. The letter in part follows:

"Since the first of October, 1916, the Germans have put the city of Tournai and its communes under military rule. One of the consequences is the seizure of all animal and vegetable products, including also certain mineral products; that is to say, an order to the farmers and landholders forbidding them to dispose of these products and obliging them to hold them in good condition at the pleasure of the German authorities until such a time as it pleases them to requisition these products. This interval is usually not very long.

Seize Live Stock.

The object aimed at by the seizure, especially cattle and horses, must be inventoried, and measures of authority as annoying as they are severe constantly hinder the inhabitants as well as the responsible Belgian authorities with the threat of fine and imprisonment and even deportation into Germany.

"Woe to anyone who is found in possession of flour, rice, beans, potatoes, fuel, sugar, butter, meat, wine, or liquors, etc., etc.

"As for indigenous products, inflexible laws compel the inhabitants to deliver so large a share of them periodically to the Germans that there is hardly any left for the people themselves. Thus nearly all the potatoes and vegetables are requisitioned.

"Of eggs and milk, the amount to be delivered to the Germans is in proportion to the number of hens or of cows, but according to a tax so high that only the littlest children get any milk at all, thanks to the Association for the Drop of Milk; and the only way a farmer can get any eggs for himself is to report a smaller number of hens than he really has. Unfortunately for the farmers, the Germans go to the farms, after the peasants have made their reports, open the doors of the stables, chicken houses and other buildings, and throw corn to the chickens who naturally rush out to peck. . . . Each hen not reported costs her owner $2.50 fine, to say nothing of imprisonment!

Starve for Meat.

"The rationing of meat has reached the point where instead of nourishment being the basis of calculation it is only a negligible point. At Tournai, for instance, all the meat shops and pork shops were closed by the order of the German authorities since October 1, 1916, and the inhabitants could buy only at communal butcher shops.

"The Germans let them have a few beasts a week, but so few that the ration per person per week, according to a German notice posted before the witness left there, was to be limited beginning October 15, 1917, to the ridiculous quantity of between two and three ounces, including bones. Pork is rigorously forbidden, and woe to those who are found in possession of a ham; that misdeed would cost them, for instance, not only the ham, worth at least $20, but in addition a fine of $25, sometimes even also several days in prison.

"Thus it is that the great majority of the people already worn out by long and careful economy are reduced to the "people's soup," quite insufficient for them, and so decrease in vigor day by day. Marked out as it were for tuberculosis, nevertheless, instead of allowing themselves to be crushed by this course of treatment, the Tournaisians maintain a courage truly admirable. The only effect of the sufferings they have endured is to engender deep down in their hearts an implacable hatred toward Germany. This silent, bitter hate passes all description; it is the active form of a patriotism suppressed by the enemy."

Origin of Measurements.

The word ell means arm, and thus el-bow means the joint or bend in the arm. The ell measure was taken from the arm of Henry I, and if that was a yard and a quarter it was of very unusual length! The capacity of the human body was also early put to the use of measurement; thus we have the expression, "A hop, step and jump," "A stone's throw," and the old saying, "Within a bowshot away."

SERVICE FLAG DEDICATED

Beautiful Hand Made Flag Contains Forty Stars

Dedication of Service Flag at 8:00 o'clock prompt, Sunday evening, at the park in Klemme, Iowa, July 21st.

1. The raising of the Flag while The Star Spangled Banner is sung.
2. Invocation, Rev. Thiel.
3. Chorus, with orchestra accompaniment, "Keep the Home Fires Burning."
4. Roll Call of Soldier Boys, by Rev. Howdeshell.
5. Mixed Quartet, "O Italia, Italia, Beloved."
6. Reading, "The Service Flag,"
7. Male Quartet, "The Flag Without a Stain."
8. Introduction of Speaker by Rev. Meyer.
9. Address, L. H. Dickinson, of Algona.
10. "America," by all.
11. Benediction, Rev. Schmidt.

Sunday evening beginning at eight o'clock, the service flag dedication program was begun by the chorus singing "The Star Spangled Banner," as the Red Cross and Junior Red Cross marched in order from teh Red Cross Room to the Park entrance, and while the National Air was still being sung, the Service Flag was raised on a standard by two little boys in blue navy suits.

Rev. Thiel gave the invocation when the Flag had been raised into position.

The selected chorus gave a number on the program by singing, "Keep the Home Fires Burning," with orchestra accompaniment.

Rev. Howdeshell read off the names of the boys who are represented on the flag and gave an excellent talk in regard to the meaning of the flag and explained how it was made and gave the names of the ladies who had made it. The service flag is of fine wool and the stars are not stitched on but are all hand embroidered. They show from either side. Among the stars of blue is one of gold which represents Ben Schaefer, who died while in camp.

Following this a reading was given by a young man, "The Service Flag."

The male quartette gave a selection by singing "The Flag Without a Stain."

Rev. Meyer gave a short talk and then introduced the speaker of the evening, L. H. Dickinson, of Algona. Mr. Dickinson's address was most enjoyable and patriotic right to the point. Most of you have heard Dickinson and know what a fine speaker he is, but those who have failed to hear him at any time have missed a rare treat.

After singing "America" Rev. Meyer dismissed the meeting by a prayer and benediction.

All together the program was very good through-out and the Red Cross ladies of Klemme must be given a lot of credit for it was through them that the flag was made and dedicated to Klemme.

Following we give a list of names which appeared on the Service Flag. They are not in the order of the call. If there is any name which has been overlooked just leave it with any of the ladies of the Red Cross and the name will be entered on the Flag.

Material Waste.

The waste of 500,000 pounds of paper a week entails the cutting of at least 2,000 trees a week. Every ton of old paper recovered means a saving of eight trees of mature growth. The saving of woolen rags for the manufacture of shoddy saves land for crops which otherwise would be required for the raising of sheep. Men, money and materials—capital and labor—are conserved every time a bit of material is re-employed which formerly was destroyed.

Would Be Only Natural.

Francis was busily engaged in cutting pictures from the magazines and coloring them. At length he completed the cutting and coloring of the Statue of Liberty (holding a glorious orange-colored torch in her hand) and after careful scrutiny, after the manner of all great artists, he remarked to himself: "H'm, guess I'll make the Statue of Liberty's cheeks red, 'cause she's out in the fresh air all the time."

Had His Nerve.

Man (at the phone, to man at the other end of the wire)—"How dare you talk to me like that! You're not my wife!"

There is scope for chance everywhere; let your hook be always hanging ready. In the eddies where you least expect it will be a fish.—Ovid.

At least one lizard enjoys, to a certain degree, the power of sailing through the air, as in the cases of flying squirrels, flying frogs of Borneo, and some other animals. These lizards are called flying dragons and they are all small sized forms found in the Indo-Malayan region. They possess elongated ribs in mid series, some five to seven pairs of them, these ribs support, on either side of the body, a semi-transparent membrane, it being stretched over them both dorsally and ventrally, united at the free margins, and continuous with the general integument of the body. It, or rather, these "wings," close up like a fan when not in use, and fall to the sides of the animal, but when spread form a parachute of marked effectiveness, as by its use this lizard can leap from the limb of a tree and sail to another one at certain distances as well as a Phalanger or a flying Lemur Sometimes these "wings" in certain species of the flying dragons are beautifully marked, resembling the wing markings of some butterflies

Mendoza, which is 600 miles from Buenos Aires, is one of the oldest cities in the Argentine, and certainly one of the most interesting. The city which is built on a flat plain, lies directly at the foot of the Andes and enjoys a superb view of its beautiful snow covered heights One Captain Castillo says a writer in Wide World magazine, founded the city in 1559, but it was entirely destroyed by an earthquake in 1861 Ruins of some of its ancient churches still exist. Unfortunately for Mendoza, it is always subject to earthquakes, and these visitations, which generally come three or four times in the year, never fail to cause the inhabitants the greatest terror. Owing to its predisposition to the natural phenomena the new city is built with houses of one story only.

"Slacker" is English minted, and, so far as we know, a product of the war. The word, as now used, means a man who holds back from military service, who has to be conscripted, by extension, a man who holds back from any patriotic service whether military or not There is nothing obscure in the derivation from the transitive verb "slack," as 'to slack your work," meaning to be remiss in or neglectful of it; to shirk A slacker is a shirker of his duty, more particularly his duty toward his country, says the Boston Globe.

The recognized neutral coast territory limit is three miles. This was adopted when that was the extreme distance to which a cannon ball could be fired. However, the three-mile limit does not run parallel with the shore, following all its windings. It is calculated from "headland to headland." East of Boston the line would run from a point three miles east of Cape Ann to a point three miles east of the easternmost part of Cape Cod.

The constitution of the United States says "Treason against the United States shall consist only in levying war against them, or in adhering to their enemies, giving them aid and comfort." One is an adherent to the enemies of the country and gives them aid and comfort who supplies them with intelligence or furnishes them with provisions or arms.

WOMEN FOR JOBS ON STREET CARS

C. and C. L. general manager, for such employment

Mr Hanlon said he had about a dozen such applications. Up to this time, while the company has considered the possibility of being unable to get enough male help to man the cars, no serious thought has been given to employment of women.

There are probably enough men who will not be liable for military service in the company's employ to furnish motormen for all cars, but a few more heavy drafts might make it necessary to put on women as fare collectors or conductors.

GOVERNMENT WORK IMPORTANT IN IOWA

Factories Have Opportunity to Keep Wheels Running During the War.

Des Moines, Ia., July 17.—"The getting of government work into Iowa factories is of more importance to the bankers and merchants of the state than it is to the manufacturers," said G A Wrightman when questioned as to the progress the war industries board is making. "The manufacturers have their equipment, their buildings, and can generally convert their plants to make something that is necessary and which can be marketed. But the banker and merchant depend upon the saving and buying power of the public. Not only are the merchants and business men of Iowa becoming alarmed at the large amount of labor that is leaving the state for other fields, but the state authorities are becoming concerned, for they see in a labor famine grave danger to the most fundamental institutions of the state Consequently it is very necessary that Iowa secure a large percentage of the new war contracts, so as to preserve a balance in her economic structure."

Starting today, Mr. Wrightman will begin a tour of 30 cities in Iowa, meeting with the manufacturers and explaining the new government regulations He will return to Des Moines at the end of each week. If not called back to Washington in the meantime, he expects to complete this tour in four weeks

ISSUES WARNING ON INFANTILE PARALYSIS

Des Moines, Ia , July 17.—Out of 43 cases of infantile paralysis reported to the state board of health up to the end of last week 40 of them were from Dubuque. Nine deaths were reported, eight being from Dubuque and one from Cass county A case of the disease was reported from Pottawattamie county and one from Clarke county

In a statement issued with reference to this disease, Dr. G H. Sumner, secretary of the state board of health, among other things, says:

"The epidemics in Iowa have occurred in the summer and fall months, and this accords with the epidemics in other states and other parts of the world It seems that dry, dusty weather is particularly favorable to the spread of the disease

"The serious aspect of the conditions which confronts all states can be fully understood when it is stated that the mortality ranges from 8 to 20 per cent in the various epidemics, the death rate being highest in very young children and in adults and the lowest in children from 8 to 10 years old. That which is worse than direct mortality is the permanent paralysis of one or both of the arms or legs with the consequent withering of the affected members and the crippling of the patient for life This occurs in more than 75 per cent of the cases and constitutes the worse feature of this scourge

'The disease occurs in two types, the well marked type followed by paralysis of one or more muscle groups and the recently recognized abortive type, which, owing to greater resistance of the patient and a lessened virulence of the infection, runs a milder course and terminates without paralysis

"It is a contagious and infectious disease and must be handled as such The degree of susceptibility to the disease is low Only about 6 per cent of exposed persons develop the disease as compared to 17 per cent for diphtheria, 22 per cent for scarlet fever and nearly 90 per cent for measles This low degree of susceptibility is fortunate, but it has led to considerable misunderstanding and doubt as to the transmissibility of the disease because so many exposed persons escape infection.

"It is to be noted that infantile or spinal paralysis is most prevalent during the months of August and September and the Iowa state board of health requests all local boards of health and health officers to consider the necessity of acting quickly in this important work of educating the people to the extent that the disease is communicable and can be transmitted"

Counter Blow By Foch to Upset German Plans And Save Cap

BY J. W. T. MASON.
United Press War Expert.

New York, July 19.—Von Hindenburg has been caught in his own trap. Trying to lure the allies' reserves to the eastern area of the Aisne-Marne salient, he has weakened the German front along the western side of the salient, and General Foch has seized the opportunity to deliver a counter stroke for the better protection of Paris.

Today's attack by the allies between Fontenoy and Belleau, may possibly merge into a major offensive if the German front crumbles up, early in the engagement. For the moment, however, General Foch is doubtless bent on winning limited objectives. A major offensive by allies, before America's armies are fully ready to participate, has previously been shown not to be part of General Foch's plans. This limitation of strategy, nevertheless, would change if Von Hindenburg were to commit any stupendous blunder, in his mad passion for slaughter.

General Foch's present attack has a triple objective. It is first an effort to push the Germans farther away from the routes to Paris, secondly it will act as a diversion to interfere with a continuation of the German offensive between Rheims and the Marne, and thirdly it will seriously disarrange whatever plans Von Hindenburg may have formed to change the direction of his offensive from the east to Paris.

The check Von Hindenburg suffered since Monday has undoubtedly created a large area of confusion behind the German lines. This condition gives an unusual opportunity for the allies to deliver an effective stroke such General Foch has ordered to. The Aisne-Marne salient is so narrow that increased disquiet among the Germans within the pocket might lead to demoralization. Certainly General Foch has not had as excellent an opportunity as the present to safeguard the roads to Paris, since the Germans extended their front to the Aisne.

The capture of twelve towns, together with a number of farms northwest of Chateau-Thierry by the American troops is the most brilliant counter stroke the allies have made since the beginning of Von Hindenburg's first offensive last March

It is America's first offensive drive over an extended area. It is the first opportunity American military leadership has had to show its worth under offensive conditions resembling a major operation. Complete success has not attended the initial effort. There is now every reason for placing confidence in the ability of America's officers to rise to the difficult conditions attending a major drive.

Boches Throw in Reserve Force in Eastward Drive As Yanks Attack on We

BY WEBB MILLER,
United Press Staff Correspondent.

Paris, July 19.—Completely frustrated in their original design to reach the Marne on a wide front and smash toward Chalons, the Germans have switched to a secondary objective, attempting to encircel Rheims by pushing along the Marne valley toward Epernay with their backs toward Paris.

A high French military official thus summed up the situation for the United Press this morning:

"This is the first time an attack of such weight has collapsed so quickly," he declared.

Reports received during the night placed the enemy within eight miles of Epernay. Furious fighting was raging on the steep declivities and the banks of the Marne, along which huge masses of Germans were being thrown against the allies in repeated assaults. In their advance toward Epernay the Germans have the advantage of moving along a railway and a highway which runs on almost parallel lines to the town. The French are meeting this thrust with incessant counter attacks which, at last reports, were causing many of Germany's most violent efforts to wilt without appreciable success. The fighting was described in battle front dispatches as the most furious of the offensive, with the German shock troops meeting the French counter assaults in repeated clashes.

Yesterday the Germans began throwing in their reserves, which had been massed in the rear These were originally intended to be used only in developing any great initial success, the fact that they are being thrown into the combat now is another indication that the Germans are hard hit.

French and American hammer blows have crashed into the enemy lines at every point since the drive began.

Dispatches received during the night said the Germans had started an attack on the line from Fossoy to Oeuilly, a front of more than 16 miles, along the Marne. This battle takes in some of the ground recaptured in American and French counter attacks earlier in the week.

The Germans are across the Marne on a front of about 15 miles, but their strongest effort to develop this advantage is being made only along the roads to Epernay To the south they were not able to exploit their gain, inasmuch as the whole river valley is under a constant shower of French shells.

A new feature of this offensive is the development of screen fire over a great belt of terrain behind the lines. In many places this belt of shell fire is 20 miles deep. The American and French batteries are searching every inch of the enemy back areas with high explosives and allied bombing planes, which scores of machines drop in quantities of missiles are frequent...

ALLIES MAINTAIN MASTERY OF AIR

Carrier Pigeons Also Perform Important Service For Franco-Yanks—Hun Losses Are Sickening.

By Associated Press.

On the French front in France, July 19.—Notable work has been done by allied aviators during the new German offensive. The bombarding, observation and battleplanes have been constantly busy and the mastery of the air has been maintained throughout.

The air forces constantly harassed the attacking columns of the enemy and supplied information from moment to moment to the French staff.

One of the principal elements which worked toward bringing the German offensive to a halt was the splendid cooperation of the transport and information service. In Champagne lorry drivers passed four days and nights without a moment's repose, hurrying troops from one section of the line to another often under heavy fire.

Carrier pigeons proved most important in the Champagne fighting, where the French advance posts were often cut off from the main body.

The birds constantly brought back messages concerning movements of the Germans. In one instance, a pigeon brought a request that French artillerymen fire on a position occupied by their own comrades because the Germans were surrounding them. The gunners complied, mowing lanes in the German waves. Their wonderful accuracy of aim spared their comrades, many of whom made their way back.

The enormous losses of the Germans during the crossing of the Marne must have been fully equalled in the Champagne sector where their assaulting waves were hurled vainly against deep barriers of barbed wire under the fire of hundreds of machine guns.

QUENTIN ROOSEVELT MAY STILL BE SA

Pershing Expresses Hope That Young Aviator Survived His Fall.

New York, July 19.—Col. Theodore Roosevelt just before leaving the city for Saratoga, N Y., to attend the republican state convention today, received a cablegram from Gen. Pershing expressing hope that Lieut. Quentin Roosevelt, the Colonel's son reported killed in an aerial battle in France, may have landed safely.

The cablegram read:

"Regret very much that your son Lieut. Quentin Roosevelt, is reported as missing. On July 14, with a patrol of 12 planes, he left on a mission of protecting photographic section. Seven enemy planes were sighted and attacked, after which enemy planes turned and our planes broke off the combat, returning to their base. Lieutenant Roosevelt did not return. A member of the squadron reports seeing one of our planes fall out of the combat into the clouds, and the French report an American plane was seen descending.

"I hope he may have landed safely. Will advise you immediately on receipt of further information.

"Pershing."

Colonel Roosevelt, in reply, cabled the following message:

"We are deeply grateful for your thoughtful kindness and we will never forget it."

Colonel Roosevelt's attitude was more hopeful than upon receipt of the night of word sent from Paris by Major Theodore Roosevelt, jr., stating "reports of Quentin's death were absolutely unconfirmed" there.

DEMAND HARDING APOLOGIZE

Des Moines, Ia., July 18.—Governor W. L. Harding was denounced by the democrats assembled in state convention at the coliseum this afternoon when every man arose to his feet and cheered when J. J. Meyers of Carroll, temporary chairman declared "the chief executive of our state publicly insulted and sneered our president here a week ago. As a democrat I resent his remarks and sneers. I hope every democrat here feels the same way."

Strong sentiment was current to publicly resent the insult by passing a resolution asking the governor for an apology and an explanation of his remarks.

LITTLE MAIDEN HAD IT RIGHT

Only Best Definition of "Wife," but One Will Wonder How She Got to Know It.

The pretty schoolteacher had asked her class for the best original definition of "wife," and the boy in the corner promptly responded, "A rib!"

She looked at him reproachfully and turned to the boy with dreamy eyes, who seemed anxious to say something.

"Man's guiding star and guardian angel!" he said, in response to the nod.

"A helpmeet!" put in a little flaxen-haired girl.

"One who soothes man in adversity," suggested a demure little girl.

"And spends his money when he's single," added the incorrigible boy in the corner.

There was a lull, and the pretty, golden-haired girl said slowly, "A wife should be envy of spinsters."

"One who makes a man hustle," was the next suggestion.

"And keeps him from making a fool of himself," put in another girl.

"Some one for a man to find fault with when things go wrong," said a scowlful little maiden.

"Stop there," said the schoolteacher; "that's the best definition."—Pittsburgh Chronicle Telegraph.

Policeman's Happy Lot.

Little Indianapolis miss whose mother is dead lives with her little brothers and sisters at the home of her grandmother. Her father, who is a physician, has his office and home in another part of the city.

Surrounded by everything that brings happiness to the heart of a child, the little girl's thoughts often wandered to her daddy, who was all alone.

One day she surprised her grandmother with the startling remark:

"Grandma, I wish daddy was a policeman."

"A policeman, dear! Why? Daddy is a physician, and that is a very good profession, you know."

"Yes, grandma," persisted the child, but if daddy was a policeman he wouldn't be so lonesome."

FRENCH AND YANKEES ATTACK BOCHE FLANK

Greatest Number of Americans Yet Engaged In Battle Deliver Terrific Counter Stroke With French Between Soissons and Chateau-Thierry—Attack Launched In Night With Swiftness That Took Boches Off Feet.

VAST NUMBER OF TANKS USED BY ALLIES

London, July 18.—The French have captured several thousand prisoners and about twenty guns

With the American Army in France, July 18.—The town of Soissons now is well within the range of the American guns.

(This is the first intimation that American troops are engaged along the whole 25 mile front.)

London, July 18.—North of the Marne the French have regained the whole of the Rois wood and the village of Venteuil.

With the American Army in France, July 18, 2 p m.—The entire offensive operation begun this morning on the front between the Aisne and the Marne is going at this hour, for the most part even better than had been expected. The enemy so far has been unable to withstand the shocks the Americans and their allies have delivered and still are delivering.

As the whole German left flank is menaced, the enemy must draw in his troops from the Marne front or risk their being caught where they are. This means that the finishing blow possibly has been administered to his dying offensive.

Hastily organized counter attacks against the Americans developed here and there but all were broken up, and our troops continue to advance.

In one town on the southern part of the front the Franco-American troops captured eighteen guns.

London, July 18, 4:38 p. m.—The drive between the Aisne and the Marne is the biggest all counter offensive since April, 1917, it was learned authoritatively this afternoon. Many tanks are in action with the French and American troops.

BY FRED S. FERGUSON.
United Press Staff Correspondent.

With the American Army in the Champagne, July 8, 4:20 p. m.—American troops are still advancing everywhere along the 25-mile front, where they are cooperating with the French in today's great counter offensive, as this is cabled.

With the American Army in the Champagne, July 18—The Americans are advancing with the French on the 40 kilometer front (25 miles) between Soissons and Chateau Thierry.

The Americans had captured more than a dozen towns and villages, taken numerous prisoners and advanced more than three kilometers (nearly two miles) up to noon.

Up to the hour of cabling, the Americans had captured the following towns west of Chateau-Thierry: Villers Helon, Dammard, Courcramps, Licy Clignon, Monthiers, Torcy, Belleau, Givray, St Gengoulph, Hautesvenes and other small villages, farms heights and woods, including Givery wood.

The advance reached a depth of three kilometers within three hours after it began. Many towns within that depth northward clear to Fontenoy, were taken by the Americans and the French.

The American commander at Givray, reporting the capture of the town to headquarters, sent the following message: "Met boche on his line of resistance. Sharp fight. Boche turned tail and ran like hell, pursued by our troops. Hope have more prisoners."

Beg To Go On.

At headquarters messages were coming in from everywhere, asking permission to push on farther.

It was essential that the line should be kept traight and in some instances it was necessary to order the troops to hold back until adjoining units came up.

It is the greatest pursuit of boches the Americans have yet engaged in. Enormous numbers of prisoners have been taken. It is impossible to estimate how many.

American airplanes, flying over the lines, fought the boches down while the doughboys and machine gunners fought them below. Several observers dashed through the clouds and others carried back messages.

Blow Great Surprise.

The surprise was not only complete, but the concentration for the attack was unusually rapid. Field guns were loaded on trucks and these dashed up to the lines. The horses were carried up the same way. Lines of trucks carrying six to eight horses a piece have been hurried up for the past 24 hours.

The German artillery resistance was feeble until 7 a. m., and then their guns opened up but the Americans had advanced too far for the enemy guns to stop them.

Torcy was captured in 15 minutes. Belleau fell at 8.20 and Givray half an hour later.

The greatest force of Americans which has as yet participated in a single engagement is advancing with the French in this offensive, which was launched at 4:30 this morning.

Eighteen cannon were captured by the French and Americans at Courchamps.

Latest reports say the advance continues everywhere.

The towns named in the dispatch cover a front of more than seven miles. Belleau is five miles northwest of Chateau-Thierry. Torcy is half a mile west of Belleau. Licy-Clignon is a mile north of Torcy. Vinly is three miles west of Torcy; Hautesvisnes is two miles northwest, St. Gengoulph is three miles northwest; Courcyamps is a mile and a half north, and Givergy is a mile east. Dammard is two miles and a half north and west of St Gengoulph.

EPERNAY IS SAVED.

London, July 18.—News received in London indicates that the attack started by the French this morning on the front between Chateau Thierry and Soissons is on a considerable scale. The attack was believed to be making good progress.

Advices this afternoon stated that the Germans had made no further attacks east of Rheims, and that the French at various points on the front had regained ground.

The French, the reports state, have recaptured Montvoisin, south of the Marne, at the point where the Germans had advanced farthest toward Epernay and Chene-La-Reine to the west, and took as well the heights west of those villages, overlooking the Marne.

The Germans are reported to have made slight progress north of St. Agnan in the district southwest of Dormans, but their progress has been slow.

The maximum penetration of the French lines since July 15 is six miles, according to the latest reports.

North of the Marne the Italians have retaken Clairizet two miles northeast of Bligny, the advices add.

In view of the big Franco-American counter offensive it is declared there is little likelihood of Epernay falling. There is little change in the situation on either side of Rheims.

This morning's attack represents what apparently is a strategic move by General Foch to counter the German blow further south along the Marne and on the line to Rheims.

The sector in which the attack was launched includes part of the front held by the Americans. The American line extended east of Belleau wood and on northwestward at least as far as Torcy, probably some two or three miles within the area mentioned.

The Franco American stroke seems to have made important initial progress and is endangering the entire huge salient created south of the Aisne.

It is along the line now under attack that the notable series of operations which immediately preceded the start of the present German offensive was carried out by the French and Americans.

Marked gains were made by the French day by day in the region southwest of Soissons, and further south along the front edging the forest of Villers Cotterets. The Americans for their part took possession of the entire Belleau wood, captured the village of Vaux, close to Chateau-Thierry, and advanced their lines to positions where their guns commanded the villages of Boureschez, Belleau and Torcy, along the Clignon river.

This front has been pointed to as the logical one for an offensive stroke by General Foch, as its success would pinch off the entire Marne salient and if carried through rapidly would inevitably result in the capture of large numbers of the enemy and quantities of guns and material. It cannot be told as yet whether such a broad objective has been begun on the general-

Paris, July 18.—French and American troops attacked this morning on the 35 mile front from Fontenoy to Belleau, the French war office announced.

Initial advances of from one to nearly two miles were made at some points and prisoners were taken.

There was no change on the Marne-Champagne front.

"We attacked the German positions this morning from the region of Fontenoy to Belleau," the communique said. "At certain points we progressed from two to three kilometers.

"Prisoners were taken.

"On the Marne-Champagne front there was no change. Southwest of Montheuill-La-Fosse, a German rush was checked. North of Prosnes an attack by the German guards failed."

Early in the morning prisoners taken in the advance began coming in.

In the fighting on the front of the German offensive, the French last night stormed the Germans in the face of violent attacks which the enemy launched southwest of Manteuil-La-Fosse, between the Marne and Rheims.

On the front beyond Rheims, east of the Vesle river, an attack by German guard units was completely repulsed.

Paris (10:35 a. m.) July 18.—The second phase of the new German drive in the Champagne region began today when the allies again passed from the aggressive to the defensive, according to the latest battle front dispatches.

GREAT NUMBERS OF AMERICANS ENGAGED

Pershing Confirms Press Dispatches Concerning Progress of Drive.

Washington, D. C., July 19.—Whole divisions of Americans are involved in the great counter offensive launched today by the Americans and French on the Marne-Aisne front, Secretary Baker revealed this afternoon.

Official reports from General Pershing, confirming press details of the drive, declared the on rush is still continuing.

(There are 27,500 men to an American division)

Commenting on Pershing's report, Secretary Baker said it was clear that many prisoners and much war material had been taken.

Baker said:

"Official confirmation of the opening of the counter offensive along the lines stated in the newspapers, has arrived from General Pershing.

American troops participated both as complete divisions and as units in association with the French.

"The first objectives seem everywhere to have been attained and while no actual count has been made, it is clear that many prisoners have been taken and that guns and other war material have been captured.

"Our official reports also confirm that the American soldiers advanced with the greatest dash and gallantry and were still advancing when last heard from."

PETROGRAD GOAL OF LITHUANIANS

Force of 35,000 Defeats Bolshevists Who Are Fleeing to Former Capital In Disorder.

Geneva, July 19.—Thirty-five thousand Lithuanians after defeating bolshevist forces and capturing Vitebak, on the Dvina, are marching on Petrograd according to a dispatch from Lausanne today. The bolshevists are said to be in disorderly retreat.

ALL READY TO TAKE OVER THE WIRES

President's Executive Order All That Is Necessary to Bring the Change.

Washington, D. C., July 19.—David J. Lewis, whose official appointment as the nation's wire director now appears to await only issuance of President Wilson's executive order taking over the lines, began work in his new job today.

Lewis this afternoon had an extended conference with President S. J. Konenkamp, of the telegraphers' union.

Burleson conferred with President Wilson today, and shortly afterward it was stated the president would sign the executive order either today or tomorrow.

Under government control the possibility of a 1-cent automatic telephone system throughout the country loomed today.

Competitive lines will be wiped out, as in the case of the railroads, and equipment will be pooled and standardized along the same lines. Great savings in operating costs will be effected officials say and with these the cost to patrons may be materially reduced.

Details of telegraph operation are complete and they embrace similar saving methods as planned in telephone operation. Postoffices throughout the country will be important units in the telegraph operation.

WAR LABOR BOARD MAKES EXPLANATION

Washington, D. C., July 19.—A statement was issued by the war labor board today to allay the apprehensions that have arisen in labor circles because of a misinterpretation of a resolution of the war labor policies board urging government departments and boards not to "make changes in present standards pending the standardization now under consideration."

Secretary Lauck, of the war labor board, it was announced, has assured workers that the resolution was intended only to prevent irregular changes in present standards and will not conflict in any way with awards of the board where conditions are below present standards.

GENERAL MARCH GIVEN KNIGHTS' GRAND CROSS

Washington, D. C., July 19.—King George has awarded the Knights' Grand cross of the distinguished British order of St. Michael and St. George to Gen. Peyton C. March, chief of staff of the American army.

AMERICAN WOMEN ARE NURSING U. S. TROOPS

Paris, July 19.—Hundreds of American regulars and national guardsmen were injured on the Marne front and are being nursed in the Paris hospitals and having their wounds looked after by American women. The soldiers receive surgical attention on the way from the front, their wounds being dressed three or four times during the journey.

TROOPS IN BAD WAY.

By Associated Press.

With the British Army in France, July 17 (Wednesday)—German troops in some portions of the trenches in Flanders have been so exhausted and demoralized by constant British raids, attacks bombardments that many of them have fallen asleep at their posts, not caring whether they are killed or captured. That state of affairs was disclosed in orders found upon captured prisoners.

A good deal of activity continues behind the German front, but the infantry has remained very quiet.

BEGIN TO REGARD YANKS SERIOUSLY

Austrian Newspaper Makes Admission—Explains Piave Defeat.

Geneva, July 18.—"American intervention is having its effects; already it has begun to be felt to such an extent that it must be considered seriously," the Pester Lloyd, semi-official newspaper of Budapest, declared.

This newspaper, admitting Austrian losses in the recent Italian offensive reached 250,000, explains the defeat as follows:

"The Austro-Hungarians were numerically inferior to the allies, and the war methods of the enemy, especially the Italians, had been greatly improved."

JAPAN CONSIDERS SIBERIAN DRIVE

Intervention Is Chief Topic of Interest In Kingdom of Mikado—Parties Are Divided.

London, July 18. — Discussion of Japanese intervention in Siberia has become general in Japan and is occupying attention to the exclusion of all other topics, says a Tokio dispatch dated Tuesday, July 16, to the Daily Express.

The impression is growing, the message says, that Japan is about to take action.

An early decision in favor of the sending of an expedition is expected.

The various political parties have held private meetings to consider the attitude of the Kensei-Kai and Seiyu-Kai groups. Both thsee parties are more inclined, it is said, to oppose intervention, but party feeling usually disappears when a national decision is reached.

Viscount Kato, former foreign minister, in an address to the Kensei-Kai declared that if the entente allies were in agreement Japan must not refuse to intervene and said that nevertheless he doubted the possibility of an expedition reaching the Ural mountains and feared that an advance only as far as Irkutsck would not achieve the object for which intervention was undertaken.

EMPEROR SAW START OF FUTILE OFFENSIVE

Karl Rosner, Kaiser's Pet, Describes How "Majestat" Watched "Surprise Fire."

Amsterdam, July 18. Emperor William watched the opening of the latest German offensive from an advanced observation post northwest of Rheims, his favorite correspondent, Karl Rosner, reports in a dispatch to the Berlin Lokal Anzeiger.

"The emperor," says Rosner, "listened to the terrible orchestra of our surprise fire attack and looked upon the unparalleled picture of the projectiles raging toward the enemy positions."

HUNS ONLY WHISPER FEARS ABOUT DRIVE

Swiss Newspaper Informed Germans Are Worried Over Present Failure.

Geneva, July 18.—The newspaper Democrate, which is usually well informed upon German affairs, declares that the latest information from across the Rhine showed mixed feelings in Germany regarding the new offensive. While there is hope of victory and an early peace, there are also secret fears of failure which are only whispered the advices assert.

GERMANY WANTS TO ENTER MOSCOW

Lenine Asserts Russia Capable of Protecting Hun Embassy.

London, July 18.—The Germans have asked the Russian government to allow a German battalion to proceed to Moscow to "protect" the embassy there, adding there was no intention of occupying the city, a Petrograd wireless dispatch reported today.

Premier Lenine replied that the Russians were capable of protecting the German embassy, and that no foreign soldiers would be permitted to enter the city.

WILL DIVERT FUND.

Washington, D. C., July 18.—Return of the Nobel peace prize fund donated by Colonel Roosevelt to establish the foundation for industrial peace was voted today by the board of trustees. The fund now amounts to more than $48,000 and will be used for some war purpose selected by Colonel Roosevelt.

KINGSLEY BOY WAS GASSED ON JUNE 19

Kingsley, Ia., July 17.—Charles P. Hammer reported in today's casualty list as severely wounded in France, was "gassed" on June 19, according to a letter received here from his pal. He enlisted April 6, 1917, in Company K at LeMars, was transferred to the 168th infantry and crossed the Atlantic with the Rainbow division. He is 22 years old. He has two brothers and two sisters, but both of his parents are dead.

DEAD HUNS FIVE DEEP; LOSS HUGE

PAY AN AWFUL PENALTY

Only Few Boche Troops Get Through the U. S. Ranks, and They Are Hunted Down and Killed.

BY FRED S. FERGUSON.

With the American Army in the Champagne, July 19, (·05 a. m.)—The fourth day of the battle finds the Germans still halted in their attempt to envelop Rheims.

Stubbornness of the American and French resistence at the extremities of the fighting front—east of Chateau-Thierry and east of Rheims—safely holds the allies' flank.

Dead Five Deep.

The Americans not only are holding their ground but are inflicting the heaviest punishment on the enemy. In the region of Mezy, and Jaulgonne, the boche dead are piled four and five deep.

One American regimental commander estimates 5,000 dead in front of his command alone.

The Germans have not renewed their attempt to break the American resistence from the Mezy front, and this region remains strangely void of infantry operations, but the most desperate encounter continues to the eastward in the region of Conde wood, St. Agnan and La Campelle-Monthodon, with the Americans fighting elbow to elbow with the French.

The battle line south of the Marne sways back and forth as the opposing armies continue in their grapple of death. The latest definite information showed that the Marne line, involving the Americans extends from Mezy to St. Agnan to Lachapelle-Monthodon, to Comblizy, to Le Mesnil-Huttier, thence northeastward to the river. A gain of one kilometer (621 miles) at Le Mesnil-Huttier, represents the total progress made by the enemy in two days of terrific fighting. Attacks and counter attacks follow each other in bewildering succession and are accompanied by unprecendented artillery firing.

Hold 20 Mile Front.

This shows the Americans are holding an unbroken front of more than 20 miles south of the Marne. From Chateau-Thierry eastward to Mezy, five miles east and north of Chateau-Thierry, the Germans have been pushed back across the river and has not attempted to recross. From Mezy southeastward to St. Agnan, a distance of six miles, the Americans apparently are opposing the boche alone. From there eastward and northeastward they are brigaded with the French. Lachapelle-Monthodon is two miles directly east of St. Agnan. Comblizy is four miles northeast of La Chapelle-Monthodon.

(Le Mesnil-Huttier, is about four miles farther to the northeast and about two miles south of the Marne).

The Americans' ability and dash in resisting attacks and in counter attacking has won the highest praise from the French officers. American bravery and initiative and French experience and gallantry, coupled with the most excellent artillery support, both by French and American guns, is what has held up the boches.

Yanks Upset Plans.

Along the Mont Mirail road, which the enemy expected to hold today, old men and women were peacefully working in gardens. The stoppage of the Germans by the Americans east of Chateau-Thierry, upset the enemy program of operations toward Mont Mirail.

The attack today was centering against the French on the American right, in an apparent effort to reach Epernay.

As an instance of the German losses, prisoners said the American artillery wiped out one entire regiment before it was able to cross the Marne. Of a group of six boats, each holding 20 men, five were destroyed. The famous Sixth grenadier regiment was utterly annihilated, every man being killed or captured. Three German divisions (36,000 men) were so demoralized that they have not appeared in the battle since the first day.

Extraordinary weather has marked the battle daily. Scorching sunshine has been succeeded by cloudiness and rain almost every hour, with monotonous regularity.

The latest information shows that 45 German divisions (520,000 men) are being used on the entire front.

American aviators have brought down another plane, raising their bag to seven.

The fighting in the fields and woods in the present battle of the Marne is most unusual. Companies, platoons and even groups of two or three men are waging their own warfare in clearing out the boches.

Sergeant J. F. Brown, separated from his platoon, encountered the captain of another company. Pointing at four enemy machine guns, the captain said:

"Let's get 'em."

The pair charged the nests, seemingly impervious to the hail of bullets, and killed or captured the crews of two of the guns. The prisoners were in their way, so Brown turned them over to the captain and cleaned up the other two guns alone, taking additional prisoners and smashing the pieces.

The captain had started back to the American lines with his captives. Brown follows some distance in his wake. The sergeant encountered a comrade, Corporal Pipp, who volunteered to guard the prisoners. Brown readily accepted as he had just caught sight of a shallow section of trench, half filled with dead boches. The other half was filled with boches, too—very much alive.

Brown's automatic rifle had become so hot that he could barely hold it. But he lay it across his arm and opened fire on the trench, killing several of its occupants.

One of the Huns yelled "kamerad!"

"All right, come out," Brown replied, between shots. All of the Germans, numbering nearly 100, dropped their guns and surrendered.

Brown and Pipp again started for the rear and encountered other members of their platoon with prisoners. Brown took charge of them all. The wood where Brown and the others had been fighting was being shelled continuously. Once Brown and Pipp were surrounded, but they fought their way out with their automatic rifles.

ELMER FULLER HAS ACCIDENT

Last Friday while Elmer Fuller was working on a lathe at the Hart-Parr plant at Charles City he got his finger caught between a heavy iron bar and the moving machinery in the lathe, cutting one finger off at the first joint. He says it happened so quick that he didn't realize at first what had happened. He was in Klemme Sunday and Monday and the finger is getting along as well as can be expected although it will lay him up for several weeks before he can take up his work again.

Chas. Busch met with a rather painful accident last Saturday while he was unloading lumber from a car. A heavy plank fell on his foot and severely bruised one of his toes. Charlie is now limping around on one foot.

The Sunday School of the First Methodist church was awarded a Standard Certificate (Class B) by the Board of Sunday Schools of Chicago. This goes to show that they have one of the very best organized Sunday Schools in Hancock county as the Standard of the Methodist Board of Sunday Schools is higher and harder to meet than the State Standard.

Smashed Russian Precedents.

The Russian church was swung into revolution in a manner that seems rather amusing, writes a correspondent. The workmen of Petrograd arrested the Metropolitan Ptirim and locked him up in Peter-Paul fortress, across the Neva, while the czar—the supreme head of the Russian church—was deposed. The Holy synod issued a decree abolishing all invocations for the imperial family, and a new liturgy was prescribed by the simple process of a secretary sitting down at a typewriter and composing it. The orthodox precedents of centuries were rudely smashed. The clergy kept discreetly quiet and said nothing, except prayers.

How to Boil Rice.

Many people do not know how to boil rice properly. It is generally mushy. Instead of cold water, pour on boiling water and keep the rice galloping every minute. Use two quarts of water to a cupful of rice. When the rice is tender drain in a collander and pour cold water over. Then pack in a bowl and let stand in a pan of boiling water until dried out. This is the original Chinese recipe.

nday, the famous American evangelist, recently converted a Japanese who was a butler. The next day his master had a large dinner party, and the Jap was told to do his best. Course after course came on, and the guests were delighted with the dinner. At last the Jap brought on a huge cake, as a final touch, and, remembering that Billy Sunday had closed his service with prayer, the Jap figured out that he should close the dinner with a religious sentiment. Not knowing much of the language of the Bible he decided to choose the phrase which converted him. So the guests were amazed to find on the cake in sugared writing: "Prepare to meet thy God."—London Tit-Bits.

STATE FOOD ADMINISTRATOR DEEMS ENLISTS DAIRY COMMISSIONER BARNEY FOR INSPECTION.

Inspection of all the bakeries of the state was begun a few days ago under the supervision and direction of W. B. Barney, state dairy and food commissioner for Iowa, under direction of Administrator Deems.

Mr. Barney has with him a corps of experts from the chemical division of the department of agriculture at Washington, who are assisting in making the inspections and who will continue to do so until every bakery in the state has been visited.

All bakeries were required under the rules, to reach the full 20 percentage of substitutes by February 24, but on account of the shortage of substitutes, many of them could not do so, and they were granted additional time. However, the administration has now notified all bakeries that there will be no further extension, as substitutes can now be obtained. Any bakery found baking bread with less than 20 per cent of the authorized substitutes will be closed at once and its license revoked.

In making the inspections, the percentage of substitutes is ascertained, and in addition the entire process used in bread-making is carefully observed. The administration wants the people's bread to be wholesome, and the experts from Washington will give the bakeries advice and scientific instruction in combining the substitutes so that the very best results may be attained.

We Face Famine.

The food wanted by mankind does not exist. The word shortage is not strong enough for the situation. To put the matter bluntly, the whole world is up against a nasty thing, familiar to the people of India, called famine.—Lord Rhondda, Food Controller for England.

SHOCK TO JINRIKISHA MEN

Craze for Sprinting That Has Seized Tokyo's Young Men Receives Approval of Everyone Else.

Since the Olympiad held in Tokyo, young men of the capital have been seized with a craze for athletic sports of all descriptions, says East and West.

Especially have they developed enthusiasm for the marathon race, which doesn't require paraphernalia or technical skill. Good "wind" and a sound heart are the chief requirements. Simplicity and general accessibility cause it to appeal to clerks and men employed during the daytime at sedentary work. Between ten and twelve o'clock, every fair night, after the shops have closed and the streets are more or less deserted, one beholds squads of youths in their shirts running over the bedewed ground at steaming speed for some destination. Employers connive at this exercise, as they think it better for the young men than spending their evenings in mild dissipation. The police do not object, for the nocturnal sport has not yet become a nuisance. But there are others who strongly protest.

"What's the world coming to?" groaned a 'rikisha man,' as he saw a passing flock of youths in scanty attire.

Washington City of Women.

Washington has always been a city of women. The census of 1910 showed the percentage of women in Washington to be larger than in any other city. There were then 91.3 men to very 100 women—according to the census, which never explained what any 100 women would be doing with the one-third man that was part of their quota. If things keep on the way they are going, Washington will soon have two women to each man. Cabinet officers already have announced that in the matter of employment, all other things being equal, women should have the precedence over men. The new movement is born of prospective war necessity; the men will be needed on the firing line and in mobilizing the nation's industries.

HOW FRENCH WOMEN SAVE

Their Natural Talent for Economy Has Done Much to Help Withstand Hardships of War.

The French housewife, with her native talent for economy, has saved France up to the present time fully as much as have those fighting in the trenches. Good advice has been given to Americans, if they will only take it.

Rich women who have had many servants now have few. Expenses are cut all along the line. Simple meals and simple habits replace elaborate ones. A lady buys clothes, but for orphans and refugees, not for herself.

Poor women, who must reduce simplicity to frugality—what do they do? They make one sou buy two sous' worth by watching every centime. This, for countless women in Paris, means getting up at five o'clock in the morning to get a choice of things at the great market, Les Halles; walking long distances to go where things cost not so much as nearer home; walking instead of riding; keeping vigilant watch on the venders' carts along the street for good values; turning plain foods into attractive dishes by a well-flavored sauce and a garnishing which costs nothing.

In the old residential quarters of Paris there are hundreds of women of aristocratic connections and moderate means who before the war had several servants and who now have none, or perhaps one. And to women of all degrees of wealth there could scarcely be a more interesting study than to see how these gentlewomen and their humble helpers give a charming touch to hard economy.

A representative household is one where the regular income has suddenly stopped, but leaving a little more than the small government allowance. The ingenuity of housekeeper and cook accomplishes wonders. In many a home butter may now be served once a week and perhaps with only one course.

Perhaps three large strawberries must suffice for each serving at dessert, but they will be served with a grace that makes the eating of them a pretty ceremonial. If gooseberries and currants are inexpensive they will combine remarkably with other berries for a compote. Perhaps dessert will be a spoonful of jelly with a simple little cake; or perhaps dessert will give way to cheese, taking on a new attractiveness on its plate of green leaves.—Leslie's Weekly.

Americans Recapture Men Taken Prisoners By Teutonic Raiders

Follow Huns to Stronghold and Recover Comrades and Australians—Yanks and Anzacs Become Fast Friends —Antipodeans Praise U. S. Troops.

By Associated Press.

With the British Army in France, Sunday, July 7.—In the German counter attack against the positions gained by the Australians and Americans around Hamel two American and five Australians were captured by the enemy. Volunteers were called for and an American party brought back the captured men and a German officer while 12 Australians brought the number of German prisoners to 50.

The story of this incident as told by an American officer who took part in the fighting follows:

"The boches did not bother us until Thursday night when they made their counter attack which was repulsed. They did succeed in the first rush, however, in getting hold of two Americans and five Australians whom they carried back.

"We immediately called for volunteers to go out after these captured lads and all our men at once began yelling for the chance. Corp. Raymond Powell was first up and he was given a squad of men for the work.

"The guns had put down a heavy barrage but the corporal led his chaps straight through this fierce fire and charged hot foot after the retreating enemy. The Germans retired to a strong point, but the corporal with the other Yankees went in after them.

Round Up 50 Huns.

"Our two boys were taken along with the five Australians and the corporal and his party also captured a boche officer. In the meantime 12 Australians had circled around and joined the American party with the result that 50 German prisoners were brought back.

"That night a boche sniper caused a lot of trouble from a nest in the front line, and one of my men went out across No Man's Land alone after him. The Yankee got him and left him dead on the field."

"An Australian officer was telling me about one of our corporals who did what was considered a fine piece of work. This lad had charge of a machine gun squad. Early in the push all his comrades were knocked out by shell fire and he was left along with the gun.

"He knew the gun was needed so he started forward with it himself. It was no light job, but he kept setting it up and working until he got through to the objective, where he made his final stand. He was pumping away religiously at the boches, and the Australian officer was watching him with interest for he knew he was a green hand and admired the way he was carrying on. Suddenly the corporal raised himself up and then dropped to his knees again with his head hanging.

Gun Refused to Kick.

"'What's the matter, Yank, are you hit?' called the officer.

"'No sir,' replied the corporal quickly. 'But do you know this darned thing don't kick at all.'

"After fighting magnificently with his gun for so long the corporal had only then made that big discovery and he simply stopped firing for a moment to inspect his gun with new interest.

"We were surprised," the officer added, "at some of the prisoners taken. Most of them were strapping fellows, but there were a lot of them who, while big, were young. The boche put over some gas at one time, but it was only a good experience for our men as they were equipped with the masks.

"I want to say here that those Australians are magnificent fighters. We have been learning the game from them. Our fellows watched the veterans closely and it was a case of imitation without a second lesson.'

During the evening of the day the correspondent spent with the Americans a big bunch of mail arrived from home and there was jubilation among the men. One young fellow came tearing around waving a torn dollar bill which he had just found in a letter.

"I got it, I got it," he yelled with delight.

"Five francs kid," laughed an officer who was standing near.

"It's ain't five francs. It's a dollar and its from home," and the boy was off with his treasure.

America's Sea Power.

Arthur Pollen, in Land & Water, London.

When America came into the war, there were vessels to our order displacing over 2,000,000 tons, actually, I believe, in course of construction. But it was just at this moment that the full gravity of the German submarine menace was realized. The unpleasant truth was dawning on the world that if the thing went on as it had begun, no matter how great or well equipped the armies might be that America would raise, they could be of little value in the war without shipping to take them to Europe or to keep men supplied there. In other words, it became apparent that the first necessity of the situation was to multiply the shipbuilding capacity of the country to the utmost. American necessity and not American capacity dictated what was to be done. A program for the launching and completion of 4,000,000 tons, in addition to the 2,000,000 already under construction, was set out, and every effort is being made to make its realization possible.

The number of ships actually in commission has risen from about 300 to about 1,000. The personnel of the navy proper consisted a year ago of 4,500 officers and 68,000 enlisted men. Today the officers are over 15,000 and the enlisted men exceed 254,000. The number of naval stations are from 130 to 362; the navy yard employes have doubled. So that, omitting the marine corps, over 30,000 strong, the naval establishment on shore and afloat embraces now over 300,000 men. Roughly, we may say that everything was multiplied by three within nine months—everything that is to say, except the scale of expenditure, which had been multiplied by more than seven. The 50 destroyers authorized in August, 1916, were all contracted for very soon after the appropriations were finally passed. This program has been very greatly added to since. Last October $225,000,000 were voted for this class of ship only, and again every unit authorized was contracted for immediately.

In the munitions specially necessary for antisubmarine war—and this includes ordnance for the arming of merchantment, merchant auxiliaries and every other form of patrol boat—the navy department has been fortunate in placing its contracts and therefore in securing early deliveries. Generally speaking, so far as antisubmarine provisions go, the material within the navy departments activities has been admirably taken care of. More remarkable than this, which is after all a question of good business management, always a conspicuous mark of this branch of the national government has been the way the problem of the personnel has been met. The shortage of men was admitted to be serious on the pre-war program of construction. But, as we have found in our own service, highly efficient seamen can be turned out with great rapidity where the candidate is not only willing but desperately anxious to qualify, when the right kind of effort is made to train him, and when every step in the training is made in the atmosphere and under the stimulus of real war.

The normal course on shore before going to sea is four to five months, but few men have been so fortunate as to get the benefit of so long a preparation. For the 700 ships that used to be yachts, traders, liners, coasters and the like, and are now patrol boats, transports and so forth, have had to be manned somehow, so that in the majority of cases, not much more than the rudiments of drill and discipline, of gunnery and the simpler forms of ship's technique have been learned on shore. But notwithstanding the hurried character of the training, I learned from many quarters that there is no ground whatever for complaint against the newly enlisted personnel.

The main factor in this almost tropical production of seamen has been the work of the officers and warrant officers of the Atlantic fleet. My visit to the squadron composing it was brief. But it sufficed to show the scale on which the process of training men was being undertaken. The ships were an extraordinary sight. I came on board the flagship at 5 a. m. on a glorious June morning. It looked as if 500 men had been sleeping on the deck of every dreadnought. Literally I believe the bulk of the ships carried double complement, and the whole of each working day seemed to be some continuous effort, wonderfully strenuous, still more wonderfully cheerful, to teach the newcomers the accomplishments of their older messmates. It was to the battleships that the men from the camps were sent, and from the battleships that the yacht, transport and patrol crews were chosen.

The imagination reels a little at contemplating what all this work must have meant to the comparatively small number of regular officers on whom the sole responsibility for it fell. For these, in addition to turning out 170,000 seamen, had also to do their share in creating more than 10,000 midshipmen ensigns and lieutenants.

The Horny Handed Today.

From the Brooklyn Eagle.

Secretary of Commerce Redfield has blisters on his hands due to handling the shears in his Washington war garden. Secretary Redfield is doing the work of two years Redfield is doing the work of two men he has released to work on shipbuilding. That is the sort of leade ship that counts. Critics of the administration who cannot show an accumulating horny handedness are shooting wide of the target. A cabinet officer with a squirt gun full of arsenate of lead or bordo load is a dangerous man for a desk authority to tackle. Jean Francois Millet's "The Angelus" and "The Gatherer of Beans," corrected to show highbrows active with the hoe and in the fields, might profitably engage the time and attention of our artist lovers.

Others Wish to Know.

From the Milwaukee Journal.

The New York Evening Mail, the old time standpat republican paper of which we have heard so many stories, is telling its party that the old tariff stuff has played out and that the farmers now need attention. And now, as if that even were not enough, it starts another campaign against its party leaders. It accuses republicans in the Senate of being blind to opportunity. It asks leaders of the party why they did not get ahead of the president in his recent demand for new tax legislation. It asks them why they have insisted on party division, until now the whole country in arms has forced them to consider only the interests of country. It asks them why they have let the president a democrat, get ahead of them in suggesting all the important legislative matters. It asks these questions and more.

What can the republican leaders answer? It looks as though the Mail had them stumped. At the same time, Champ Clark's exhibition of partisanship gives the democratic organs something to explain.

"The Pride of Race."

Col. G. C. Nasmith, in "On the Fringe of the Great Fight."

Striking across the fields towards us came a dog, bent on one purpose, to put as great distance as possible between himself and the Germans. He had been gassed, and had evidently been the first to get out of the trenches. Loping along at a gait that he could, if necessary, maintain for hours, he fled by with his tail between his legs, tongue hanging out, and ears well back. Then came a sight that we could scarcely credit. Across the fields, coming towards us, we saw men running, dropping flat on their faces, getting up and running again. As they came closer we could see that they were French-Moroccan troops, and evidently badly scared, some of them even threw away their equipment after they had passed, and they all looked at us with the same expression that the dog had, evidently considering us to be madmen to stay where we were. * * * Then our hearts swelled with pride that comes but seldom in a man's life—the pride of race. Up the road from Ypres came a platoon of soldiers marching rapidly: they were Canadians, and we knew that our reserve brigade was even now on the way to make the attempt to block the German road to Calais.

Women Adopt Bees.

From the New York Times.

Bee raising to increase the stock of honey is one of the latest forms of war work for women. One of the most practical ideas for bee raising is being developed by the school for horticulture for women at Ambler, Penn., 18 miles out of Philadelphia. It is the school's war work, and it invites men, women and children to join with it and 'keep a bee.' With all the ideas which have been advanced for farming in flats and on roofs and in all sorts of impractical places, this of the Ambler school seems to be the only one which will enable the flat dweller to do something really successful. You raise your own honey for your own table, but you do it vicariously. The school keeps your bees, they are cared for by an expert, and you supply the bees or the money equivalent. It is a community bee club, and it is hoped at the school that many such clubs will be started in different parts of the country.

Agricultural stations, especially for the education of orphans and abandoned children, will be established by the government of Brazil.

THE ETERNAL MOTHER.

From the New York Tribune.

Strange things happen even in the prosaic depths of the subway. Once in a while the curtain of convention draws away and for an instant one looks deep into life itself before the jealous curtain falls again.

He was a private of artillery. His boyish face held lines of weariness, and as he slumped down into a corner seat of the car his red corded hat fell off, revealing that his hair was yellow and curly. He did not stoop to pick it up, for he fell asleep almost as soon as he hit the seat.

Few noticed the gray haired woman who sat opposite, watching him. She was gaunt and shabby. One wondered what she was doing abroad at that early morning hour. She never took her eyes off the sleeping lad. Presently she arose to leave as the train jolted into a station.

As she passed the boy she bent, lifted the battered campaign hat, laid it on his lap and then kissed him softly on his tumbled yellow hair. He did not stir and she almost ran from the car. The curtain that had lifted for a brief moment fell again and at least one sat watching the sprawled figure of the soldier, wondering.

ENDED SHOW FOR THAT NIGHT

Midget Performers Scented Danger When They Heard the Ringing of Police Patrol Gong.

Two little colored lads from News alley were giving a concert a la carte before a Washington hotel. The crowd which gathered was larger than any that ever regarded a soapbox orator. The boys sang, the dimes flew, they paused, and sang and danced some more. The two kids wove in witty lines as they went, and really made the thing a vaudeville act. But finally they decided it was about time for an intermission.

"We're goin' away," announced the larger, who was perhaps eight years old.

"Aw, don't do that," admonished the crowd.

"You didn't treat us right; that's all."

Dimes flew again. The boys started to sing. They saw that their audience was growing to a capacity crowd. But they started up on the last tune.

Somewhere out on the East side some one had had an argument, or else an automobile had tipped over, for an ambulance was hurrying back to the city hospital clanging its bell.

The performers heard it. Up looked the youngest.

"Um, police!" he yelled to his little partner, and the two of them scurried as quick as lightning down the nearest alley. The crowd went on to its movies.—Indianapolis News.

The Worm Turned.

A Richmond (Va.) man who motored down to the resort where his wife and baby were spending the summer was called on to help prepare the morning meal of his son and heir. He proved a little unskilled in removing the top of the can that was handed him, and his wife became scornful and impatient.

"I do wish I had married a man!" she said, with fine sarcasm.

"And I do wish I had married a woman," he grunted. "Then I would not have had to bother with these artificial breakfast foods."

DOCTOR URGED AN OPERATION

Instead I took Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and Was Cured.

Baltimore, Md.—"Nearly four years I suffered from organic troubles, nervousness and headaches and every month would have to stay in bed most of the time. Treatments would relieve me for a time but my doctor was always urging me to have an operation. My sister asked me to try Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound before consenting to an operation. I took five bottles of it and it has completely cured me and my work is a pleasure. I tell all my friends who have any trouble of this kind what Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has done for me."—NELLIE B. BRITTINGHAM, 609 Calverton Rd., Baltimore, Md.

It is only natural for any woman to dread the thought of an operation. So many women have been restored to health by this famous remedy, Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, after an operation has been advised that it will pay any woman who suffers from such ailments to consider trying it before submitting to such a trying ordeal.

Conscripting Cub Bears.

In response to appeals received from men of various units of the army throughout the West, United States forest rangers under the local office at Livingston, Mont., have been requested to obtain cub bears for use as company mascots. There is considerable rivalry among rangers to see who will be the first to conscript a young bear.

Cold Drinks Bad for Your Stomach

How to Avoid the Digestive Miseries That Hot Weather Brings

Cold drinks in hot weather are bad enough for any stomach but doubly so, in fact, dangerous—when the stomach is out of fix and you suffer from indigestion, acidity, food-repeating, heartburn, sour stomach, and that awful puffed-up, bloated condition after eating. In fact, all stomach and bowel miseries are greatly aggravated in hot weather. You can't be too careful. Sunstroke can be traced in many cases to poor digestion. Everyone should watch their stomach in hot weather.

Keep it sweet and cool. Here is an easy and pleasant way to correct stomach ills. A compound has been discovered which surely takes up the harmful juices and gases from the stomach, leaving it sweet, clean, cool and comfortable. You won't know you have a stomach if you take one or two EATONIC tablets after your meal, so light and pain-free you will feel.

There is not a harmful thing in EATONIC tablets. They taste fine! Just like eating candy. Druggists will tell you that EATONIC users say they never dreamed anything could give such quick and wonderful results; you can insure yourself a good, cool, sweet stomach, you can eat what you like, and always have the appetite to eat it.

EATONIC is absolutely guaranteed. Get a box from your druggist today. Use it to get rid of and prevent the stomach and bowel troubles that are bound to come in hot weather. If EATONIC fails, return to your druggist and get your fifty cents back. If you cannot obtain EATONIC where you live drop a card to Eatonic Remedy Co., Chicago, Ill. They will mail you a box at once.

Where in Western Canada you can buy at from $15 to $30 per acre good farm land that will raise 20 to 45 bushels to the acre of $2 wheat — it's easy to figure the profits. Dr. Schultz, of Garner, will be at Klemme Hotel Monday, Wednesday, and Friday morning, from 8:30 to 12:00 o'clock, to give Osteopathic treatments to those who desire them.

The troop train passed through Klemme Wednesday morning at about 7:30 bound for Camp Pike, via. St Louis There were about 400 men on the train and more to be picked up at each county seat along the line.

A drafted man by the name of Ralph Dorow missed the troop train Wednesday morning at Garner by a few minutes and went htrough Klemme on the noon train. He said he thought he might catch up with the boys at St Louis.

Practically all of the business men of Klemme have been putting in a little time the past week helping out the farmers with their grain. Ye Editor, and Joe Miller helped Herb Bailey with his oats Saturday. We will say it was "some hot" but we managed to do pretty well for "green horns" and won a few kind words of praise from Herb.

We guess the fishing season is over this year as none of the local nimrods have reported any catches for some time Even Ye Editor has put away his rod and reel for the season

There was a big delegation of Klemmeites at the celebration at Garner Tuesday in honor of the drafted men There were people from every town in the county and hundreds of autos were parked all over the town There were street sports for the men, a ball game, band concerts by the Ladies' Band of Britt and the Garner Band assisted by other band members In the evening there was a dance and picture show. Despite the rain every one reports a good time

The quietness of the city peace was somewhat jarred Wednesday noon when W. C. Smith's team ran away with a wagon load of coal Henry Medaus was driving the team and was getting a load of coal at Lau's coal yard when the team became frightened when the noon train pulled in. Prehistoric English Quarry.

A prehistoric quarry, believed to have belonged to the ancient Britons, was recently unearthed by accident at Gaping Hills, Hitchin, Hereford, England. A plow horse was walking along a deep furrow in a field when he stepped into a circular hole about two feet in diameter. Two flint implements were found, such as were used in ancient quarries.

FLASHLIGHTS

No matter how sweet her disposition may be, any homely girl can tell you that sweet dispositions do not seem to be what the men are looking for nowadays.

Father can't hang so much of his clothing on his hook in the closet but what mother can always find room to hang a few of her skirts on it.

The easiest way to get along in this world is to make up your mind to get along without the things you can get along without.

Novel Outdoor Elevator.

A curious example of elevator construction as seen at the courthouse in Los Angeles, Cal., where, owing to the architectural design of the building and its location on a hill, the elevator is placed outside the walls, is described in Popular Mechanics Magazine. One of the streets on which the building fronts is two stories lower than the courthouse, and the elevator shaft runs down to the level of the street, access from which is gained by means of a tunnel beneath the courthouse lawn.

The shaft is of steel construction, with a circular front and ornamental ironwork at each floor. The design would not be practical in any but a mild climate, and the elevator is said to be the only one of its kind. It serves four stories above the higher street.

Too Much.

Food Dictator Hoover said at a Washington reception:

"We musn't have too many food rules. They're a good thing in moderation, but too much of the best of things is bad. A war profiteer visited a sculptor's and said:

"'What's the very finest statue in the universe?'

"'The Venus de Medici, undoubtedly,' the sculptor answered.

"'Well, put me down for five dozen Venus de Medicis, then,' said the millionaire. 'I want 'em to trim up the front lawn of that there 80-room marble cottage I'm buildin' in Newport.'"

Save Darning.

Archaeology at Rome.

If one stops to think of it one wonders whether, even at a time when the world seems intent only on war, the astronomer in his watch tower of the skies ever allows his thoughts even temporarily to be drawn away from the wonders of the universe that it is his privilege nightly to behold. However it may be with the astronomer, recently reports of excavations in Rome show that the archaeologist has not been diverted from his loved pursuit and that to him "the grandeur that was Rome" still fills his imaginations and dreams.

As shown in a recent letter in the London Times by Eugenie Strong, assistant director, faculty of archaeology, history and letters, in the British school at Rome, archaeological research has been going steadily on in Rome even during the great war, although the work done has been in following up excavations already begun rather than making fresh excavations.

Candy Flowers Newest Love Gift.

The lovesick swain may find an excellent means of expressing his affections in a pretty little gift which combines the sentiment of a bouquet with the practical utility of confectionery. The happy combination is the thought of a Chicago woman, who has assigned her patent rights to a firm of that city, which has already turned out some very attractive "bouquets" of sweetmeats. The sweetmeats are molded in the forms of various flowers which lend themselves to the purpose, and these are wrapped in suitable colored papers, and when arranged in a group they resemble a beautiful floral composition. After admiring them for a while the candies may be stripped of their paper covering and eaten.

Ocean Furnishes New Food.

Intelligent commercial development of a little-known fish for other markets is shown in a new Japanese product, kipper samma. This fish is described by the Pacific Fisherman as a mackerel-pike, and is peculiar to the waters of Japan. A Japanese packing company conceived the idea of putting it up in cans, in kippered or smoked form, and the quality is pronounced so good by experts that it is believed a market can be created in this country.

Iowa—Grow Sorghum and Save Sugar

By A. T. ERWIN, Professor at Ames College.

Our country and our allies are facing a serious sugar shortage. Iowa can help meet the situation by growing sorghum for sirup making. A small amount of cane grown on each farm would greatly lessen the demands for sugar by providing a substitute.

There are numerous city dwellers interested in the "grow-an-acre" campaign who may also well give consideration to this crop. The first step is to ascertain if a mill is available. A survey of the state has been made and the county agent can give information regarding the location of the nearest mill and as to seed supply.

The sorghum industry was at one time an important one in this state, but with the advent of corn sirup at a low price, the production of sorghum sirup waned decidedly.

The sugar in sorghum is principally cane sugar while the sugar in corn sirup is glucose.

It is well-known that cane sugar is much superior to glucose in sweetening qualities. According to Hoover the comparative sweetness of corn sirup and sorghum at the same density is in the ratio of approximately 7 to 10 in favor of sorghum.

A yield of from 100 to 150 gallons per acre is not uncommon, and at present prices sorghum is a profitable as well as a much-needed crop in Iowa.

A clay loam or sandy loam produces excellent quality of sirup and of a lighter color. On heavy bottom lands the yields are excellent, but the sirup is not of the best quality.

Like the beet, sorghum is distinctly a hot-weather crop, and should not be planted until the soil becomes thoroughly warmed. The last half of May is a good time for planting for sirup in Iowa.

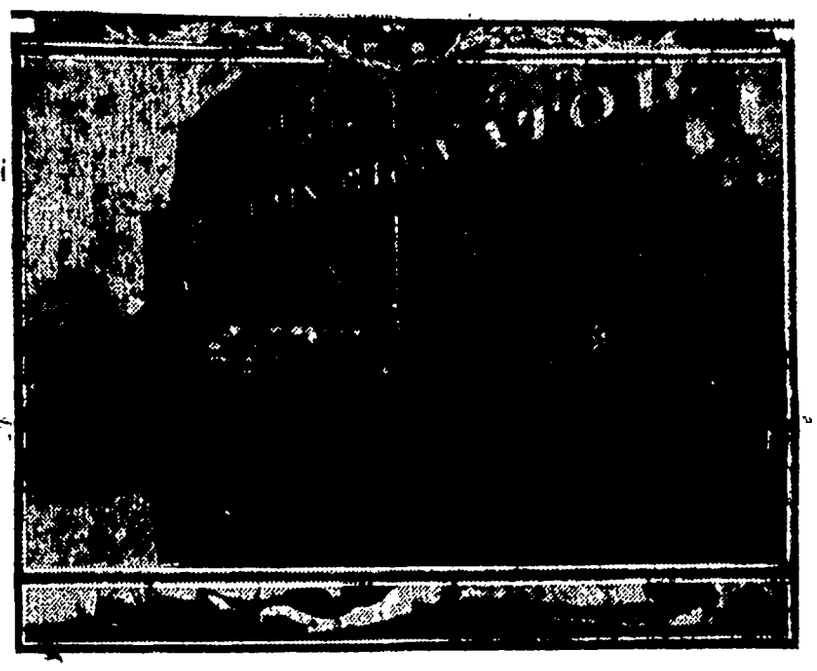
Planting.

Plant one inch deep and four inches apart in a firm garden fine seed bed. On thinner soils give a six-to-eight-inch spacing. The rows are the same width as for corn. A hand drill or a corn planter with special plates may be used. In case of a large acreage it is well to spread the planting over a period of two to three weeks in order to allow more time for harvesting.

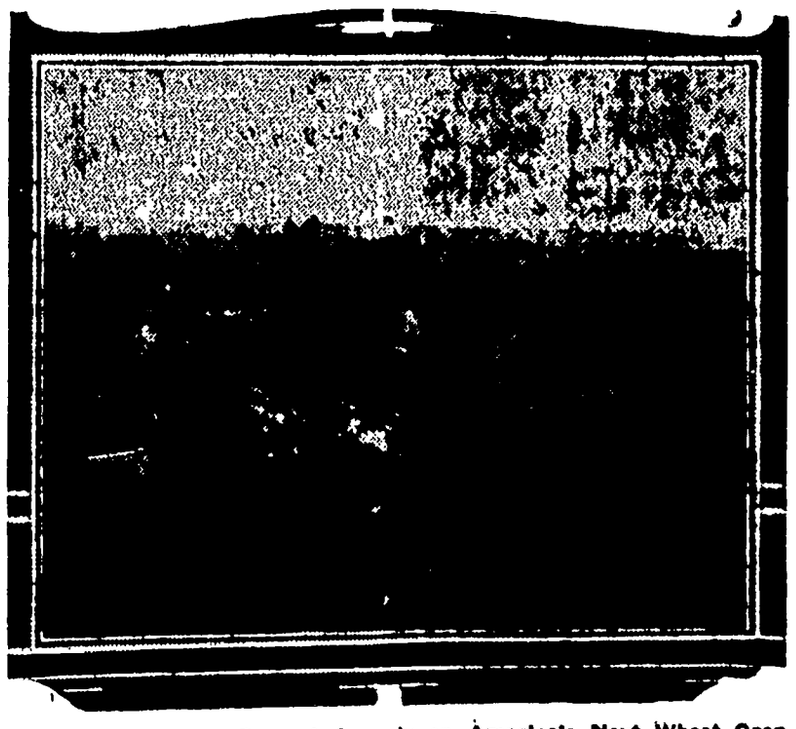
Two pounds of seed per acre is ample. Avoid seed mixed with non-saccharine varieties. The State Agricultural college is getting a carload of seed. It costs 25 to 50 cents a pound, only.

Cultivation.

The plant is rather slow in starting. The cheapest way to fight the weeds is by killing them before planting. Get the ground ready ahead of time and allow the weed seeds to germinate. Then harrow just before planting. Do not allow the weeds to smother the young plants. Usually one hand weeding and thinning are required. Cultivate as for any garden crop.



Loading Wheat at an Atlantic Port for the Allies.



Success in This War Depends Largely on America's Next Wheat Crop.

WOMEN HAVE HOARDING HABIT

It Is Always Hard for Them to Part With Useless Things Which They Couldn't Give Away.

"Every time I think of the way our American troops are slipping away from our shores and landing unexpectedly 'somewhere in France' I realize more and more how very differently men manage things, after all," remarked the impatient woman, according to the Detroit Free Press.

"Just imagine trying to send a contingent of women abroad in such fashion. Why, even the nurses who are leaving us are expected to go prepared with clothing and supplies enough to last them two years, and yet the men can go with small provision for their needs and not be a bit bothered at it, either.

"A chap I know rushed in to say good-by to me as he was leaving for a training camp and he was able to settle all his business in a few hours and all he had to do at his rooming place was pack his clothes in a suitcase and move out in an hour's time.

"And think how long it would take either one of us to dispose of our second-hand belongings and rid our wardrobes of the unessentials we've left hanging in the forlorn hope that the styles will bring them back again sometime before the moths dispose of them for us.

"And we women are always cluttering up a place with keepsakes that we'd hate like the mischief to throw away and we couldn't give them away for love nor money, either."

Hard Paper Products.

Many containers, and other articles, formerly made exclusively of wood, tinplate, vulcanized rubber and metal or fibrous materials, can now be made of paper, at lower cost and equally serviceable, by means of special machinery which winds paper with an adhesive on one side into tubes or barrels in an infinite variety of sizes and shapes, says Popular Mechanics Magazine. The times being especially opportune for such substitutes, hard paper products may soon replace wood for shipping packages, large and small; also for machine accessories such as split pulleys, harvester rolls, tool and other handles, and many purposes in the electrical industry.

Never Despair.

Never despair, but if you do, work on in despair.—Burke.

ORDER

STATE FUEL ADMINISTRATION FOR IOWA

Anthracite Coal will be apportioned to the dealers in Iowa on and north of the main line of the Illinois Central from Dubuque to Sioux City, on the basis of 80 per cent of the Anthracite shipments received by them during the 12 month period from April 1, 1916 to March 31, 1917, inclusive, in so far as the available supplies will permit.

1Dealers will be permitted to deliver Anthracite Coal only to former users of Anthracite Coal, and in so far as practicable, they are requested to confine their business to their former customers. This will of necessity however, vary somewhat, due to new customers moving into the neighborhood; new houses which have been built since last season; and other customers moving out of the neighborhood.

Owing to this restriction of Anthracite tonnage, and the probable delay in shipments, due to the demand in the Atlantic and New England states, which of necessity, must be largely supplied before shipments will move freely to the Central and Northwestern states, you should urge all consumers who are in position to use Bituminous coal to stock up with it as soon as possible.

No person, firm, association or corporation, whether acting alone or in conjunction with others, shall, directly or indirectly provide any domestic consumers of coal with more Anthracite before March 31, 1919, than is necessary, with the amount already on hand to meet the actual and necessary requirements of such a consumer prior to that date, but, in no event shall any consumer receive more than 80 per cent of the Anthracite used during the 12 months ending March 31, 1917.

On and after July 15, 1918, no person, firm, association or corporation shall sell or deliver Anthracite Coal to a consumer who does not first furnish to the person selling or delivering such Anthracite Coal, a signed statement similar to the attached order form. These order forms must be kept on file for inspection. They may be printed on your own order blanks or otherwise, as you see fit. The enclosed sample can be given to your printer.

Dealers are not permitted to make deliveries in excess of 80 per cent of the tonnage used by the consumer during the 12 month period ending March 31, 1917, except where the total requirements of the community do not exceed one minimum carload. In all other communities where the consumption of Anthracite for the above period was two cars or more, no deliveries shall be made in excess of 80 per cent of the tonnage used by the consumer during the 12 months ending March 31, 1917. Such deliveries shall be further restricted as follows:

Consumers whose usual requirements are from three to five tons, must not receive more than two tons, until proportionate deliveries have been made on all orders booked.

Consumers whose usual requirements are from five tons or more, must not receive more than 40 per cent until proportionate deliveries have been made on all orders booked.

No delivery shall be made to a consumer who has an order entered or booked with some other dealer, until all deliveries as above provided, have been made.

After deliveries have been made on all orders booked, as above provided, a second delivery may be made, to a total not exceeding 60 per cent of the tonnage used during the 12 months ending March 31, 1917.

Upon completion of the second delivery, further deliveries may be made as required, not exceeding the total 80 per cent permitted tonnage.

Except in emergency cases, all deliveries shall be made in rotation that the orders are received or booked.

Please note particularly that no deliveries shall be made without a signed order, as herein provided.

Any dealer or consumer who violates the foregoing regulations, will be subject to the penalties prescribed by the Lever Act.

Yours very truly,
Charles Webster,
U. S. Fuel Administrator for Iowa

FREEDOM IN SIGHT

Poland Now Has Opportunity to Strike Off Her Shackles.

War in Which the United States Is Engaged Against the Hohenzollern Plotters Offers Chance to Unfortunate Race.

Every Pole, and there are many thousands of Americans of Polish descent, knows Prussia is the hereditary enemy of Poland. Ever since the tenth century, when the Polish king, Boleslas, known as the Brave, was forced to defend his territories from the brigand Borusi, or Prussians, lying to the north, that sinister power plotted the undoing of the Polish people. That ruin has been completed, as far as national life is concerned. There is no Poland today. Poland existed, at the start of this world war, only as a vague district in eastern Europe, ruled, or rather misruled, by Prussia, Austria and the Russia of the czar.

It was in the early part of the seventeenth century that Prussia united with the electorate of Brandenburg. All Prussian alliances have been for offensive purposes, and this early alliance with the Hohenzollern family marked the first determined effort by Prussia to subjugate Poland, for it was under the Hohenzollern kings of Prussia that Saxony, Bavaria, Austria and the old Russia engaged in the long series of wars and secret treaties and alliances that eventually brought about the erasement of Poland from the political map of Europe.

This murder of a state took place under Frederick the Great, the one king of Prussia who, with the exception of the present Wilhelm II., did more than any other Prussian king to embroil Europe in war to the advancement of his own country's political aims and the enlargement of its territories. Wilhelm II, direct lineal descendant of Frederick the Great, is today no more kindly disposed toward the Poles than was his crafty and unscrupulous ancestor, who arranged and completed the final dismemberment of Poland; and Wilhelm II has no more intention of giving the Poles their political and economic freedom than had Frederick the Great when he robbed them of their priceless heritage.

The United States today is engaged in a war against this line of disturbers of the peace of Europe, these Hohenzollern plotters against the liberties of free peoples. President Wilson has pledged this nation to an autonomous Poland. The thousands of Poles who sought freedom here, and found it, after centuries of oppression, have devoted their sons to the cause of democracy. They soon will have an opportunity to perform an equally splendid service toward the cause of freeing Poland from Prussian misrule. They may help in this great cause by lending their money to the United States government.

Every Liberty bond and Thrift stamp purchased by Americans of Polish descent means that the day of reckoning for the Hohenzollern family is hastened. President Wilson has said Poland must be free. The Poles here in America can help free the old home land. Their dollars can fight along with their sons who have gone to the front to wage the war of freedom.—From the Treasury Department, Bureau of Publicity.

Looking Through Axle.

The periscope, so efficient in trench and submarine warfare, now has a pacific application, according to the Popular Science Monthly. It promises to avert many accidents resulting from defective locomotive axles. The axle is bored longitudinally, the size of the bore being ample to permit insertion of the periscope, which is about 40 inches long and 1⅛ inches in diameter. At one end is a magnifying mirror upon which a light is thrown from the handle. Looking through the periscope, inspectors obtain a clear view of every part of the axle and are enabled to detect the flaws in the steel.

Plea for Present-Day Authors.

In his "Books and Persons," Arnold Bennett says: "In the innermost Strand, where there are 40 tobacconists, 39 restaurants, half a dozen theaters, 17 necktie shops, there are only two establishments for the sale of new books. We travel for days and never see a single bookshop. Of course there are Frenchish and self-improving young persons who buy cheap editions of the classics, which the world will not willingly let die, but I am anxious to meet the man who will not willingly let die the author who is not yet dead."

Irish Stay at Home.

During the nine months ended September, 1917, there were only 1,650 emigrants from Ireland, a decrease of 3,831 from the corresponding period in 1916. The emigrants in 1917 went to the following countries: England and Wales, 788; Scotland, 705; United States, 83; Canada, 40; South Africa, 12; Australia, 12; New Zealand, 9, and other countries, 1. Emigration to the United States, as compared with the first nine months of 1916, shows a decrease of 2,932.

THE KLEMME TIMES

RAY A. JORGENSON, PUB.

KLEMME, IOWA

It is a widely known fact among sailors that flour will not only float after immersion in sea water, but suffer very little damage. To ascertain the actual damage a baker in New South Wales submerged a bag of flour in the ocean and left it in the water 57 hours. A 98 pound weight was necessary to sink a 150-pound bag, which would have supported 75 pounds on top of the water, it is estimated, or half its own weight. When lifted and weighed the bag scaled 155 pounds. It was died four days and yielded 120 pounds of perfectly dry flour, the bag and waste weighing 28 pounds. Baked into bread, it gave perfect results.

To be really efficient a piece of machinery should be at some useful labor all the time, but this has not been arranged satisfactorily in the case of a fire engine. The latter is standing idle the greater part of its life, so, with the idea of overcoming this wasteful condition, the idea has been conceived of combining the fire engine and the street sprinkler. This opens up an almost constant field of operation for the apparatus. During all the time when there is no demand for its services in quenching fires, the apparatus may be engaged in the useful occupation of settling the dust on the thoroughfares in the vicinity of its station.

Through seizure of a still in a bakery in New Mexico, where a quantity of alcohol was discovered that had been distilled from bake oven fumes, there is considerable discussion as to the feasibility of manufacturing alcohol as a byproduct of bread. The seized still was a crudely constructed affair, the vapor from the bread being conducted from the oven into a worm which passed through a barrel of water for cooling. It is believed large quantities of alcohol can be manufactured for war use at small cost at army bake shops.

An economy in expensive drawing ink, ordinarily used with a ruling pen, was effected by substituting common writing ink on many kinds of work in which permanence is not a special factor, says Popular Mechanics. A convenience, in using this substitute ink in the ordinary containers, is to insert a pen point by the pointed end into the bottle cork. This provides a handy ruling pen filler, similar to the usual quill stoppers.

Then he understood.

That China is being modernized faster than most of us may think is indicated by the increased use of the telephone in that country. It also is worthy of note that although practically the whole equipment comes from abroad and is to a considerable extent operated by foreigners, the prices for service are much below those to which we are accustomed in this land of high prices.

The stage observation that "It's nice to get up in the morning, but it's nicer to lie in bed," is no longer a shameful confession of laziness. The British minister of munitions investigating the health and efficiency of its workers found that too early rising is harmful.

SICK HOGS ARE ALLOWED TO WANDER

Waterloo, Ia., July 25.—No solution has been reached of how stray diseased hogs came to be on several farms in Tama county, although efforts have been made by federal authorities to solve the mystery.

CUMMINS ADVISES PRIMARY CHANGE

Des Moines, Ia., July 24.—Senator Albert B. Cummins is in favor of the radical amendment of the Iowa primary election law. During his recent visit at Des Moines the senior senator confided to friends at the statehouse his belief that the law had developed deficiencies and weaknesses that must be corrected. In his opinion these weaknesses can only be corrected by radical changes in the statutes, and he declared the most feasible solution of the problem would seem to be the amendment of the law so as to take from the voters at the statewide primary all responsibility, except that of selecting candidates for United States senator, candidates for governor, and for members of the Iowa delegation in congress. For the purpose of selecting other state candidates the senator would have the primary choose county convention delegates, whose duty it would be to select delegates to the state convention.

HUGE LINER IS SUNK BY GERMAN TORPED

London, July 25.—The White Star liner Justicia, says a Belfast dispatch today, was sunk off the north Irish coast Saturday morning last.

By Associated Press.

An Irish Port, Monday, July 23.—The giant White Star Justicia has been torpedoed and sunk. It is believed no loss of life occurred.

The Justicia formerly was the Dutch steamer Statendam, which was taken over by the British government on the stocks at Belfast when she was nearing completion. She was a vessel of 32,234 tons gross.

The Justicia carried a crew of between 600 and 700. Eleven members of the crew are dead.

ENGAGED AS TROOP SHIP.

New York, July 25.—The Justicia, reported sunk apparently somewhere off the coast of Ireland, was returning to an American port after delivering a large contingent of American troops, it was learned here.

The Justicia had a troop carrying capacity of between 7,000 and 8,000 men. Her crew numbered about 500.

The Justicia nearly approached the dimensions of the great steamship Vaterland, now in the service of the American government and being used as a troop transport. She was designed for passenger trade between New York and Rotterdam. She was 740 feet long, 86 feet beam and 43 feet deep.

SEVERAL IN ATTACK.

Berlin (via Copenhagen), July 25.—The British steamer Justicia has been torpedoed and sunk, the German admiralty officially announced today.

German newspapers express great satisfaction that the steamer was sunk while under American control.

Submarine commanders, in their official reports, stated the Justicia was equipped with large steel anti-torpedo nets, "rendering her destruction difficult."

The mention of submarine "commanders" indicates that several U-boats probably attacked the steamer.

400 REACH PORT.

An Irish Port, July 25.—Four hundred of the crew of the torpedoed liner Justicia have been landed here. They report that the liner was sunk after a 24-hour fight with submarines.

SECOND LARGEST LOST.

New York, July 25.—The Justicia with her gross tonnage of about 32,000 tons was the second largest steamship sunk during the war The British liner White Star liner of 45,000 gross tons was sunk in the Aegean sea in November, 1916.

On her last trip from an Atlantic port, the Justicia was commanded by Capt. A. E. S. Hambleton and carried nearly 10,000 troops, considerably in excess of her rated capacity, and a 15,000 ton cargo.

NO PASSENGERS LOST.

By Associated Press.

An Irish Port, July 25.—No passengers were lost and only 10 of the crew were killed on the Justicia.

The first torpedo struck the engine room and the ship then stopped. Several other torpedoes were fired, but only two of them were effective.

The story of the fight between the German submarine and the Justicia, if it could be told, would make one of the finest stories in the annals of anti-submarine warfare. Nothing which has occurred gives navy men any cause for misgivings over the submarine war. The defensive methods showed to excellent advantage and indicate that the entente naval forces can always be counted on to make the enemy pay dearly for every attempt he makes.

Correspondents Tell People Home Why Big Offensive Abandoned.

Amsterdam, July 25.—German correspondents still are sending to newspapers voluminous explanations as to why the southern bank of Marne was evacuated.

Hegeler, of the Berlin Tageblatt, explains that the capture of the heights on the south bank of the Marne is essential to provide for a flank protection for the troops advancing far east on the north bank. When this task was accomplished, and it became necessary to meet the enemy offensive, he says, there was no further objection to holding the south bank.

Baron von Der Osten, in the Rheinische Westfaelische Zeitung, admits that the "latest German offensive has come to a standstill, but only temporarily, and it reached its main objective." He says that "Hindenburg has other irons in the fire."

RUSSIA MOBILIZING ALL AVAILABLE MEN

Bolshevists Organizing All Military Forces Under Their Control.

Amsterdam, July 24.—General mobilization of all military forces under bolshevist control in Russia was begun July 17, a Moscow dispatch declared today. No reason was assigned for this, although War Minister Trotzky announced some time ago that certain classes of workmen, soldiers and peasants would be called out to "maintain internal order."

ABANDON ORENBURG.

Amsterdam, July 24.—Soviet troops have definitely abandoned Orenburg, capital of the Russian province of the same name. A new government has been formed under the leadership of General Detoff. A hunger revolution has broken out in the cities of Jaroslav, Rybinsk, Ljubin and Unglitch, according to Moscow papers received here.

PROFITEERING IS BEING UNCOVERED

Graft and Fraud In Army Contracts For Shoes and Clothing Practiced on Large Scale.

Washington, D. C., July 24.—Fraud and gross profiteering has been uncovered in many contracts for army shoes, shirts, leggings and other soldiers' supplies and equipment as a result of investigation by army intelligence and department of justice agents, it was learned today.

Information shedding light on methods by which manufacturers were able to pass inferior articles to fill government contracts is understood to have been gathered from new confessions of some of the 18 raincoat contractors under arrest in New York, charged with bribery, fraud and conspiracy.

Action will be taken against the other manufacturers as rapidly as specific proof of fraud is developed.

An outgrowth of the campaign against graft and fraud in army contracts is the discovery that some officers in the quartermaster's corps responsible for placing contracts continue illegally to receive salaries from concerns that employed them in civil life.

A large number of officers are said to have been given commissions through the influence of their former employers. It is charged that certain companies have been able through this personal contact to dictate specifications and other details of contracts favorable to their methods of manufacture.

Another reform being worked out in Washington as a result of discovery of contract frauds is the gradual elimination of men assisting the government from the nominal pay or "dollar a year" basis and the payment of adequate salaries on which they can live without resorting to compensation from special interests.

VIENNA PLANNING TRIPLE OFFENSIVE

Scheme Provides For Attacks In Trentino and Albania and Big Naval Operations.

BY HENR YWOOD.
United Press Staff Correspondent.

Rome, July 24.—Austria-Hungary is planning a triple offensive against Italy, according to dispatches received from Italian correspondents in Switzerland today.

The program includes military drives in the Venetian region of the Italian front, and in Albania together with a naval offensive along the Adriatic coast.

Simultaneously, Austrian aviators are to bomb Italian cities back of the lines and attempt to regain the ascendancy on both the Italian and Albian fronts.

According to reports, Austria-Hungary is openly counting on German aid despite the fact General von Below's tentative appointment as commander in chief of the Austrian armies was recalled following strenuous objection by the Austro-Hungarian high command.

The presence of British and American forces on the Italian front, together with the overwhelming defeat of the recent Austrian drive has given the Italian military officials the greatest confidence in their ability to withstand any Austro-German blow that may fall.

In Albania the present drive of the French and Italians has given them a choice of position that will be a great handicap to the enemy. It is doubted that very strong Geraman forces can be spared from other fronts for this theater, and transportation problems would be most difficult for the enemy to overcome.

As for an Austrian naval offensive a comparison of the morale of the two fleets can be seen in the recent Italian exploits at Pola and off the Dalmatian coast, when three of Austria's greatest warships were destroyed by tiny Italian motor boats.

To win advantage in the air Austria must overcome a combined force of Italian, British, French and American aviators.

CREW OF SUB VICTIM REACH SHORE SAFELY

Portland, Me., July 24.—All those on the Gloucester fishing schooner Robert and Richard, sunk by a German submarine off the Maine coast Monday, had been accounted for today. There were 23 persons on the vessel. Three men were landed at Kennebunk port and 11 at this port last night. Four more were brought in here today and four men and a boy were picked up at sea and taken to Boston.

Iron Hands; Red Omens.

Chester Wright, in the New York Tribune.

The funniest thing in my memory of Britain is an Irish jaunting car driver that I met in Dublin. On a bright Sunday morning I asked him to drive me around to see Dublin's poorest section. He did. You could almost put Dublin's poverty into a block of New York's east side and lose it. Then we went jaunting around town to see what we might see. Meanwhile the cabby ruminated and radiated. "See that building? That's where Jim Larkin used to have his headquarters. Sure an' Dublin never had a day's luck since that man came to town. Bad luck to him!"

We crossed the Liffey. "An' this is the river Liffey," he drawled. "It usen' to be so classic. It's that clean they'll be catchin' salmon in the Liffey wan o' these days."

Billows of hawthorn blooms decked a beautiful square. "Just look at them," mused cabby. "The hawthorns are all red this year. They've been white always before. But they're blood red this year. Sure it's an omen. I don't know of what but it's an omen for sure."

He drew long and hard on the "o"—"sure it's an o-m-e-n somethin'."

Fiction, poetry, dreaminess, o' clothes and a jaunting car.

* * *

Iron hands have figured a great deal in fiction but not much in fact until now. But no—iron hand is a fact—and a good, d—dable fact.

There's a big hospital within a half hour's motor ride from the heart of London where they rebuild soldiers and start them on their reeducation. To go through that place is worth a much longer trip.

Men have arms and legs shot away and still carry on about as usual after going through this reconstruction place.

We saw a man swing a cricket bat with an artificial arm, and swing it with the snap and precision of an expert. Much more practical, we saw the same man drive nails, wield a shovel and pickax and a maul. In a jiffy he could hook onto the wrist of his artificial arm an appliance for the handling of any kind of a tool. He had accuracy, speed and dexterity—all with an artificial arm.

"Guess which leg is artificial," said the doctor, as he called a wounded infantryman. Some guessed one, some the other. He walked with such naturalness that either guess seemed as likely to be wrong. "Both are artificial," said the doctor, to our amazement.

Another soldier with one artificial leg hopped up and did funny little jogs and capers on horizontal bars. Few men with two good legs could skip around with as much agility. The same man did a running jump off a wet and slippery platform onto muddy, treacherous ground. He landed with sureness. He wasn't afraid of that leg going wrong anywhere.

I never see a one-legged man now without thinking how unnecessary it is for men to go around crippled up that way. The day is coming when every man will have two serviceable legs, no matter how many of the originals he may have lost. The war has shown the way.

One Railway System.

From the Outlook.

The administration of the country's railways by the government is still in a formative state. Uncle Sam went into the railway business in a hurry. Overnight, so to speak, he found himself general manager of scores of railways and faced by a complex maze of problems—financial, industrial, economic and even social. It is too early to take stock of the results in a large way, yet already it appears that unity in control has its advantages. Efficiency and enocomy of operation are naturally possible when it practically makes no difference whether troops or passengers or goods go by one route or another, travel in one company's cars or another, or are drawn by engines owned by this company or that company (or, as in some cases, by Uncle Sam personally)—no difference, that is, so long as the work gets done in the best way, the quickest way, and the cheapest way.

Two documents just published furnish, the one a declaration of principles, the other a record of accomplishment.

In leaving his work for a short rest—and certainly no soldier of industry and finance ever more deserved a rest—Secretary McAdoo, as director general of railways, made an admirable declaration of the purposes which should be borne in mind in all the work of administration. These are, says Mr McAdoo:

> First, the winning of the war, which includes the prompt movement of men and material that the government requires. To this everything else must be subordinated.
>
> Second, the service of the public, which is the purpose for which the railways were built and given the privileges accorded them. This implies the maintenance and improvement of the railroad properties so that adequate transportation facilities will be provided at the lowest cost, the object of the government being to furnish service rather than to make money.
>
> Third, the promotion of a spirit of sympathy and a better understanding as between the administration of the railways and their 2,000,000 employes, as well as their 100,000,000 patrons, which latter class includes every individual in the nation, since transportation has become a prime and universal necessity of civilized existence.
>
> Fourth, the application of sound economies.

Taking up under the last head the things requisite to carry out its intent, the following simple but fundamental classification is made:

> (a) The elimination of superfluous expenditures.
>
> (b) The payment of a fair and living wage for the services rendered, and a just and prompt compensation for injuries received.
>
> (c) The purchase of material and equipment at the lowest prices consistent with a reasonable but not an excessive profit to the producer.
>
> (d) The adoption of standardized equipment and the introduction of approved devices that will save life and labor.
>
> (e) The routing of freight and passenger traffic with due regard to the fact that a straight line is the shortest distance between two points.
>
> (f) The intensive employment of all equipment and a careful record and scientific study of the results obtained with a view to determining the comparative efficiency secured.

The director general recognizes the vastness of his task, but hopes that some progress has been made toward the goal. That he is justified is shown by the second of the documents to which we have referred.

Better Coal This Year.

E. L. Cole, in Philadelphia Public Ledger.

Prior to the world war the capacity of the bituminous and anthracite mines in the United States to produce fuel was so much in excess of the demand that competition was an ample and certain factor in assuring the marketing of coal containing only a minimum of impurities.

With the steadily increasing demand for fuel, caused by the rapid development of war industries, there was a noticeable increase of the amount of impurities in anthracite and bituminous during the winter months of 1917.

Dr. Harry A. Garfield, national fuel administrator, assigned James Neale, of his staff, to assist the Pennsylvania administration in providing and applying remedial measures in the anthracite fields. Mr. Neale conferred with William Potter, state fuel administrator for Pennsylvania. With the aid of three gentlemen, who are the fuel chairmen in Luzerne, Lackawanna and Schuykill counties, an investigation was carried on into the amount of impurities being shipped to market. The fuel administration then formulated rulings limiting the percentage of slate, bone and under sizes that would be permitted by the government in all sizes of anthracite.

Because of the tremendous demand for anthracite, it was thought wise not to limit the amount of impurities to the minimum of the pre-war standards. The schedule adopted, therefore, is slightly in excess of the amount of impurities shipped by the best anthracite producers in 1915. However, not one complaint has been received by the fuel administration about the quality of anthracite delivered when it conformed to the administration's standard.

Any steam anthracite containing more than 30 per cent of slate or bone is too expensive for the manufacturer to purchase today, according to observation. All steam coal containing more than 30 per cent of impurities is condemned when it comes under the observation of the fuel administration. This is so even when it is found at destination points in Pennsylvania.

Operators who deliver coal containing excessive amounts of impurities have been subjected to various penalties. Some cars were ordered hauled to the dumping grounds in Philadelphia; others were donated to hospitals and other nonprofit making institutions. A few cars were delivered to churches. Many cars en route to market were diverted back to the mines. In all cases the producing companies were compelled to pay the freight and other charges and donate the coal. This action by the state fuel administrator had a tremendous moral effect upon the producers and strengthened the arms of the federal inspectors at the mines, because publicity was given each case.

CRIMEAN WAR VET MAKES LONG JOURNEY

London, (by mail).—E. N. Radford, although more than 89 years old, has just completed for the 48th time, his annual walk from Bristol to London, with the object, he says, of teaching the people of England "common sense in regard to meat and drink." At the conclusion of the long walk, every year, he delivers a lecture in Hyde Park, finding for his text a passage from the first chapter of Daniel.

"Let them give us pulse to eat and water to drink. And their countenance waxed fairer and fatter in flesh than all the children which did eat the portion of the king's meat. And in all matters of wisdom and understanding that the king inquired of them, he found them 10 times better than all the magicians and astrologers that were in all his realm."

Mr. Radford is a veteran of the Crimean war, and in his speech he always recalls the march of his old regiment from Portsmouth to London to attend the funeral of the Iron Duke in 1852.

"I was then, as I am now, a teetotaler and non-smoker," he says. "Therefore I am able to walk and talk, and tell people how to be happy without drinks. My annual walk of 200 miles is just a pleasure jaunt. After it is over, I always take another walk up into Wiltshire and spend the next four months working on a farm."

A Pussy-Footer.

From London Answers.

Little Joey Jesso was entertaining his sister's nervous admirer, and, after making the usual juvenile remarks on marbles and tops, he suddenly announced:

"Ethel told ma yesterday you was born politician."

The young man was delighted and wishing to know more asked:

"That so? Why does she think that?"

"That's just what ma wanted to know and Ethel said it's because you can do so much talking without committin' yourself."

Timely Rescue Cheated Sharks Out of a Breakfast on Airman

From the Minneapolis Tribune.

The two men on the wrecked hydroplane, straining their eyes through the dawn, saw, instead of a rescuing sail, a triangular fin in silhouette against the red disk of the rising sun. Quickly other triangular fins appeared until the quivering path of the sun was specked by the ominous shapes.

The fins disappeared, reappeared, and then began to slice through the waters toward the sun. They looked at one another.

"Sharks," exclaimed one—and smiled.

The other also smiled.

"Yes. The sharks seem to smell a good meal," he added.

The men were Walter P. Clark, a chief electrician of the United States navy, and Frank W. Riley, an ensign of the United States naval service. They had left their base on the Florida coast to scout for submarines. In a few hours engine trouble forced them to descend.

Drank Water in Radiator.

Two days had they worked trying to start the engine. It was in vain. Meanwhile they had eaten their scanty stock of provisions. After the drinking water was gone, they drank the greasy water in the engine radiator.

This supply was nearly gone now. Even worse, the pontoons of the plane showed a tendancy to sink deeper and deeper. Nevertheless, with the optimism of youth they continued to hope. Surely, they thought, a passing ship would rescue them.

With this hope they occasionally waved their shirts whenever they saw the faintest semblance of a sail. The "sail" would dissolve into a cloud.

However, the day before the sharks came, a vessel did appear, but only to sail away as rapidly as possible. Likely the hydroplane was mistaken for a camouflaged submarine.

It Was Sunday.

The night following they had used up their stock of emergency distress rockets. So they used their shirts as signals as the morning grew, in the hope of attracting attention.

The sun rose higher and higher. In a few hours, they told one another, church bells would be ringing in their home towns. It was Sunday. Very soon their friends and neighbors would be peacefully going to church. Perhaps in a stone, ivy covered church, a friend or relative would be reciting the prayer.

"For the safety of sailors at sea," while they——

A sudden lunge and a gleam of white, a glimpse of an ugly, slit-like mouth brought them back to their immediate surroundings.

"They're getting hungry," said one of the men.

"So am I," replied his companion with a laugh. Then he looked once more across the waters, shouted and began to wave his shirt frantically. On the horizon, miles away, was an object like a sharpened pencil stub below a blur of smoke. The men's hearts leaped. The "pencil stub" appeared to be coming toward them. It really was approaching. Soon the outlines of the hull and rigging developed. The signaling was renewed.

The ship came so close that the men on the hydroplane could almost discern outlines of human beings on the deck. Nearer and nearer came the vessel and then it began to slow down. The men shouted for joy. Then their hearts sank. The ship veered and started to go in the opposite direction.

"Thinks we're a sub," muttered Clark.

Vessel Changes Course.

Riley's face was set. He said nothing.

Suddenly both men shouted again. The ship changed its course and came toward them.

Hope once more bounded up. The vessel came so close that the railing on the bridge on which the captain peered through a telescope was plainly visible. In a monument or two a boat put over the side.

Rescue followed.

On board the ship the captain confirmed their theory that he had suspected the wreckage to be a submarine disguised, but a careful inspection through a powerful glass corrected the impression.

The captain took Riley and Clark to Baltimore. There their first act was to notify their commander of their arrival. Next, they began to prepare to hunt submarines again.

John J. Pershing As the Leader of Fighting Men

Americans who accompanied General Pershing to Mexico, in various civilian capacities, never tire of talking of the little sidelights on the character of the general commanding the American forces in France, as shown to them while he was in the desert of Western Chihuahua.

"I saw a better character sketch of General Pershing than any of the writers can picture," said one El Paso cattleman. "He squatted in front of a campfire at San Geronimo, frying his hard tack in the bacon grease of his mess pan, with the wind blowing sand into his face and food, and the general grinning good and naturally all the time as one of our cowpuncher scouts spun a yarn about a buffalo hunt he was on in the Little Canadian up in the Panhandle."

These men tell many incidents of General Pershing's stay on the border and in Mexico as illustrations of his regard for his men and for the service.

On an inspection trip from Namiquipa to Colonia Dublan he saw a mule driver beating his team because the team would not pull an overloaded wagon out of a rut. Jumping from his automobile, General Pershing lectured the mule driver, forced him to lighten the load, deftly swung the team around and drove the wagon onto the high road.

Again he reprimanded a colonel who forced his men to march all day with a 60-pound pack when empty motor trucks were passing all day en route to the same destination.

"An American soldier will fight harder, live on less food and accept more hardships than any other soldier in the world," General Pershing said, in commenting upon the incident. "But he can see no reason why his pack should not be hauled in empty trucks if trucks are passing. Neither do I."

A camp sutler at Colonia Dublan smuggled in an automobile load of whisky. After disposing of his stock, the man appeared at General Pershing's headquarters for a pass back to the border. He got the pass as a free ride as a prisoner and was forced to dig and repair roads enroute.

The announcement that General Pershing had adopted two French orphans recalled a flood of tender memories to friends of General Pershing on the border, for it was chile he was in command that his wife and two children were burned to death at the Presido in San Francisco. General Pershing's hair, a chestnut brown, slowly turned to gray after his loss and he could be seen frequently riding on the mesa beyond Fort Bliss, alone with his grief.

AFTER 5-DAY HONEYMOON HENRY "WANTS TO ENLIST"

From the New York World.

"Never as long as I live do I want to set eyes on the woman who calls herself my wife. I am going into the army. I want to get to France to be near my dad. I am going to enlist in the most dangerous branch of the service—the tanks—and over there in France I can end it all, quickly and honorably."

So, the other day, spoke Henry Tuck French, 20-year old Harvard student who about two weeks ago married Miss Lillian Harrington, a telephone operator of Manchester, N. H., and whose mother has not only cut off his allowance, but will not have anything to do with him.

French was sitting in the lobby of the Hotel Vanderbilt, "feeling terribly blue," as he expressed it.

He does not know why he married Miss Harrington, he says. She asked him to kiss her because she loved him, he says. He admits he did kiss her. He says he really believed then that he loved her. They went to the Church of the Advent and were married.

"We lived together five days," French said. "In those five days she told me 1,000 times she loved me and 1,000 times that she hated me. The morning after we were married she told me when I kissed her that I had been drinking. I told her sure I had been drinking. I'd been drinking champagne.

"And when I said that," he went on, "she clasped her hands and cried: 'Breathe on me some more!'"

French said his mother is in Atlantic City and has not sent him a word of comfort or consolation. He says he made a mistake when he married the telephone operator, but he wishes his mother would believe him when he says he is sorry and that he will never do it again.

"But I guess she won't forgive me," he said, "so it's the trenches and the tanks for mine. The detectives my wife has trailing me can't follow me over there at any rate."

WILL SELL HER HAIR TO BUY WAR STAMPS

From the New York World.

How much do you offer for 11-year-old Juanita Dewell's hair? Gertrude Atherton, author, has bid $5. Who'll say $10? Mistress Dewell wants the money to buy War Savies.

She sent the hair—described by the publicity man of the National Security league, who may be a poet out of office hours, as "silken, wavy chestnut brown"—to the Evening Telegram, a newspaper in Portland, Ore. She lives in Dayton, Ore. Here's the letter that went with the hair:

> I am sending you my hair which I cut off to buy W. S. S. I am 11 years old and want to do something to help buy stamps to go over the top in the W. S. S. drive. Can you put in your paper, saying a little girl cut off her hair to buy W. S. S.? Will you please help to sell it in Portland, Ore.?

Now the hair and the letter and the pasteboard box they traveled in are on exhibition in a window of the Portland Evening Telegram, and whoever offers the most money for them can have them.

SOME GERMAN-AMERICANS.

From the New York Evening Post.

Baruch, Rosenwald, Stettinius, Goethals, Warburg, Frankfurter, Deeds, Schwab—no dear, reader, that is not a roll call of the kaiser's privy council. It is merely a list of some of the men with German blood in their veins who have been intrusted with great powers under the American government in this crisis in the nation's history.

Each one is given tremendous responsibility. Most of them were born in this country; one of them has relatives in the enemy's service. The parents of most of them were born in Germany, so that it is, in a way, proper to speak of them as German-Americans. But as Americans none are more loyal, none more useful.

In Schwab's hands we have placed the vital shipping question, the crux of the whole war situation. Rosenwald and Stettinius are doing most of the purchasing for the government, while upon Goethals' shoulders rests the responsibility of the vital quartermaster corps. To Frankfurter has just been given the vast responsibility of controlling and regulating those who are laboring for the government in factories, yards and plants.

What Enthusiasm Can Do.

Edward Hungerford, in Collier's.

On a May afternoon I stood with Holden Evans on the deck of an unfinished tanker in the yard of the Baltimore Dry Docks & Shipbuilding company, of which he is the president and master builder. There was a giant clock face with but a single hand on the timbers at the head of the ways that held the new ship straight aloft, and the single hand upon that clock face was pointed at nine. Translated, that meant that the laying of her keel had begun but nine days before. The dial of the clock was closed with 40 numbered spaces.

"Which means," explained Holden Evans, "that this ship will take the water 40 days after the laying of the keel. Not quite as fast as the Tuckahoe, perhaps, but this is a tanker, and a longitudinal ships into the bargain, which means harder work, and slower. Do you see that ship there?" His arm pointed to another unfinished tanker upon the adjoining ways. "We have done in nine days upon this ship what it has taken 37 days to accomplish upon that one."

"Why?" I asked.

"We are perfecting our methods, our materials are coming through better, and the men are falling to the job with a larger enthusiasm."

A Vote In the Cabinet.

From the Christian Science Monitor.

People unfamiliar with the relations between the president of the United States and his cabinet, many of whom ought to know better, are often heard to ask why any president ever permits himself to be controlled by unwise counselors, or worse. This recalls, to some persons blessed with good memory, a characteristic story about President Lincoln. As it is told, after listening one day to a long, adverse discussion by the cabinet of a subject concerning which he had been making up his mind during the debate, he adjourned the meeting by saying: "The vote stands seven nays to one aye; the ayes have it."

Lots of Wheat in Iowa.

The food administration has been able to locate more than 11,000 bushels of wheat in the hands of Iowa farmers through returns made to the Burlington office by farmers themselves in response to an inquiry sent out recently. All wheat has been requisitioned by the government for our soldiers in France and the allies and the food administration seeks to locate all the surplus wheat held in large or small quantities by the farmers.

Shipments of rice from China to the United States increased greatly during 1917 and according to present indications will break all records this year.

War is our business; we can't win by carrying it as a side line.

Washington officials have requested that questions first be taken up with the county food administrators and als... that all ques... tions which the county committeees ... not prepared to answer be referred to J. NEW MEAT RULES FOR IOWA.

By J. F. DEEMS, United States Food Administrator for Iowa.

The demands for beef for our army, the allied armies and their civil population for this summer are beyond our present surplus; on the other hand we have enough increased supply of pork this summer to permit economical expansion of its use. It will, therefore, be a direct service to our armies and the allies if our people would in some degree substitute fresh pork, bacon, hams and sausage for beef We ask householders not under any circumstances to buy more than one and a quarter pounds of clear beef weekly, or one and one-half pounds, including the bone, per person in the household. Mutton, lamb, veal, beef, beef hearts, calves' liver, etc., are not shipped abroad to any great extent and therefore these products may be eaten in place of exportable meats.

Allies Have Meatless Days.

While the United States is on a meat ration of two pounds a week both France and England have three meatless days each week. In England no butchers' meat can be sold or served in hotels, etc., on Wednesday, Thursday, and Friday of each week Butcher shops and meat markets are to remain closed on the meatless days. Slaughter houses are to remain closed from one o'clock on Monday to six o'clock Friday in each week. The number of animals slaughtered must not exceed two-thirds of the average number slaughtered during March, 1918.

TURNED DREAMS TO ACCOUNT

Novelists and Musicians Have Scored Triumphs by Their Remembrances of Dreadful Nightmares.

Nightmares, as well as ordinary dreams, have more than once been turned to profitable use. The famous Mrs. Radcliffe, the great sensational novelist of the early nineteenth century, obtained her "inspiration" for such blood-curdling romances as the "Mysteries of Udolpho" and "The Romance of the Forest" from phantom horrors seen in sleep taken after supping on pork pies.

A remarkable story is told about the production of Tartini's "Devil's Sonata." The musician had made several vain attempts to write a sonata to his own satisfaction, but without result. At last, in a fit of dejection, he retired to rest, and no sooner had he dropped asleep than he fell into a troubled dream in which the devil appeared to him and took up his violin.

At first he was in an agony of apprehension lest the fiend should destroy his greatest treasure, but instead the Author of Evil played the most fascinating and weird music Tartini had ever heard. He then implored the devil to write it down, but Beelzebub flatly refused, and went off in such a rage that the musician awoke in a great fright.

But the lilt of the wonderful music was still running in his brain and he leaped out of bed, rushed to his desk and put down all he could recall, which, he always averred, was the worst portion of the wonderful whole. The sonata has ever since borne the name of its true satanic author.

De Quincey is usually called the English Opium-Eater, and he obtained the greater part of his fame from the awful, though often enchanting, dreams that visited him while he lay in the power of the drug. His "Confessions of an Opium Eater" contains some of the masterpieces of prose describing in wonderful language his terrible nightmares.

Pull Hard for Sammies.

B. F. Leavell, a Tipton broker, has a grandson he says is the greatest boy in the world. The chap is about six years old and is Benny Bates, son of Charles Bates, a Tipton business man. The grandfather was accosted by the youngster, who seemed very interested in an incident, and he desired the grandfather's information. He asked Mr. Leavell: "Who was the kaiser?" The grandparent, in his plainest way, told the youngster, and asked why he was so interested. Benny spoke up and said: "Well, when school was out today a little boy in our primer class throwed up his cap and said 'Hurrah for the kaiser!'" The granddad interrupted and said: "Why, Benny, that was when you should have licked the b... y." Benny, in his youthful manner, said: "Oh, granddaddy, I didn't have to, George Elbert did that." George Elbert is a son of George Shortle, another Tipton business man, and the youngsters are both in the primary class and both "pull hard for the Sammies."—Indianapolis News.

Buster's Maternal Relative.

Martha went to the country to visit her auntie. She was fond of playing with a puppy called Buster at the home of a neighbor and went there often. She came in one day with a bunch of flowers, and when asked where she had got them she replied: "Busty's muddy gave them to me."

Swiss on Short Rations.

Under new food regulations, the Swiss people are allowed only a pound of sugar per month per person. The butter ration is one-fifth of a pound per month.

No Longer Wanted.

A human skull displayed in a shop window in a street close to the Edinburgh infirmary bears, in rather grim humor, the legend: "Second-hand owner having no further use."

Thought for Women.

"In the whole feminine creation are there any happier women than the deformed wife who is not crooked for the eyes she loves, the lame woman when her husband would not have her other than she is, and the wife grown old and gray who is still young for him?"—Balzac.

Daughter Was Curious.

Invited out to dinner, mother stood before the mirror, and, having made her yellow locks a trifle yellower, she proceeded to apply the pencil to her eyebrows. The little daughter stood by and wondered. Finally she asked:: "Mother, what are you writing on your face for?"

Women as a Power.

"If ever the time comes when women shall come together simply and purely for the benefit of mankind, it will be a power such as the world has never dreamed of."—Matthew Arnold.

CHAPTER TWELVE. (Continued)

No, one thing alone stood out above the situation, the sentence, "Bear in mind that the explosion is independent of the letters." And, as the explosion was put down for the night of the 25th of May, it would occur that very night, at 3 o'clock in the morning!

"Help! Help!" he cried.

This time he did not hesitate So far, he had had the courage to remain huddled in his prison and to wait for the miracle that might come to his assistance but he preferred to face every danger and undergo every penalty rather than abandon the prefect of police, Weber, Mazeroux, and their companions to the peril that threatened them

"Help! Help!"

For the house would be blown up in three or four hours That he knew with the greatest certainty Just as punctually as the mysterious letters had reached their destination in spite of all the obstacles in the way, so the explosion would occur at the hour named The infernal artificer of the accursed work had wished it so At 3 o'clock in the morning there would be nothing left of the Fauville's house

"Help! Help!"

He recovered enough strength to raise desperate shouts and to make his voice carry beyond the stones and beyond the wainscoting

Then, when there seemed to be no answer to his call he stopped and listened for a long time There was not a sound The silence was absolute

Thereupon a terrible anguish covered him with a cold sweat Supposing the detectives had ceased to watch the upper floors and continued their vigil to spending the night in the rooms on the [illegible] floor

He madly took a brick and struck [illegible]

[illegible]

"Help! Help!"

His feeble cries did not penetrate the walls that stifled him Besides his voice was growing fainter and fainter, producing a hoarse groan that died away in his strained throat

He ceased his cries and again listened, with all his anxious attention, to the great silence that surrounded as with layers of lead the stone coffin in which he lay imprisoned Still nothing, not a sound No one would come, no one could come to his assistance

He continued to be haunted by Florence's name and image And he thought also of Marie Fauville, whom he had promised to save But Marie would die of starvation. And, like her, like Gaston Sauverand and so many others, he in his turn was the victim of this monstrous horror

An incident occurred to increase his dismay All of a sudden his electric lantern, which he had left alight to dispel the terrors of the darkness, went out. It was 11 o'clock at night

He was overcome with a fit of giddiness. He could hardly breathe in the close and vitiated air. His brain suffered, as it were, a physical and exceedingly painful ailment, from the repetition of images that seemed to encrust themselves there; and it was always Florence's beautiful features or Marie's livid face. And, in his distraught brain, while Marie lay dying, he heard the explosion at the Fauvilles' house and saw the Prefect of Police and Mazeroux lying hideously mutilated, dead.

A numbness crept over him. He fell into a sort of swoon, in which he continued to stammer confused syllables:

"Florence—Marie—Marie—"

CHAPTER THIRTEEN

THE EXPLOSION

The fourth mysterious letter! The fourth of those letters "posted by the devil and delivered by the devil," as one of the newspapers expressed it!

We all of us remember the really extraordinary agitation of the public as the night of the 25th of May drew near. And fresh news increased this interest to a yet higher degree.

People heard in quick succession of the arrest of Sauverand, the flight of his accomplice, Florence Levasseur, Don Luis Perenna's secretary, and the inexplicable disappearance of Perenna himself, whom they insisted, for the best of reasons, on identifying with Arsene Lupin

The police, assured from this moment of victory and having nearly all the actors in the tragedy in their power, had gradually given way to indiscretion; and, thanks to the particulars revealed to this or that journalist, the public knew of Don Luis' change of attitude, suspected his passion for Florence Levasseur and the real cause of his right-about-face, and thrilled with excitement as they saw that astonishing figure enter upon a fresh struggle

What was he going to do? If he wanted to save the woman he loved from prosecution and to release Marie and Sauverand from prison, he would have to intervene some time that night, to take part, somehow or other, in the event at hand, and to prove the innocence of the three accomplices, either by arresting the invisible bearer of the fourth letter or by suggesting some plausible explanation. In short, he would have to be there; and that was interesting indeed!

And then the news of Marie Fauville was not good. With unwavering obstinacy she persisted in her suicidal plans. She had to be artificially fed: and the doctors in the infirmary at Saint-Lazare did not conceal their anxiety Would Don Luis Perenna arrive in time

Lastly, there was that other thing, the threat of an explosion which was to blow up Hippolyte Fauville's house ten days after the delivery of the fourth letter, a really impressive threat when it was remembered that the enemy had never announced anything that did not take place at the stated hour. And, although it was still ten days—at least, so people thought—from the date fixed for the catastrophe, the threat made the whole business look more and more sinister.

That evening, therefore, a great crowd made its way, through La Muette and Auteuil, to the Boulevard Suchet, a crowd coming not only from Paris, but also from the suburbs and the provinces The spectacle was exciting, and people wanted to see.

They saw only from a distance, for the police had barred the approaches 100 yards from either side of the house and were driving into the ditches of the fortifications all those who managed to climb the opposite slope.

The sky was stormy, with heavy clouds revealed at intervals by the light of a silver moon. There were lightning flashes and peals of distant thunder. Men sang, Street boys imitated the noises of animals. People formed themselves into groups on the benches and pavements and ate and drank while discussing the matter.

A part of the night was spent in this way and nothing happened to reward the patience of the crowd, who began to wonder, somewhat wearily, if they would not do better to go home, seeing that Sauverand was in prison and that there was every chance that the fourth letter would not appear in the same mysterious way as the others

And yet they did not go: Don Luis Perenna was due to come!

From 10 o'clock in the evening the Prefect of Police and his secretary general, the chief detective and Weber, his deputy, Sergeant Mazeroux, and two detectives were gathered in the large room in which Fauville had been murdered. Fifteen more detectives occupied the remaining rooms, while some 20 others watched the roofs, the outside of the house, and the garden.

Once again a thorough search had been made during the afternoon, with no better results than before. But it was decided that all the men should keep awake. If the letter was delivered anywhere in the big room, they wanted to know and they meant to know who brought it. The police do not recognize miracles.

At 12 o'clock M. Desmalions had coffee served to his subordinates He himself took two cups and never ceased walking from one end to the other of the room, or climbing the staircase that led to the attic, or going through the passage and hall. Preferring that the watch should be maintained under the most favorable conditions, he left all the doors opened and all the electric lights on.

Mazeroux objected:

"It has to be dark for the letter to come. You will remember, Monsieur le Prefet, that the other experiment was tried before and the letter was not delivered."

"We will try it again," replied M. Desmalions, who, in spite of everything, was really afraid of Don Luis' interference, and increased his measures to make it impossible.

Meanwhile, as the night wore on, the minds of all those present became impatient. Prepared for the angry struggle as they were, they longed for the opportunity to show their strength. They made desperate use of their ears and eyes.

At 1 o'clock there was an alarm that showed the pitch which the nervous tension had reached. A shot was fired on the first floor, followed by shouts. On inquiry, it was found that two detectives, meeting in the course of a round, had not recognized each other, and one of them had discharged his revolver in the air to inform his comrades.

In the meantime the crowd outside had diminished, as M. Desmalions perceived on opening the garden gate. The orders had been relaxed and sightseers were allowed to come nearer, though they were still kept at a distance from the pavement.

Mazeroux said:

"It is a good thing that the explosion is due in 10 days' time and not tonight, Monsieur le Prefet; otherwise, all those good people would be in danger as well as ourselves."

"There will be no explosion in ten days' time, any more than there will be a letter tonight," said M. Desmalions, shrugging his shoulders. And he added, "Besides, on that day, the orders will be strict."

It was now ten minutes past two.

At 25 minutes past, as the Prefect was lighting a cigar, the chief detective ventured to joke:

"That's something you will have to do without, next time, Monsieur le Prefet. It would be too risky."

"Next time," said M Desmalions, "I shall not waste time in keeping watch. For I really begin to think that all this business with the letters is over."

"You can never tell," suggested Mazeroux.

A few minutes more passed. M. Desmalions had sat down. The others also were seated. No one spoke.

And suddenly they all sprang up, with one movement, and the same expression of surprise.

A bell had rung.

They at once heard where the sound came from.

"The telephone," M. Desmalions muttered.

He took down the receiver.

"Hullo! Who are you?"

A voice answered, but so distant and so faint that he could only catch an incoherent noise and exclaimed:

"Speak louder! What is it? Who are you?"

The voice spluttered out a few syllables that seemed to astound him.

"Hullo!" he said. "I don't understand. Please repeat what you said. Who is it speaking?"

"Don Luis Perenna," was the answer, more distinctly this time.

The Prefect made as though to hang up the receiver; and he growled:

"It's a hoax Some rotter amusing himself at our expense."

Nevertheless, in spite of himself, he went on in a gruff voice:

"Look here, what is it? You say you're Don Luis Perenna?"

"Yes."

"What do you want?"

"What's the time?"

"What's the time!"

The Prefect made an angry gesture, not so much because of the ridiculous question as because he had really recognized Don Luis' voice beyond mistake.

"Well!" he said, controlling himself. "What's all this about? Where are you!"

"At my house, above the iron curtain, in the ceiling of my study."

"In the ceiling!" repeated the Prefect, not knowing what to think.

"Yes; and more or less done for, I confess."

"We'll send and help you out," said M. Desmalions, who was beginning to enjoy himself.

"Later on, Monsieur le Prefet. First answer me. Quickly! If not, I don't know that I shall have the strength. What's the time?"

"Oh, look here!"

"I beg of you——"

"It's 20 minutes to 3!"

It was as though Don Luis found renewed strength in a sudden fit of fear. His weak voice recovered its emphasis, and, by turns imperious, despairing, and beseeching, full of a conviction which he did his utmost to impart to M. Desmalions, he said:

"Go away, Monsieur le Prefet! Go, all of you; leave the house. The house will be blown up at 3 o'clock. Yes, yes, I swear it will. Ten days after the fourth letter means now, because there has been a ten days' delay in the delivery of the letters. It means now, at 3 o'clock in the morning. Remember what was written on the sheet which Deputy Chief Weber handed you this morning: 'The explosion is independent of the letters. It will take place at 3 o'clock in the morning.' At 3 o'clock in the morning, today, Monsieur le Prefet!" The voice faltered and then continued:

"Go away, please. Let no one remain in the house. You must believe me I know everything about the business. And nothing can prevent the threat from being executed. Go, go, go! This is horrible; I feel that you do not believe me—and I have no strength left. Go away, every one of you!"

He said a few more words which M. Desmalions could not make out. Then the voice ceased; and, though the Prefect still heard cries, it seemed to him that those cries were distant, as though the instrument were no longer within the reach of the mouth that uttered them.

He hung up the receiver.

"Gentlemen," he said, with a smile, "it is 17 minutes to 3. In 17 minutes we shall all be blown up together. At least, that is what our good friend Don Luis Perenna declares."

In spite of the jokes with which this threat was met, there was a general feeling of uneasiness. Weber asked:

"Was it really Don Luis, Monsieur le Prefet?"

"Don Luis in person. He has gone to earth in some hiding hole in his house, above the study; and his fatigue and privations seem to have unsettled him a little. Mazeroux, go and ferret him out—unless this is just some fresh trick on his part. You have your warrant"

Sergeant Mazeroux went up to M. Desmalions. His face was pallid.

"Monsieur le Prefet, did he tell you that we were going to be blown up?"

"He did. He relies on the note which M. Weber found in a volume of Shakespeare. The explosion is to take place tonight."

"At 3 o'clock in the morning?"

"At 3 o'clock in the morning—that is to say, in less than a quarter of an hour."

"And do you propose to remain, Monsieur le Prefet?"

"What next, Sergeant? Do you imagine that we are going to obey that gentleman's fancies?"

Mazeroux staggered, hesitated, and then, despite all his natural deference, unable to contain himself, exclaimed:

"Monsieur le Prefet, it's not a fancy. I have worked with Don Luis. I know the man. If he tells you that something is going to happen, it's because he has his reasons."

"Absurd reasons."

"No, no, Monsieur le Prefet," Mazeroux pleaded, growing more and more excited. "I swear that you must listen to him. The house will be blown up—he said so—at 3 o'clock. We have a few minutes left. Let us go. I entreat you, Monsieur le Prefet."

"In other words, you want us to run away."

"But it's not running away, Monsieur le Prefet. It's a simple precaution. After all, we can't risk—— You, yourself, Monsieur le Prefet——"

"That will do."

"But, Monsieur le Prefet, as Don Luis said——"

His Excellency: "You ought to do something for that cold." "What! After the way you have treated me?"

Save the Babies

INFANT MORTALITY is something frightful. We can hardly realize that of all the children born in civilized countries, twenty-two per cent., or nearly one-quarter, die before they reach one year; thirty-two per cent., or more than one-third, before they are five, and one-half before they are fifteen!

We do not hesitate to say that a timely use of Castoria would save many of these precious lives. Neither do we hesitate to say that the greater part of these infantile deaths are occasioned by the use of narcotic preparations, Soothing Drops, tinctures and soothing syrups sold for children's complaints, containing more or less opium or morphine. They are, in considerable quantities, deadly poisons. In any quantity, they stupefy, retard circulation and respiration, lead to congestions, sickness, death. There can be no danger in the use of Castoria if it bears the signature of Chas. H. Fletcher as it contains no opiates or narcotics of any kind.

Hot Weather Hits Hardest in Stoma

Keep a close watch on your stomach this summer. We need all our fighting strength. War work—change of diet—will make us all easier prey to stomach and bowel trouble than ever before. It is so easy to become overheated on a blazing hot day, especially after eating a hearty meal. And then the excessive heat makes us flood our stomachs with all kinds of cold drinks. That's bad at any time; much worse—even dangerous—when there is the slightest feeling of stomach trouble.

Keep the stomach sweet and cool and free from too much acid—that's about all that is necessary. It's not so much the diet as to keep the poison from starting trouble. You can easily do this if you will just take a tablet or two of EATONIC after your meals.

EATONIC is the wonderful compound that absorbs the harmful gases and juices and instantly drives away the misery.

Instead of sudden and severe attacks of indigestion, begin using EATONIC and get you have a stomach. There will be no more heartburn, repeating, sour stomach, gas or that lumpy, bloated feeling so often experienced after eating. How France Has Been Fed

"Before the war, a distinguished French Officer, General Maitrot, wrote a series of articles in the 'Echo de Paris' to warn France, that in case of war, the French meat industry would be unable to supply the French army in the field with fresh meat,—owing especially to the lack of modern refrigerating plants and of refrigerating transportation,—and too, owing to the deficiency in the national herd."

"Since the war began the French army has never been short of fresh meat, thanks mainly to the prosperous condition of the American meat industry, and too, to the American live stock breeders."

The foregoing statement was made by a representative of the Allies now in the United States.

Another representative of the Allies said recently:

"that the American packers have been of the greatest possible assistance to the Allies and have, by their efficient co-operation, contributed in the utmost degree to the successful prosecution of the war."

ADVANCEMENT IN WESTERN CANADA FARM LAND PRICES

Stories of phenomenal advancement and prosperity in Western Canada have been told the reading public for some years past. The stories were told when there were hundreds of thousands of acres of splendid land adjacent to railways and projected lines, which could be had on the payment of a mere $10 entry fee, and under cultivation and living conditions As was prophesied then, the day has come when these are few. There are still available thousands of these; they are some distance now from the railways The land is as good as ever, but pioneering conditions will have changed. A great many are still taking advantage of this free offer from the government. The story was told when good lands near lines of railway could be bought for from $8 to $10 per acre and the prophecy made that these prices would double in a few years for the intrinsic value was far more than that. That day has come more quickly than expected. The immense crops of grain that could be raised has brought about the change, and the demand for low priced lands with maximum returns has prompted the keen purchaser as well as the owner of higher priced land from which no greater return could be looked for Prices of land in Western Canada are still advancing, and will continue to advance until, of course, the limit is reached—when returns will warrant no further increase. That day is not far distant. But, in the meantime, there are large tracts of land owned by land companies and private individuals that have not felt the advance that has been shown in other districts. The opportunity to purchase these should not be lost sight of, and if there are those amongst the readers of this article, which is authorized by the Canadian government, who wish cheap land, such lands as produce from 25 to 40 bushels per acre, and will pay for themselves out of one year's crop, advantage should be taken of the present opportunity.

Coming to Alberta with his family thirteen years ago, his assets consisting of a small outfit and $20 in cash, Mr. O. F. Malmberg has accumulated by farming and live stock raising assets to the value of more than $300,000, and has a personal credit, worth on demand, $100,000. He has not speculated in land, but bought only to farm. Near Blackie, Alberta, he operates 3-100 acres of wheat land. He has just purchased an additional 11,500 acres near Cardston, in Southern Alberta. His personal credit enabled him to finance this deal in Calgary in a little over three hours. The ranch just purchased is a fully equipped stock and grain ranch. At the present time it carries a thousand head of cattle and several hundred horses, and is fully equipped with buildings, machinery, corrals, sheep sheds, dipping vats, etc. That is a story from one district. Let us select one from a district some hundred or more miles from that.

"Peter A. Klassen, who recently moved to Herbert, Sask., from Kansas, has purchased a section of prairie land in the Hillsboro district, about 24 miles northwest of Herbert, for which he paid $12,000 cash. He is erecting temporary buildings to live in while putting the place in cultivation, and this summer plans to erect good buildings on the farm and equip it for a home. Mr. Klassen recently sold his 80-acre farm in Kansas for $15,000 and is investing the proceeds in Canada."

With the proceeds of the sale of his land in Kansas, this farmer purchased in Saskatchewan a piece eight times as large as he had previously been farming, and had a balance with which to purchase equipment, stock, etc., of $3,000. Moreover as land in Saskatchewan may be expected to yield twice as much grain per acre, he will be able to produce sixteen times as much as formerly.

The average value of farm land for the whole of Canada, including land improved and unimproved, together with dwelling houses, barns, stables and other farm buildings, is approximately $44 per acre as compared with $41 in 1916, according to the latest report of the Census and Statistics branch at Ottawa. The average value of land in the Prairie Provinces is as follows:

Manitoba	$31.00
Saskatchewan	26.00
Alberta	26.70

It is the low prices at which land can be obtained in Western Canada which is rendering this country such an important factor in the production of foodstuffs at the present time. It is enabling men who have been farming small areas in older districts to take up and farm with the same capital areas not only many times as great, but which are also capable of producing considerably larger crops to the acre.—Advertisement.

ASKS FARMERS FOR LOCUST

Uncle Sam Needs the Black Variety to Make Tree-nails For the Ships.

From the Emergency Fleet News.

Farmers who have good locust timber, suitable for the manufacture of ship treenails, will do well to communicate with the purchasing division of the Emergency Fleet corporation, which announces that it will give prompt attention to inquiries from those wishing to be put in touch with treenail manufacturers

Great Quantities Needed.

The shipbuilding program of the government has enormously increased the demand for treenails, or "trunnels," which are used in wooden ships much as dowels were used in old fashioned frame construction work. They are huge wooden nails from two to four feet long, which fasten together the planking or outer shell of the hull, the frames or skeleton and the ceiling or inner shell. Most of the treenails used in this country are made of black locust, or yellow locust, as the tree is often called. They must be made of straight grained wood, which combines density, hardness, strength and durability, which does not shrink much and will not split readily, and locust is preeminently the wood that fills the bill.

No Honey Locust.

Black locust does not grow in great stands, but must be picked up in relatively small quantities, so that the shipyard demand opens the door to the marketing by farmers of wood lot timber of this species By doing so they may contribute to the war time needs of the country and thus help down the Hun, and at the same time convert into ready money some of the value that their growing timber has accumulated. Forest grown locust of a good grade is the most desirable from every standpoint although some manufacturers buy the field grown if found in sufficient size and quantity to warrant handling

Wooden shipyards are now busy from Maine to Texas as well as on the Great Lakes and the Pacific coast, and as each ship takes from 20,000 to 50,000 treenails the manufacturers who supply the yards are naturally out for supplies of locust While several kinds of wood may be used to the extent that black locust is obtainable it is preferred. Honey locust will not do for treenails, as it is too porous. The Emergency Fleet corporation which is purely a government organization, is assisting the manufacturers of treenails to find their raw material, and has been instrumental in developing large supplies since the war program of shipbuilding was entered upon It is anxious to bring together the owners of suitable standing timber and the manufacturers operating in their territory

Making treenails is distinctly a business in itself. There is a very large percentage of waste in manufacture, partly because locust is a very defective wood and partly because the shipbuilding specifications are very exacting. Most if not all of the manufacturer's profit is likely to come from knowing how to dispose of such material advantageously The individual farmer or small millman is seldom in a position to do this. Farmers having locust to dispose of will therefore do best to get in touch with some established treenail manufacturer.

The production of treenails has been divided up into districts so that each manufacturer ordinarily draws his supplies from a definite territory In consequence the seller of locust timber for treenails has usually but one market available. The manufacturers receive their orders for treenails from the purchasing division of the Emergency Fleet corporation, in which is centralized the buying for all shipyards. These orders are placed on terms which permit the manufacturers to pay reasonable prices for their raw material.

How To Sell.

What the farmer can expect to get for his locust will vary with the grade of the timber and the cost of laying it down at the mills. Some manufacturers buy the timber on the stump, others by the cord or thousand feet, in which case the farmer can do the cutting himself Selected stock will bring the best prices, especially when the manufacturer has drawn his specifications high so as to get the best grades only

Owners of locust desiring to be put in touch with a treenail manufacturer should address the purchasing division, Emergency Fleet corporation, Washington, D. C. Full information should be given as to the nature of the timber, its approximate quantity, and the location with reference to the nearest shipping point. The name of the railroad serving the shipping point should also be given.

The Age of Glass.

From Collier's Weekly

The Y. M. C. A. reports that saloons appeal much less powerfully to youths between 17 and 24 years of age than to older men. Should these tidings raise your spirits or lower them?

Among the young men reported on, young men from 17 to 24 years old, 17.8 per cent patronize the saloon, of men between 25 and 35, 32.6 per cent are customers, of men from 36 to 45, 42 per cent use the saloon. Now, considering the unattractiveness of the ordinary American barroom, these figures are rather striking. A still more damaging criticism of our social order is, however, to be found in the Y. M. C. A. addendum, that "twice as many married men go to the saloon as single men." Our uplifters make a bad matter worse by attributing this fact to "the higher idealism of the young men"—for what cures our young men of their idealism? Happily, the Y. M. C. A. adds as an after thought that "unmarried men spend a good deal of time in the company of their sweethearts, who naturally would not visit the saloon with them The saloon seems to be most popular in the years between 35 and 45, the dull drab years of middle age."

If this report is worth very much, its value lies in the omitted suggestion that something is wrong about the woman whose appeal to her mate comes to be weaker than the appeal of the man in a white coat—whose ministrations Provost Marshal Crowder refuses to classify as "useful work." It is up to the wives of these men "between 35 and 45, the dull drab years," to make home as attractive as the place on the corner, where there's sawdust on the floor and a shiny brass rail Scolding won't help—whether editorial or conjugal—but how about good cooking (quite within Mr Hoover's recommendations) and good table talk to make the corn cakes even more succulent?

COULDN'T SHAKE THAT PUP

Scrubby-Looking Dog Meant to Follow Its Master to France—or Elsewhere—if Necessary.

A draft contingent was marching down a Chicago street toward the railway station. Good-bys had been said; home had been left behind. An unknown future lay ahead.

But home ties had not altogether been broken. There was one, at least, willing to share the fate of those departing He was a very scrubby-looking little dog. Evidently he didn't propose to be left behind to keep the home fires burning, for he clung to the heels of his master like a burr.

"Go back, Raggs!" commanded the latter "Go back, I say."

But Rags was obdurate. Even an imperative stamp of the foot failed to discourage him. Rags' intentions were only too evident

Finally one of the selects came to his defense

"Aw let's take him along, Bill," he said "The pup'll be good company, and maybe they can use him to catch rats in the trenches."

The contingent disappeared around a corner The scrubby dog was still clinging to his master's heels.

Don't Neglect a Bad Back!

It's Mighty Poor Policy to Worry Along Thus Handicapped When Health and Strength is So Needed

The man or woman handicapped with a bad back in these times when physical fitness is so necessary, is indeed crippled. It's mighty poor policy to worry along with an aching back day after day; work is neglected and the simplest duties are a burden. Plowing, planting, harvesting, churning, the daily housework all throw a heavy strain on the kidneys and kidney ills, with attendant backache, are a common result. Don't wait! Neglect may mean gravel, dropsy or Bright's disease. Get a box of Doan's Kidney Pills today They have helped thousands. They should help you.

Personal Reports of Real Cases

AN IOWA CASE.

Mrs Rachel Carr, 810 E. Seventh Ave., Oskaloosa, Iowa, says: "I had a spell of la grippe and it settled on my kidneys. I suffered dreadfully from my back and was so sore and lame that I could hardly walk from one room to another. I could get no rest day or night, and at times my back felt as if there was a heavy weight on it. My sight became blurred and everything seemed to swim before your eyes The kidney secretions were unnatural. I used Doan's Kidney Pills and they helped me from the first. I continued taking them until the backache left and the kidneys were acting regularly I cannot praise Doan's Kidney Pills enough for what they have done for me"

ANOTHER IOWA CASE.

Alonzo Adams, Osceola, Iowa, says: "Colds settling in my kidneys caused lumbago. Sharp, shooting pains went through my kidneys and left me almost helpless. After one of these attacks, I could neither stoop nor straighten. Mornings I was tired and exhausted, owing to the lack of good, sound sleep. My kidneys acted irregularly all the time and the kidney secretions were unnatural. I doctored and used different remedies and plasters but with no good results Finally I took Doan's Kidney Pills and the trouble entirely disappeared. I haven't been bothered in the slightest in nearly a year."

Boat Train In Speeding.

A man beat a train in a recent race between the two from Groom to Kurseong, India—a distance of 15½ miles. The victor, a private named Graham, of the Argylls, beat the train by two minutes. The distance was covered in one hour and thirty minutes by continuous running. Graham walked two days before from Ghoom to Kurseong and back, 31 miles in six and one-fourth hours.

To Die in the Last Ditch.

The saying to Die in the Last Ditch, may be attributed to William of Orange. When Buckingham urged the inevitable destruction which hung over the united provinces and asked him whether he did not see that the commonwealth was ruined: "There is one certain means," replied the prince, "by which I can be sure never to see my country's ruin—I will die in the last ditch."

Enough for Him.

Two negroes were once matched for a boxing contest. Finally one began scoring heavily, and the other went to his corner at the end of the round badly beaten. He failed to respond when the bell rang. "Come on heah, niggah, dis am a fight to a finish," challenged the more lively of the pair. The battered one simply sat in his corner head down, dejected. "Yes, an' I'se finished," he grunted.

The Revolt

The better to see over a growing pile of stove wood in Jotham Libby's yard, Caleb Peaslee craned his neck. From the farther side of the pile came the sound of an ax plied industriously, and then the perspiring head and shoulders of Mr. Libby came into view. Caleb grinned as he watched.

"Gittin' quite a pile of it manufactured ahead, ain't you, Jotham?" he inquired.

Mr. Libby started nervously and let his ax fall upon the block as he did so. He removed his hat and puffed audibly as he approached the fence where Caleb stood.

"I've got quite a pile, that's a fact," he admitted with a touch of pride. Then he colored a little and faced Caleb with a sheepish grin, "I ain't lettin' on lettin' my wife get out of stove wood again—not for one spell, anyway."

Caleb composed himself to listen.

"What've you been doin' now that Mis' Libby's had to train you for?" he demanded. "You might's well own up; if ye don't I shall ask her."

Jotham reddened again. "I ought to be ashamed," he began haltingly, "and I be ashamed. I don't want you to think I ain't. But there's so many things to do on a farm this time of year a man gets into the way of doin' the things that crowd him wust; you know how 'tis yourself."

Mr. Peaslee agreed heartily.

"Well," resumed Jotham, visibly encouraged, "I've got into the habit of thinkin' that 'twa'n't so much matter if I didn't tend out on the stove for every stick of wood that was burnt long's there was so many other things to do. Course I cal'late to keep wood ahead for my wife, but she's always gone out into the yard and got 'nough together for herself if I didn't happen to do it, and I guess likely I've got kind of slack. Of course, she's sputtered and threatened me a hundred times with what she'd do, but she never done anything till yesterday.

"Yest'day mornin' I was out to the barn, gettin' the harness onto the hosses early, 'count of havin' Jake Piper and Wendell Cooper comin' to help me for the day, when she come to the kitchen door and hollered to me.

"'I want you should get me some wood 'fore you go away,' s'she. 'There ain't hardly a stick here. I've got to do some bakin' if you're cal'latin' to have them men stop to dinner.'

"I made some answer, and kep' on harnessin'. I meant to do it when I got them fellers set to work, but I didn't charge my mind with it. I never thought of it again till noon.

"But when we got to the house, 'bout famished," Mr. Libby continued glumly, "it was fetched home to me all right. I took the harnesses off'n the hosses and fed 'em while Jake and Wendell went into the house to get ready for dinner. When I come out of the barn they was both out on the porch lookin' kind of tickled and red. I had misgivin's that minute, but I never had any idea what was wrong.

"'Well, boys,' s' I, 'come along in and we'll eat, and get back to work as soon's we can.' And with that, I stepped into the kitchen—and, Kellup, I hope I'll never have another feelin' like I had right then and there. There wa'n't any signs of dinner anywheres. The stove was stone cold, and on the front of it she'd stuck a big placard: NO WOOD—NO FIRE! NO FIRE—NO DINNER!

I've gone up to Abner's for the day.

"Well," finished Mr. Libby shamefully, "that's about the whole on't. Jake and Wendell managed not to make fun of me right to my face, and I turned it off best I could. I told 'em I guessed they'd have to go home to dinner; bein's my wife'd gone away. But it's too much to hope they'll keep still 'bout it; so I'm willin' to tell you the rights of it myself. But I'll tell you one thing: if there's a woman in Dilmouth that lacks for wood again, her name won't be Mis' Jotham Libby."—Youth's Companion.

Hard on Night Owls.

Frederick Palmer has brought some grim humor from the front. Recently, at a lecture at the Academy of Music, he told the following:

"An Irish soldier in the forces of the king said to his commander: 'Captain, I thought we were to take a village today.'

"'And that is just what we did,' replied the captain. 'See that wide stretch of pits and holes that we just came through. That's the village.'

"'Is that so?' replied the astonished Irishman. Then after a pause, he added: 'Well, all I can say is I'd hate to be a drunken man lookin' for the keyhole of my house in a town like that!'"—New Haven Register.

Yellowstone National park is growing in importance as a propagating and distributing center for certain kinds of wild animals. During February last 55 elk, 13 of which were bulls, were shipped to points in four states—Idaho, Illionis, Texas and Minnesota. The Yellowstone contains more wild animals in a state of nature than any other preserve in the world. It is the policy of the department of the interior to part with superfluous elk, male buffalo, beaver and bear to federal, state, county and municipal authorities for exhibition and propagation, where laws exist which will properly protect them.

The longest and shortest day of the year varies. In 1918 the longest day was June 19, 15 hours and 18 minutes from sunrise to sunset. In 1917 from June 16 to June 22, inclusive, each day was 15 hours and 17 minutes long. In 1918 December 19, 21, 23 and 25, will each be eight hours and four minutes from sunrise to sunset, while the intervening days, December 20, 22 and 24 will each be one minute longer. In 1917 only December 21 and 23 were the shortest days, each containing eight hours and four minutes

In moving some quilts in the summer cottage of Fred Hayden, of Northwest Abbot, Me., five little squirrels were spilled on the floor, one of them being killed. The mother squirrel was quickly on the scene, taking one at a time and hastening upstairs with it. The fourth one she dropped at the foot of the stairs and rushed back with frantic haste, thoroughly looking over the contents of the room for the fifth one. She even climbed to the waists of the men and smelled their hands in her search for her lost baby

A man giving the name of J E Murphy walked into the office of the Canadian recruiting mission in Boston and asked if there was room in the army for a brigadier general. The officers assured him there was, and Murphy told them he was a Canadian 33 years old, who had served in Mexico under General Orozco with the rank of brigadier general. After a physical examination he was rejected on account of web toes. Murphy said he would go to Canada and try recruiting offices there.

An average of 1,000 packets of mail are now being carried regularly every day between Vienna and Kiev by airplane. The distance between the two cities is 750 miles and the claim is made that this is the longest regular air express mail route now being operated in any part of the world. The trip takes from 10 to 12 hours, compared to 40 hours by train. It is made in four stages, the intermediate stops being Cracow, Lemberg and Proskurov.

At a Douglas county, Kansas, Red Cross sale, Governor Capper tried his hand at auctioneering by putting up his old gray hat for the good of the cause. It brought $44. He still wears it, however, just as he has for the last three years. He has never been able to find a felt hat that suited him quite so well as that which the statehouse crowd calls his old gray bonnet, so he bought it back from the man who bid it in.

Recent experience has tended to show that carrier pigeons and other birds of passage are guided by magnetic currents. M. A. Thauziés, a French student of pigeons, has noted that on two occasions when pigeon flights were unsatisfactory magnetic storms were occuring, and the flights of these birds have been becoming often uncertain and erratic, since wireless telegraphy came into extensive use

The American eagle is shrieking at Camp Custer. URGES THRESHERS TO STICK TO PRICES

State Food Administrator Deems Advises Farmers Not To Delay Work.

LeMars, Ia., Aug. 2.—Letters sent to State Food Administrator J. F. Deems, in regard to the price to be charged for threshing in this county, have elicted a communication from him to the county food administrator, E. E. Eastman. He recommends that the threshing should be done as quickly as reasonable and that a certain price should be charged and after the price is agreed upon it should be adhered to and that price cutting would probably result in loss of grain. He said instances had been brought to his notice where farmers were holding off with their threshing until the threshermen had most of the jobs contracted for with the idea that towards the end of the season the hold-offs could get their threshing done at a trifle less expense. He decries this idea and says a certain price should be agreed upon and kept up.

HER WILL RECALLS UNUSUAL MARRIAGE

Des Moines, Ia., Aug. 2.—The will of Mrs. Carrie Rand Herron, founder of the Rand School of Socialism and well known in Iowa as an Iowa heiress, who married Professor Herron, of Grinnell college after Mrs. Herron had divorced him, has come to light in New York city. She died a few years ago in a villa near Florence, Italy, leaving an estate valued at $500,000.

Mrs. Herron left her Italian villa and $200,000 in cash to her husband. She willed $50,000 to her three sons, Elbridge, Rand and George B., in a limited trust. She provided for an annuity of $2,400 for her father in law William Herron.

She also provided that a trust fund created for her husband's children by his first wife should go to the American socialist society if they should die without issue. Any excess amount beyond the specific bequests also are willed to the socialist society, which is made contingent legatee of her sons' trust fund.

The marriage of Professor Herron and Miss Rand in 1901 attracted nation-wide interest. She was the daughter of a wealthy Mississippi river lumberman. The first Mrs. Herron divorced her husband in order that he might marry Miss Rand.

The couple was married at Rochester, N. Y., by the Rev. William T Brown, and the ceremony was unusual. They subscribed to the following statement: "We intend to live together as man and wife." The clergyman then said "As they are united by bonds of reciprocal love, I announce that they are man and wife by every law of right and truth, and I bespeak for them the fervent benediction of all true souls and the abiding gladness that dwells in the heart of God forever."

Following this union they moved to Florence, Italy, where Mrs. Herron purchased a villa.

PRIMGHAR PEOPLE CHEER BOYS LEAVING

Whole of O'Brien County Joined In Farewell Program Given For Selects.

Primghar, Ia., Aug. 1.—The draft of last week and this has taken more than 200 young men from O'Brien county, mostly from the farms. The contingent of 268 which left last week had the largest sendoff that has as yet been seen here. Nearly 2,000 automobiles rolled into town before the exercises of the afternoon preceding their departure, and accommodations were scarcely adequate to take proper care of the 1,000 that live here. The homes of the people were thrown open to the soldier boys and their friends, and the patriotism of the people and the boys that went was manifest all through the program. The crowd yesterday afternoon was not so large, but the boys left with the same good wishes, after an address by R. E. Locke. Forty-five boys were in this contingent.

IS CAUGHT WITH ANOTHER MAN'S CAR

Stranger Headed Toward Sioux City From Council Bluffs Quickly Taken.

Logan, Ia., July 31.—A stranger well dressed, well supplied with money, giving the name of John A. Riley, was lodged in jail here by Sheriff Myers, for stealing an automobile belonging to Sheriff Wilson, Omaha. The car was taken from in front of a restaurant at Council Bluffs when Wilson was eating a lunch. The sheriff of Pottawattamie county notified the sheriff of Harrison county at midnight. Riley explains that a man whose name, and residence he is unable to recall now, offered him $25 for the delivery of the car at Sioux City, and with that thought and understanding he drove the car toward Sioux City, and was taken into custody north of Missouri Valley, and then brought to Logan and lodged in jail.

BAD BLOOD EXISTS BETWEEN TWO TOWNS

Alta, Ia., July 31.—The trouble brewing at Albert City and Marathon, in this county, will not down. Two months ago about 40 young men from Marathon threatened the pastor of a Swedish Lutheran church at Albert City for alleged unpatriotic conduct at the funeral of a young man who had died at Camp Dodge, and the sheriff and county attorney were called in the case to adjust matters.

The minister left Albert City, going to his home in Pennsylvania, but later returned to his charge, and his church received him with a welcome demonstration at which he was presented with a purse of $600.

This roused the ire of O. A. Smith, a merchant at Leverett, and he wrote a scathing article for the Marathon paper in which some harsh things were said. Then Smith was called from his home one night and it is alleged he was badly beaten up. His assailant was found to be an Albert City youth who was to depart for camp. The young man was arrested and taken to the county jail at Storm Lake. Later the Marathon authorities were notified that another delegation was coming from Albert City to again pay their respects to Smith, and a large number of men from Marathon and farmers from Smith's neighborhood stood guard all night at his home at Leverett, but no one came. The feeling is bitter and the business men of the two towns feel the disgrace of such enmity keenly, and an effort will be made to have the council of defense adjust matters so that harmony may be restored.

"I have received another letter from the American aviator, Capt James Norman Hall of Colfax, Ia., who is now in the Saarbrucken prison camp hospital in Germany. He closes by saying 'I am not very happy here, of course. It is a terrible thing to lose one's liberty and I greatly miss flying. I am well treated here and have enough to keep me in health.'"

FOREST CITY MEN AID IN HARVEST

The leader of the corps is Herb Cleophas, who marshalls his men upon the call for help from any farmers in the vicinity. Farmers cut all the grain possible during the day and the "shocking corps" goes out at 6 o'clock in the evening and finishes the job by shocking all that has been cut. Friday evening 16 men went two miles south of town to a barley field on the Kalsemin farm and shocked 20 acres during a rain that came upon them shortly after the work was started. Every man stayed by the job throughout the rain, and each was soaking wet from the downpour

TOO MANY ALIENS GOING INTO ARMY

Des Moines, Ia., July 31.—Too many draft boards are putting alien enemies into the service the state adjutant general's office declares in a statement just issued. The alien enemy law is not well enough understood by many draft board members, this statement further declares. If an alien enemy soldier has been given an opportunity for discharge and expressed his willingness over his own signature to serve he need not be discharged, the instructions declare. In another order just given out it is stated that postal employes considered absolutely essential to the postal service should not be drafted but should be placed in deferred classes.

IOWA TO HAVE WAR EXHIBIT AT FAIR

Des Moines, Ia., July 31.—Arrangements have been completed by Curator E. R. Harlan of the state historical department to have on display in the historical building during the state fair a collection of materials relating to the service of the Iowa soldiers in the present war.

This collection consists of a large number of war relics picked up on the battlefields of Europe by Major Harry H. Polk, of Des Moines, and much other material in the way of documents, photographs, letters and other things collected by the historical department.

CHILD FALLS INTO BED OF HOT CINDERS

Buck Grove, Ia., July 31.—Right after a threshing outfit had pulled away from the Peter Greder farm, two miles east of here, Mrs. Greder heard her two-year-old baby screaming, and hurrying to it found that it had fallen and thrust its hands into the pile of red hot cinders which lay where the fire box had been. The members were seriously though superficially burned.

Washington, D. C., Aug. 1.—The German general staff has officially admitted that "the drive upon Paris is a failure," but has promised the people back home "a decisive blow will be delivered immediately against the Anglo-French front."

In the communique entitled "the situation on the Marne," which appeared yesterday in nearly every German paper, no mention was made of American participation in the defeat.

"The communique," French cables stated, "attempts to make the German public, profoundly deceived, accept the total failure of the ambitious program which was destined to develop into the invasion of Paris and the ultimate crushing of forces of the entente.

GERMAN COMMAN... IN UKRAINE IS KI...

Amsterdam, Aug. 1.—Field Marshal von Eichhorn, the German commander in the Ukraine, and his adjutant, Captain von Dressler, were killed by a bomb in Kiev Tuesday, says an official announcement received here from the Ukrainian capital.

The bomb was thrown at the men while they were driving to their headquarters from the Casino.

The bomb was thrown from a cab which drove close to their carriage as they were approaching the field marshal's residence.

The assassin and the cab driver have been arrested.

It has been established, the telegram declares, that the crime originated with the social revolutionists in Moscow.

The assassin of Field Marshal von Eichhorn was a lad of 23. He declared at the inquiry held after the crime, the advices state, that he came from the province of Ryasan, adjacent to Moscow, on orders from a communist committee to kill the field marshal. He reached Kiev yesterday.

Gen. Hermann von Eichhorn, the German military dictator of Ukraine, had a brilliant career in the armies of the German emperor.

He played an important role in the development of the German military machine.

When the great war broke out he was assigned to the Russian front, where he took part in several campaigns. He was in command of the German army which captured the Russian stronghold of Kovno in August, 1915. He continued to direct operations in southern Poland until Russia's collapse.

In April he was sent to Ukraine to supervise the establishment of a government for the new republic. Upon his arrival he placed the whole republic under German martial law and arrested members of the ministry who, he said, were conspiring against the central powers.

The Ukrainian rada demanded his recall, but he was retained in Ukraine as virtual dictator.

He brought about the overthrow of the Ukrainian government in May and succeeded in placing in authority General Skeropadski, who had since been operating under orders from General Von Eichhorn.

General Von Eichhorn put into effect the confiscation of all stores of food held in the Ukraine. Ruthless measures were adopted against peasants who opposed the confiscation.

Late in May he sent an urgent appeal to Berlin asking that troops be sent to meet the menace of an insurrection in Ukraine.

It was later announced that a large number of troops were held subject to his call. Then General Von Eichhorn asked that engineers, firemen and laborers be sent to him so that the railroads could be kept running.

General Von Eichhorn was born on February 13, 1848, at Breslau. He entered the army in 1866.

Washington, D. C., July 31.—A minimum wage scale will not be applied at this time to industries, the national war labor board decided today. Instead, the determination of a fair living wage will be decided in each case on the basis of the facts at hand.

The chairmen of the board have asked capital and labor to compose their differences on the principles and policies adopted by the board on April 8.

In erately accomplished her military program. They saw themselves condemned to a desperate defensive, while America feverishly rushed to France those divisions without which a Ludendorff victory seemed inevitable.

By his first attack Ludendorff, for his had become the master mind in the German high command, employing the method of a brilliant lieutenant, Hutier, had succeeded where all predecessors had failed. He had pierced and broken an enemy front on an extent of 50 miles and to a depth of 35. After three years and a half of a war of positions, of stagnation, of siege and trenches, he had carried an offensive into open country beyond all defense zones.

Checked in Picardy, Ludendorff carried his offensive to Flanders and again achieved swift and substantial victory. Breaking the allied line south of Ypres he pushed forward 15 miles toward the channel ports, won back all the lost ground of the Passchendaele campaign of the previous year, took Kemmel, which looks down upon the rear of Ypres, and threatened to reduce this restored salient, which had for the British empire the same significance Verdun carried for the French nation. This greater success was not attained, and a sharp repulse on April 29 closed the Flanders battle, but this second episode had served to demonstrate anew the efficacy of German tactics and the advantage of German numbers and interior position. It reopened the question of the arrival of the kaiser at Calais and emphasized again the greatness of allied peril.

The third German blow was in the larger sense even more terrifying than the first. Although two months had passed and the allies had been allowed time to study the German method and prepare an answer, Ludendorff was able in late May to duplicate his March successes, and sweeping across the Aisne and the Vesle, the victorious German troops reached the bank of the Marne once more, after nearly three years of absence. Nor was this all, the British positions in Picardy had lacked any dominating military strength but the French positions at the Aisne were among the finest on the western front. And, as at the Somme Ludendorff had in a week regained all the ground lost in the months of the British offensive of 1916 and the German retreat in the spring of 1917, he now in three days retook all the ground gained by Nivelle in his ill-starred offensive of 1917, and in addition drove south between Rheims and retook Soissons, French since September 12, 1914.

The British defeat in Picardy was the greatest in British military history; the French reverse on the Aisne surpassed the disaster of the first days of the Verdun campaign. As a result of the two successes the German was once more within striking distance of Paris and had thrust wedges forward toward the French capital down the Oise and the Marne valleys. June was only just come and America's forces were still too weak to exercise any decisive influence. There remained the relatively restricted tasks of eliminating the Compiegne and Rheims salient, the one a menace to the community of his operative front between the Oise and the Marne, the other a threat to the rear of this front, and then he could undertake the final venture, a drive straight south upon Paris, which, even if it failed to take the city, might bring his heavy artillery within bombarding distance and enable him to destroy the city if it refused to surrender, and with this destruction he hoped French nerves and French spirit would at last break and the army, after the civil population, abandon a struggle which had cost France so much and still held out the threat of even worse suffering without any promise of ultimate victory.

The Tide Turns.

It may be that this German success, which took the kaiser to the Marne, will prove the last high water mark of the war. Before June was over the tide had changed. Seeking to sweep the French out of the Compiegne region open up the lower valley of the Aisne, insure the continuity of the right wing of his operative front between Soissons and Montdidier by clearing the French out of strong ground and carrying their line into the open ground south of Senlis, Ludendorff launched a fourth blow between Montdidier and Noyon, between the Avre and the Oise. This time there was no surprise, no collapse, the German machine ground its way forward for a short distance, cleared the Lassigny heights and some valuable ground along the Oise. But by the third day it was checked, and Mangin, the deliverer of Verdun, was striking a counter blow on the German flank, which paralyzed the offensive. Compiegne was not taken, at a staggering cost the German had gained a little ground, but his fourth venture had been a failure.

While Ludendorff prepared for the fifth stroke his Austrian colleague, Borevic, struck on the Piave and sought by a supreme stroke, with the largest and finest Austrian army which had yet appeared in Italy under his command, to crush the troops who had been beaten so terribly at the Isonzo six months before. But the Austrian offensive failed dismally, a brief advance, a short desperate period of days when Italian counter attacks held up the advance, then floods and new Italian attacks and the Austrians were driven in disorder across the Piave, losing 250,000 men, innumerable guns, and having suffered in a few brief days a defeat as destructive to their plans for this year as Verdun had proven for the Germans in 1916.

And now last of all checked on the Oise and at the Compiegne salient we have seen Ludendorff in recent days launch his fifth offensive, a colossal attack from the Marne to the Argonne, later restricted to a local operation to break in the Rheims salient and clear his flank and rear against the day when he should resume his drive for Paris. The results of this venture are being written on the map at the present hour. Its failure was immediate and, save in one sector complete. Its failure in all sectors was complete when Foch launched his ever memorable counter attack, in which for the first time American troops in large numbers played a leading part.

America has at last arrived, the despairing call of March had been answered in July, when more than 200,000 American troops participated in the decisive thrust, and American troops in France numbered above 1,200,000.

It seems now, as I write these lines today just four months after Ludendorff's first blow in Picardy, that the worst is over, the consequences of the Russian collapse have been liquidated, if we may not yet wisely fix the time when victory will in the larger sense be won, we have come to the hour when the danger of defeat is passing, probably has passed. The second battle of the Marne has already had consequences recalling the first, as did the French strategy, after four months and at the close of tremendous exertions the Germans are retiring on a broad front from the Marne, the Paris front is disappearing, and on their heels American as well as French soldiers are pressing, while the flood of American troops continues to flow toward France.

As in 1914.

The German problem in 1918 was his problem in 1914. Four years ago British unreadiness and Russian slowness in mobilization gave him six weeks in which to dispose of France, employing the full weight of his military establishment against France. He used the six weeks, he won many battles and drew near to Paris, but the close of the period saw him in retreat, his time exhausted, his blow parried; the Russian menace in the east, no longer to be neglected entirely, destine to make ever growing demands upon him until he was forced to go east and seek what he found—victory and the destruction of Russia.

In March, 1918, the kaiser's new commander could count not upon six weeks but on something like six months in which to bring home the victory. Russia's collapse gave him back the advantages of the first weeks of the war. But again he had to win in the time fixed, for by the end of six months America's aid would begin to become effective, and if he failed in the campaign of 1918 to put one of his great foes out he would automatically lose the initiative, the offensive, the chance for victory in the next campaign, when the American hosts had arrived.

And now, in late July, we see German armies again retiring from the Marne after a severe defeat, the extent of which is still unrevealed. No disaster may come now, as none came in 1914. The German may presently gather up his strength and strike against the British, as he struck in October, 1914. Defeated at the Marne, he may, for a second time, seek compensation in a new effort to open the road to Calais. But the road to Calais ends at the Channel, and it was not by taking Calais but by beating down French or British armies, one at least, both if possible, that the kaiser in his grandiose campaign of the present year was to achieve a victorious peace.

MARRIAGE COST MILLIONS.

New York—Three children of the late Dr. Matthew S. Borden have lost their legal fight to share in the millions left by their grandfather, Matthew C. D. Borden, a cotton financier. He was irrevocably opposed to his son's secret marriage while a student at Yale university to the daughter of a New Haven tailor, and to the subsequent renewal of his marriage vows.

A codicil to his will disinherits the son who chose love rather than wealth. He directed that neither his son, daughter-in-law nor their issue should derive any benefit from his estate.

Both father and son are now dead. The daughters of the latter, Misses Gladys Minerva Muriel Durfee and Harriet Dorothy Borden, all younger than 18, and who live with their mother, through their guardian, asked that the codicil denying them $2,919,000 which would have been their father's share, be declared invalid.

Hearings were conducted before John Couch, as referee, upon the accounting filed by the late John W. Sterling, Bertram H. Borden and Howard S. Borden, executors of the estate. They charged themselves with receiving $8,166,910 and having a balance of $5,120,936. The latter two executors, sons of the testator, announced their intention to divide them Dr. Borden's share, which would entitle them each to $1,009,500. Objections to this disposition were filed in behalf of Dr Borden's children.

The girls are entitled to collect interest on the sum for two years, representing the period between the death of their father and the testator. This is expected to aggregate more than $100,000.

The stand taken by the elder Borden against the marriage was assailed by the special guardian for the children. The codicil, said Daniel J. Mooney, their counsel, had the effect of offering a premium for the dissolution of the marriage by its suspension of income.

The lawyer contented that the girls at least were entitled to one-half of the principal under article eight of the will, which provided for such a payment to each of the testator's sons when they attained the age of 35. Dr. Borden was 41 when he met his death.

Referee Couch admitted that several clauses of the codicil touching upon the marriage were invalid as contrary to public policy. The interest of the testator was paramount, however, he held.

Afghanistan, Guarded.

Basanta Koomar Roy, in Asia.

Afghanistan has no outlet to the sea and hence no navy. But the paramount factor in its life is its state of military preparedness. Out of political and military chaos a new Afghanistan has been created by the supreme genius of Abdur Rahman, the late father of the present Amir. He fought his way to the throne of Afghanistan, and immediately after his recognition set himself to reorganizing the scattered forces of the army.

He introduced a system of compulsory military training by which one man in every seven between the ages of 18 and 20 had to take military training. Thus he planned in course of time to train every man in military science. He had the British manuals of military training translated into Persian and Pushtoo for the use of his army. He hired Turkish officers to train his officers and to drill his men. He built forts all over his kingdom, especially along its frontiers. He established arsenals, two of which those at Kabul and Herat, were under German military experts for some time.

Abdur Rahman used his subsidy money in buying guns, rifles and munitions of war from the British. He built storehouses throughout his kingdom for storing foodstuffs, to be used only in cases of emergency. He built strategic roads—though there is not a single mile of railroad in Afghanistan—over some of the almost impassable parts of his mountain kingdom. His plan was to raise an army of 1,000,000 men, and to have all the means within the land to arm, clothe and feed it.

MODERN SNIPING BECOMES FINE ART

British Officers Have the Work Down to a Scientific Point.

Behind British Lines in France (by mail).—Sniping and countersniping has been reduced to a fine art in modern warfare, and the sharpshooter uses many other branches of the service to assist him. An incident which occurred a few days ago in the British lines in Flanders shows how a little artillery work is sometimes necessary in bringing about the undoing of the German snipers.

Lieutenant Jackson, battalion sniping officer, was walking down the trench when he heard a sudden rattle of musketry—German bullets striking one of the British sniping plates. One of his sniping posts was being battered by German armor piercing bullets. The officer hurried to the scene and with his periscope located the spot where the Germans were firing. It was a big post on some ground behind the enemy firing line, hidden with earth and looking exactly like any one of the other tangled hummocks with which shells and mines had strewn the vicinity. But his trained eye quickly marked out four small apertures which he knew to be loopholes. The excellence of his periscope even enabled him to see the puffs of unburned powder which came from the four hostile rifles at every shot.

"They are behind concrete and steel under that surface mud, sir," said the sergeant. "It won't be easy dealing with them."

"It's a case for the heavy artillery, I'm afraid," murmured Lieutenant Jackson regretfully—he disliked calling in any outside assistance for his snipers.

"I saw the major of that heavy battery which covers us going by a moment ago," suggested the sergeant.

Lieutenant Jackson hurried off down the trench and found the major, who was up on a survey of the enemy line for special targets. A hint of what had developed brought the major back, and a minute later he was in the nearest signal dugout, telephoning instructions to his batery. Meanwhile, Lieutenant Jackson beckoned the sergeant away out of the major's hearing. "Put Haggarty and Brown into Post 9, sergeant," he ordered. "I don't think the Germans have any day communication into that post of theirs, and they will have to bolt for cover over the ridge."

Presently the first heavy projectile came rumbling up from the rear. It burst fifty yards wide in a great splash of earth. The second shell burst in the German firing line, right in front of the sniping post, and tore a huge gap in the parapet. The third fell right on top of the post itself. But the concrete of the structure was strong, and the shell actually ricocheted clear and burst several yards away. "That has frightened them," exclaimed the major suddenly, as four figures appeared from behind the sniping post and raced madly for the crest of the ridge. Just then a shot rang out from the British trench, and the first German pitched forward on his face. The second fell a yard further on. The remaining two were dropped as they reached the crest.

WEIGHS 649 POUNDS; TRAVELS IN A VAN

New York—Martin T. Durkin, in charge of the passport bureau of the customs intelligence service, informed the driver of a moving van that Webster Rusk, Seattle, would have to come into the customs house if he wished to have his passport vised.

"The law," said Durkin, "requires that all passports must be examined inside the customs house."

The driver went out, but returned shortly. He said that Mr. Rusk was out at the end of the van, but for lack of skids, hoists, hydraulic derricks, and the like, would have to remain there.

"Ya see," said the driver, "this Rusk guy weighs 649 pounds stripped and he don't care to move much without the aid of a crane or a plank. I'm responsible for him until I deliver him safely to the Brooklyn pier from where he is to sail for Porto Rico.

"Sorry I couldn't roll into the office," gurgled Rusk to the customs officer after he had vised his passport in the van. "I wanted to come here to a taxi, but this van proved to be more suitable."

Rusk is 19. For some reason the boat for Porto Rico sailed without him. It was said there was no cabin door wide enough to accommodate him.

SINN FEINERS ARE IN NEED OF GUNS

Dublin.—(by mail).—Raids for arms continue in Ireland, and some are reported daily. As a rule the Sinn Feiners meet with no resistance in commandeering whatever weapons are discovered in a raided house. But occasionally the owners fight and the raiders suffer. An attack was made recently by six armed men with blackened faces on a woman's house at Ferbane. A retired army officer living in the house captured two of the raiders an drove the other away. The prisoners were committed for trial to the Assize.

In a case near Tulsk, in Roscommon, a party of men with blackened faces raided a farmer's house in search of arms. They demanded his gun, and when he refused, dragged him out and handled his roughly. He escaped into the house, and finding his gun, turned it against his assailants, who fled. The weapons seized by the Sinn Feiners are in many instances seized by the police in counter raids. The other day several shot guns and ammunition were found in Tipperary. In one house during the seizure the police came upon a board of 150 pounds in silver, which they took away.

WAR BRINGS ABOUT UNION OF CHURCHES

New Haven, Conn.—At least temporary union of churches in 18 Connecticut towns has been accomplished within a year owing to circumstances resulting from the war, reports a committee of the Connecticut federation of churches. Denominations joining in the movement were Baptist, Methodist, Congregational, Free Baptist, Lutheran and Independent Methodist. Thirty-seven church organizations now are combining services in 18 buildings. In one town Baptists and Free Baptists united under a Methodist minister.

Each church organization has retained its own officers and adheres to its own denominational beliefs. In most cases, the union is considered a temporary expedient for the period of the war. It is pointed out that the federation of churches is not irrevocable.

WORLD DOMINION IS STILL GERMAN IDEA

Educated Prussian Prisoner Glories In Fact His Country Started the War.

London (by mail).—Despite their four years of fighting, some of the German prisoners of war still are obsessed by the German idea of conquering the world. That unadulterated Prussianism still exists in the German ranks is the conclusion of one British officer who has interviewed a number of the German prisoners. One of them he describes as "an intelligent university man." The British officer quotes their conversation as follows:

"I do not wish to insult you," said the German, "but you English are well intended fools. We who govern in Germany are not like you. We govern the fools; the fools govern you."

"Your principles are sweeping," replied the Briton. "To come down to practice, what have you to say about the guilt of beginning the war?"

"Guilt?" demanded the German; "it was a glory. I claim it for Germany."

"That is hardly your official view."

"The official view is for the fools."

"But you believe in the Prussian purpose behind all this," asked the British officer.

"I do, as in nothing else," replied the German. "The Prussian purpose is God. There is no other. Prussia will rend the veil of the temple, but she will destroy to create. Against Prussian might the world as it exists today will fall in ruins, but Prussia will build a better and more virile world in its place. Strength only will survive. The life of men is naturally a fight. The strongest in force and cunning will live."

"It will be going back to the flood," said the Briton.

"Prussia is the flood."

"And when the old world is drowned, virtue and all such weaknesses will go with it?"

"The old virtue was womanish," said the prisoner. "The new virtue is strength."

"In that blessed future will war reign triumphant?"

"Life is war—all of life that is healthy. Peace is only striving for mastery with other weapons. That is the law of nature."

"So everyone will fight till everyone is dead?"

"The weakest will go under. They are the diseased. The stronger will live; and after that the stronger and stronger, till there is perfect health."

"But it may be that Prussia will keep a few slaves?"

"Certainly," said the German. "Those who care not to fight that they may rule are in their nature slaves."

"I had had enough of it," the officer concluded. "It was nauseating. But the man was genuine in his beliefs, and so obsessed by his elementary motion of virility that it was a waste of time to argue with him. His conceptions were quite definite and not a doubt assailed him. The hideous world of his vision seemed to him a natural and a glorious world."

PERSHING IN ENGLISH EYES

W. Beach Thomas, of the London Daily Mail, in Harper's Magazine.

What of General Pershing, who will one day have as great an army as any? The question is asked as often in Europe as in America. It is not, I think, known in America how deep a first impression his character as man and soldier has made on the British and, indeed, the French; but I can only speak within the sphere of my personal knowledge.

The feeling of confidence in his future (which is in no degree sentimental and exists principally among the higher authorities in the army and in politics) was due to a masterly note contributed by General Pershing to the question of unity of command, a note afterward developed into a memorandum described by Mr. Lloyd George as among the most able ever penned.

When he landed in England in June, 1916, one of the British newspapers whose correspondent had been for a long while in his presence compared him with Moltke, who was "silent in 17 languages." What General Pershing, the master of several Philippine dialects, said was little and good. When General Joffre shook his hand in Paris a few weeks later—a scene worthy of a great historical memorial—he said to one of his staff: "General Pershing will think first and act afterwards." At all junctures the general has been cool and prompt and determined. His colonel in Cuba wrote of him: "He is the bravest and coolest man under fire I ever saw in my life." His own recorded maxims are few; but at the most worrying crisis in France—when news of the arrival of American troops was published while some of those troops were still in the danger zone at sea—he said: "I do not worry, and when the day's work is over I go to sleep."

One of the most vivid English writers said to me after we had watched some of the first American troops land at a base in France: "I did not see among the lot a single muddled face." The compliment was real, if negative in form; and the general of those troops deserves it in double measure. He is in that respect their epitome. Face, voice, figure, thought—all are clear cut, candid, definite, manly.

Necessary Building Approved.

From Stone.

"The government has at last made clear that it does not desire, and has never desired, to put a stop to necessary building construction," said N. F. Hoggson, president of Hoggson Brothers, builders, to a New York reporter recently. "The individual or corporation confronted with a building problem need only answer one question—Is the building essential?"

Secretary McAdoo has stated in unequivocal terms in a letter to Senator Calder, which forms a part of the Senate records, that 'there has never been any suggestion that buildings actually needed for the health and protection of the civil population, or for the conduct of essential business of the country, should not be constructed during the period of the war.' A great number of contemplated necessary building operations have been postponed because of an erroneous interpretation of the government's wishes. These should now go ahead.

Safest Way, Too.

From the Boston Transcript.

"Why is it that you never mention your ancestors?"

"Because I believe in letting bygones be bygones."

In order to prevent the rush of workers the British board of trade tramways committee suggests that industrial concerns should "stagger" their times of opening and closing. By taking on and discharging work people at intervals of 10 minutes or so the cars could be worked more economically and there would be a continuous stream of passengers, instead of the present rush at certain hours.

The Problem

By Ella Charlotte Hammond

(Copyright, 1917, Western Newspaper Union.)

For six hours Eustace Warde had crouched in the long grass and shrubbery surrounding a pretty bungalow, moving from spot to spot cautiously, furtively. He was bent on a special mission, whose issues were vital and he dared not take any risk as to being discovered and defeated in his design.

"The sister was right," he soliloquized, feeling that he was handling a hard problem. "I haven't caught even a fleeting glimpse of the girl. She must be in the house, though, and, just as she wrote her sister, the place is guarded."

This latter fact was evident. Seated knitting in a rocking chair in the garden so as to command a perfect view of all the entrances and exits of the house, was a portly, keen-eyed woman who swept the prospect with a probing glance every other minute. On the other side of the house, reclining on the grass, a gun by his side, was a man past middle age, apparently the husband of the other watcher.

"He doesn't look as smart and vigilant as the woman," decided Warde. "Twice he has nodded. Ah! he is gone now. Dare I venture a rush for the house?"

Warde could distinctly catch the sound of muffled snoring. The man lay perfectly still, his face buried in his arm. Across a 40-foot space Warde glided. He darted through a doorway to find himself in a narrow hall. Then beyond its other end he made out a graceful feminine figure.

"Miss Alice Boyden?" he spoke in a low tone, and as he extended an envelope toward the amazed girl he added quickly: "From your sister at Melville."

The hands of Alice Boyden trembled as she opened the letter and hurriedly perused its inclosure. She was at once aroused to manifest animation and excitement. The young man pressed close to her side.

"Beyond the grove yonder," he said, "I have a horse and buggy. Don't delay. The man outside is asleep, the woman is on the other side of the house and cannot observe your escape. Come."

His frank, open face pleased her. Besides, did he not come from her sister, Lucia, and under the directions of Lucia's husband, who was a lawyer? And was she not practically a prisoner, surrounded she knew not by what sordid plots and plotters?

Her father had died leaving a fairly large estate. His half-brother, Hugo Blair, dominated the town. Through one of his creatures, a judge, Blair had been appointed guardian of Alice and had been given arbitrary charge of the estate. He did not intend that the rich pickings should escape his clutches.

In a vast flurry Alice followed the directions of her helper and guide. A great sigh of relief escaped her lips as they passed the sleeping sentinel in safety. They reached the grove. The color came back to that fair face, her shining eyes expressed her deep gratitude as the horse started up.

Warde took a lonely road, but they were seen by quite a number of persons, and he urged the mettled steed to his best pace, fearing pursuit. It was just at dusk when they reached the end of the one traversed road in that wild district. Beyond it spread a 20-mile stretch of prairie, smooth as a floor. Twenty different trails had been broken through the high pampas grass. The horse was tired and Warde allowed him to rest. Then they resumed their journey.

"Look!" exclaimed Alice, an hour later.

Perhaps two miles distant, and seemingly directly on their trail, was an automobile. Its rapid puffing echoed faintly, but its lights flared like evil eyes probing to locate the refugees.

"It is Mr. Blair's machine!" fluttered Alice in terror. "He will overtake us. Oh, do not delay! Let us hurry forward."

Warde had halted the horse. Now he ran back about a hundred yards. He flared a dozen matches. He set the grass blazing in a dozen places. Then he leaped into the buggy and urged up the horse. He knew that the automobile would not dare dash into the advancing mass of flame, nor traverse the burned-over route where a spark might precipitate an explosion.

Warde was right. They reached Melville in safety. At once Alice was hurried to another town and placed in charge of a lady friend, and the lawyer prepared to legally dispute the jurisdiction of the scheming half-uncle. He called upon Alice a few days later.

"I don't know what the result may be in the courts," he told Alice gravely. "It is a pity there is not some favored young man who could give you his name and his love. That would completely baffle Hugo Blair."

Alice blushed, and perhaps with reason. She had not ceased to think of the clever and self-possessed young man who had rescued her from the enemy. Craftily or incidentally, the lawyer sent Warde with a message one day. The wily lawyer smiled to himself as he noted the happy light in his young partner's eyes upon his return.

"I fancy the problem will soon be solved," he told his wife, and it was, for when Hugo Blair came upon the scene with all kinds of dreadful legal documents, he found it of no avail, for he had to deal with Alice's husband this time.

SWIFT & COMPANY U.S.A.

Profits and Prices

Profits may be considered from two angles:

1st*—Their effect on prices;
2nd*—As a return to investors.

When profits are small as compared with sales, they have little effect on prices.

Swift & Company's profits are only a fraction of a cent per pound on all products sold, and if eliminated entirely would have practically no effect on prices.

Swift & Company paid 10 per cent dividends to over 20,000 stockholders out of its 1917 profits. It also had to build extensions and improvements out of profits; to finance large stocks of goods made necessary by unprecedented requirements of the United States and Allied Governments; and to provide protection against the day of declining markets.

Is it fair to call this profiteering?

THE TEETH OF THE TIGER

BY

MAURICE LEBLANC

TRANSLATED BY

ALEXANDER TEIXEIRA DE MATTOS

CHAPTER THIRTEEN (Continued.)

"That will do, I say!" repeated the Prefect harshly "If you're afraid, you can take advantage of the order which I gave you and go off after Don Luis."

Mazerroux clicked his heels together and, old soldier that he was, saluted:

"I shall stay here, Monsieur le Prefet."

And he turned and went back to his place at a distance

Silence followed. M. Desmalions began to walk up and down the room, with his hands behind his back. Then, addressing the chief detective and the secretary general:

"You are of my opinion, I hope?" he said

"Why, yes, Monsieur le Prefet."

"Well, of course! To begin with, that supposition is based on nothing serious And, besides, we are guarded, aren't we? Bombs don't come tumbling on one's head like that. It takes some one to throw them. Well, how are they to come? By what way?"

"Same way as the letters," the secretary general ventured to suggest.

"What's that? Then you admit——?"

The secretary general did not reply and M. Desmalions did not complete his sentence He himself, like the others, experienced that same feeling of uneasiness which gradually, as the seconds sped past, was becoming almost intolerably painful

Three o'clock in the morning! . . The words kept on recurring to his mind. Twice he looked at his watch. There was 12 minutes left There was 10 minutes. Was the house really going to be blown up, by the mere effect of an infernal and all-powerful will?

"It's senseless, absolutely senseless! he cried, stamping his foot.

But, on looking at his companions, he was amazed to see how drawn their faces were; and he felt his courage sink in a strange way. He was certainly not afraid; and the others were no more afraid than he. But all of them, from the chiefs to the simple detectives, were under the influence of that Don Luis Perenna whom they had seen accomplishing such extraordinary feats, and who had shown such wonderful ability throughout this mysterious adventure

Consciously or unconsciously, whether they wished it or no, they looked upon him as an exceptional being endowed with special faculties, a being of whom they could not think without conjuring up the image of the amazing Arsene Lupin, with his legend of daring, genius, and superhuman insight.

And Lupin was telling them to fly Pursued and hunted as he was, he voluntarily gave himself up to warn them of their danger. And the danger was immediate. Seven minutes more, six minutes more—and the house would be blown up

With great simplicity, Mazeroux went on his knees, made the sign of the cross, and said his prayers in a low voice The action was so impressive that the secretary general and the chief detective made a movement as though to go toward the Prefect of Police.

M. Desmalions turned away his head and continued his walk up and down the room. But his anguish increased; and the words which he had heard over the telephone rang in his ears; and all Perenna's authority, his ardent entreaties, his frenzied conviction —all this upset him. He had seen Perenna at work. He felt it borne in upon him that he had no right, in the present circumstances, to neglect the man's warning.

"Let's go," he said.

The words were spoken in the calmest manner; and it really seemed as if those who heard them regarded them merely as the sensible conclusion of a very ordinary state of affairs. They went away without hurry or disorder, not as fugitives, but as men deliberately obeying the dictates of prudence.

They stood back at the door to let the Prefect go first.

"No," he said, "go on; I'll follow you."

He was the last out, leaving the electric light full on.

In the hall he asked the chief detective to blow his whistle. When all the plain clothes men had assembled, he sent them out of the house together with the porter, and shut the door behind him. Then, calling the detectives who were watching the boulevard, he said:

"Let everybody stand a good distance away; push the crowd as far back as you can; and be quick about it. We shall enter the house again in half an hour."

"And you, Monsieur le Prefet?" whispered Mazeroux. "You won't remain here, I hope?"

"No, that I shan't!" he said laughing. "If I take our friend Perenna's advice at all, I may as well take it thoroughly!"

"There is only two minutes left."

"Our friend Perenna spoke of 3 o'clock, not of two minutes to 3. So——"

He crossed the boulevard, accompanied by his secretary general, the chief detective, and Mazeroux, and clambered up the slope of the fortifications opposite the house.

"Perhaps we ought to stoop down," suggested Mazeroux.

"Let's stoop, by all means," said the prefect, still in a good humor "But, honestly, if there's no explosion, I shall send a bullet through my head. I could not go on living after making myself look so ridiculous"

"There will be an explosion, Monsieur le Prefet," declared Mazeroux

"What confidence you must have in our friend Don Luis!"

"You have just the same confidence, Monsieur le Prefet."

They were silent, irritated by the wait, and struggling with the absurd anxiety that oppressed them They counted the seconds singly, by the beating of their hearts. It was interminable.

Three o'clock sounded from somewhere.

"You see," grinned M. Desmalions, in an altered voice, "you see! There's nothing, thank goodness!"

And he growled·

"It's idiotic, perfectly idiotic! How could any one imagine such nonsense"

Another clock struck, farther away Then the hour also rang from the roof of a neighboring building

Before the third stroke had sounded they heard a kind of cracking, and, the next moment, came the terrible blast, complete, but so brief that they had only, so to speak, a vision of an immense sheaf of flames and smoke shooting forth enormous stones and pieces of wall, something like the grand finale of a fireworks display And it was all over. The volcano had erupted.

"Look sharp!" shouted the prefect of police, darting forward. "Telephone for the engine, quick in case of fire!"

He caught Mazeroux by the arm:

"Run to my motor; you'll see it 100 yards down the boulevard. Tell the man to drive you to Don Luis, and, if you find him, release him and bring him here"

"Under arrest, Monsieur le Prefet?"

"Under arrest? You're mad!"

"But, if the deputy chief——"

"The deputy chief will keep his mouth shut. I'll see to that. Be off!"

Mazeroux fulfilled his mission, not with greater speed than if he had been sent to arrest Don Luis, for Mazeroux was a conscientious man, but with extraordinary pleasure. The fight which he had been obliged to wage against the man whom he still called "the chief" had often distressed him to the point of tears. This time he was coming to help him, perhaps to save his life.

That afternoon the deputy chief had ceased his search of the house, by M. Desmalions' orders, as Don Luis' escape seemed certain, and left only three men on duty. Mazeroux found them in a room on the ground floor, where they were sitting up in turns. In reply to his questions, they declared that they had not heard a sound.

He went upstairs alone, so as to have no witnesses to his interview with the governor, passed through the drawing room and entered the study.

Here he was overcome with anxiety, for, after turning on the light, the first glance revealed nothing to his eyes.

"Chief!" he cried repeatedly. "Where are you, chief!"

No answer.

"And yet," thought Mazeroux, "as he telephoned, he can't be far away."

In fact, he saw from where he stood that the receiver was hanging from its cord; and, going on to the telephone box, he stumbled over bits of brick and plaster that strewed the carpet. He then switched on the light in the box as well and saw a hand and arm hanging from the ceiling above him. The ceiling was broken up all around that arm. But the shoulder had not been able to pass through; and Mazeroux could not see the captive's head.

He sprang on to a chair and reached the hand. He felt it and was reassured by the warmth of its touch.

"Is that you, Mazeroux?" asked a voice that seemed to the sergeant to come from very far away.

"Yes, it's I. You're not wounded, are you? Nothing serious?"

"No, only stunned—and a bit fait—from hunger. * * * Listen to me."

"I'm listening."

"Open the second drawer on the left in my writing desk. * * * You'll find——"

"Yes, chief!"

"An old stick of chocolate."

"But——"

"Do as I tell you, Alexandre; I'm famished."

Indeed, Don Luis recovered after a moment or two and said, in a gayer voice:

"That's better. I can wait now. Go to the kitchen and fetch me some bread and some water."

"I'll be back at once, chief."

"Not this way. Come back by Florence Levasseur's room and the secret passage to the ladder which leads to the trapdoor at the top."

And he told him how to make the stone swing out and how to enter the hollow in which he had expected to meet with such a tragic end.

The thing was done in 10 minutes. Mazeroux cleared the opening, caught hold of Don Luis by the legs and pulled him out of his hole.

"Oh, dear, oh dear!" he moaned, in a voice full of pity "What a position, chief! How did you manage it all? Yes, I see: you must have dug down, where you lay, and gone on digging—for more than a yard! And it took some pluck, I expect, on an empty stomach!"

When Don Luis was seated in his bedroom and had swallowed a few bits of bread and drunk what he wanted, he told his story:

"Yes, it took the devil's own pluck, old man. By Jingo! when a chap's ideas are whirling in his head and he can't use his brain, upon my word, all he asks is to die! And then there was no air, you see. I couldn't breathe I went on digging, however, as you saw, went on digging while I was half asleep, in a sort of nightmare. Just look: my fingers are in a jelly. But there, I was thinking of that confounded business of the explosion and I wanted to warn you at all costs, and dug away at my tunnel. What a job! And then, oof! I felt space at last!

"I got my hand through and next my arm. Where was I? Why, over the telephone, of course! Then it took me quite half an hour to get hold of the instrument. I couldn't reach it with my arm.

"I managed at last with a piece of string and a slip knot to fish up the receiver and hold it near my mouth, or, say, at 10 inches from my mouth. And then I shouted and roared to make my voice carry: and, all the time, I was in pain. And then, at last, my string broke. * * * And then—and then—I hadn't an ounce of strength left in my body. Besides, you fellows had been warned, and it was for you to get yourselves out of the mess."

He looked at Mazeroux and asked him, as though certain of the reply:

"The explosion took place, didn't it?"

"Yes, chief."

"At 3 o'clock exactly?"

"Yes."

"And of course M. Desmalions had the house cleared?"

"Yes."

"At the last minute?"

"At the last minute."

Don Luis laughed and said:

"I knew he would wait about and not give way until the crucial moment. You must have had a bad time of it, my poor Mazeroux, for of course you agreed with me from the start."

He kept on eating while he talked; and each mouthful seemed to bring back a little of his usual animation.

"Funny thing, hunger!" he said "Makes you feel so light headed. I must practise getting used to it, however."

"At any rate, chief, no one would believe that you have been fasting for nearly 48 hours."

"Ah, that comes of having a sound constitution, with something to fall back upon! I shall be a different man in half an hour. Just give me time to shave and have a bath."

When he had finished dressing, he sat down to the breakfast of eggs and cold meat which Mazeroux had prepared for him; and then, getting up, said:

"Now, let's be off."

"But there's no hurry, chief. Why don't you lie down for a few hours? The prefect can wait."

"You're mad! What about Marie Fauville?"

"Marie Fauville?"

"Why, of course! Do you think I'm going to leave her in prison or Sauverand, either? There's not a second to lose, old chap."

Mazeroux thought to himself that the chief had not quite recovered his wits yet. What? Release Marie Fauville and Sauverand, one, two, three, just like that! No, no, it was going a bit too far

However, he took down to the prefect's car a new Perenna, merry, brisk, and as fresh as though he had just got out of bed

"Very flattering to my pride," said Don Luis to Mazeroux, "most flattering, that hesitation of the prefect's, after I had warned him over the telephone, followed by his submission at the decisive moment What a hold I must have on all those jokers, to make them sit up at a sign from little me! 'Beware, gentlemen!' I telephone to them from the bottomless pit. 'Beware! At 3 o'clock, a bomb!' 'Nonsense!' say they 'Not a bit of it!' say I. 'How do you know?' Because I do.' 'But what proof have you?' 'What proof? That I say so' 'Oh, well of course, if you say so' And at five minutes to 3, out they march Ah, if I wasn't built up of modesty——"

They came to the Boulevard Suchet, where the crowd was so dense that they had to alight from the car. Mazeroux passed through the cordon of police protecting the approaches to the house and took Don Luis to the slope across the road.

"Wait for me here, chief. I'll tell the prefect of police."

One the other side of the boulevard, under the pale morning sky in which a few black clouds still lingered, Don Luis saw the havoc wrought by the explosion. It was apparently not so great as he had expected. Some of the ceilings had fallen in and their rubbish showed through the yawning cavities of the windows, but the house remained standing Even Fauville's built out annex had not suffered overmuch, and, strange to say, the electric light, which the prefect had left burning on his departure, had not gone out. The garden and the road were covered with stacks of furniture, over which a number of soldiers and police kept watch

"Come with me, chief," said Mazeroux, as he fetched Don Luis and led him toward the engineer's workroom

A part of the floor was demolished. The outer walls on the left, near the passage, were cracked; and two workmen were fixing up beams, brought from the nearest timber yard, to support the ceiling. But, on the whole, the explosion had not had the results which the man who prepared it must have anticipated

M. Desmalions was there, together with all the men who had spent the night in the room and several important persons from the public prosecutor's office Weber, the deputy chief detective, alone had gone, refusing to meet the enemy.

Don Luis' arrival caused great excitement. The prefect at once came up to him and said:

"All our thanks, monsieur. Your insight is above praise. You have saved our lives; and these gentlemen and I wish to tell you so most emphatically. In my case, it is the second time that I have to thank you."

War Taxes—How Levied in England.

Thomas W. Lament, in the Review of Reviews.

In England, the government from the beginning realized that the demands of the fighting forces are limited only by the sources of possible supply. In framing their financial program they have never lost sight of that factor. They have levied what they have considered as heavy taxation as the nation could bear, without crippling its industries and making it impossible to obtain what had to be borrowed. They have increased the tax levies each year, but they have been careful to make the increase of such proportion that the country could adjust itself to the increased burden without, as the chancellor of the exchequer has said, shaking to the foundations the whole structure of their financial strength.

In the first year of the war, Great Britain increased taxes only slightly. The main factor was to keep business going at full speed. In the second year about 9 per cent of Britain's war expenditures was raised from taxation. In the third year 17 per cent came from taxes, and about 18 per cent in the fourth year. In presenting its budget for this, the fifth year, the British treasury proposes to raise about 21 per cent of the war expenditures from taxes. Notwithstanding the fact that the government in England has recognized the necessity of keeping enterprise and industry going at full speed, and has applied the pressure of war taxation gradually, the chancellor of the exchequer in his budget speech a few weeks ago called the attention of parliament to the fact that he had had to give careful attention to the winding up of businesses that, owing to the pressure of taxes, had been forced to haul in their horns. And there is little business being done in England today that isn't "essential" business.

Here in America, when we were framing our financial program for the first war year, we talked about a 50-50 plan; that is, we talked about spending $21,000,000,000 in that first year and about raising 50 per cent of the money by taxation and the other 50 per cent by issuing bonds. As already noted, our actual expenditures will apparently not go over $13,000,000,000. When we deduct from that sum our loans to allies, we find that, in the first year we are raising at least 50 per cent of our actual war expenditures from taxation, whereas England raised only 18 per cent in her fourth year and proposes only 21 per cent in her fifth year. No other country in this war, or in any previous war, has gone so far as the United States has gone in the way of taxation.

It can be said to the country's credit that it has withstood the shock, dented but not broken'

The bulk of England's increased taxation has been put upon incomes and the so-called war profits In America, the income tax is still something of a novelty, while in England it is over 100 years old. There it has been through the process of long development, and the country has become well adjusted to that form of levy. During the war the rates have been gradually increased and the exemption has been lowered The budget for the coming year indicates revenue from income tax almost seven times the same received from this source in the last pre-war year

And in the coming year the British budget estimates $1,500,000,000 revenue from the excess profits duty Here again the treatment of business is on liberal grounds. Pre-war profits which were fixed as a standard or base on which to determine excess profits, were defined as the average of any two of the three pre-war years, and in England this period was one of good general business. Only the profits in excess of the standard determined are taxed without regard to the rate of return on capital. There are no graduated taxes such as were enacted in the United States In the first year a flat rate of 50 per cent on the excess amount was imposed In the second year this was raised to 60 per cent, and in the third year to 80 per cent The chancellor of the exchequer stated in his recent budget speech that he had refused to increase the rate for the coming fiscal year

There has been no disposition in England to tax business out of existence, or to cripple business or individuals by taxing incomes away unreasonably and excessively; thus to discourage enterprise and industry. Tax rates have increased year by year, and so have taxable incomes. Thus where the gross income coming under review by the incomes tax assessor for the year 1913 14 amounted to $5,000,000,000, in the year 1916-17 this amounted to $8,300,000,000.

Prosperity and Confidence.

Now we in our turn must realize that if our output is to be at all sufficient to supply the great, urgent demands of our fighting forces and those of our allies, then we must see to it that business prosperity, that confidence in our credit structure be not shaken The momentum we have now gained must be accelerated, not checked; sources of revenue must flow abundantly, not dry up, channels of expenditures must be enlarged, not blocked. In that way, and in that way alone, our government will be able to spend all the money it can raise, and to raise all the money that it can spend

SOUTH AFRICA AND ARGENTINE PUSH TRADE

World War Has Developed Commercial Intercourse Between Two Countries.

Buenos Aires, (by mail).—A very important commercial intercourse has developed with the last few months between the Argentine republic and South Africa. This is all the more striking because there was not enough trade between the two countries a year ago to be worth mentioning. When a direct line of Japanese steamships was inaugurated between Yokohama and Buenos Aires, calling at Cape Town, the South African government sent a trade commissioner to Buenos Aires and within a very short time he succeeded in inaugurating a flow of business in both directions that is rapidly assuming large proportions.

This commissioner then returned to South Africa to continue his work there and has just come back to Buenos Aires again to supervise the important transactions which, by his initiative, are now taking place between the two countries. The volume of business which these transactions represent at this stage already exceeds $2,500,000.

The goods now being exported to South Africa are such as to have aroused interest and surprise among Argentines. For example the South African union either has imported or is in the act of importing 13,500 tons of steel rails and accessories valued at $1,500,000; 24,000 pairs of shoes valued at $75,000; slaughter house by products such as bone meal, dried blood, etc., valued at $75,000; leather to the value of more than $150,000; 10,000 casks of linseed oil; 20,000 cases of canned meats, valued at $225,000; locally manufactured chemical products, mattress wire and between 700 and 800 tons of wheat. South Africa also is buying Argentine hard wood railway ties.

But the trade is not all one way. Argentina has recently taken from South Africa hessians to the value of $100,000, ostrich feathers, tea, lucerne seed, wines brandy and gin, as well as coal in considerable quantities. Two cargoes of South African coal have arrived here within the last few days and more is on the way. This coal has been thoroughly tried on the railways and is giving entire satisfaction, so that is probably will form one of the principal articles of trade between the two countries in the future. It is of particular interest to note the growth of Argentine industries to an extent that permits of the export on a comparatively large scale of manufactured goods as boots and shoes, and semi-manufactured goods such as leather. The market for Argentine shoes and leather in South Africa appears to be excellent. Already Argentine representatives of these industries have visited or are visiting South Africa on behalf of their factories, with satisfactory results.

As the Germans See Him.

Michael A. Morrison, in "Side Lights on Germany."

At regular intervals selected correspondents are permitted to write letters from "Grand Headquarters," descriptive of the life led by the kaiser, and of the deeds of manhood, chivalry and piety which fill it. All of these, of course, unite in describing his imperial majesty as a Twentieth century Bayard, with the tender heart of a St. Francis, and the mystic piety of a St. Thomas A. Kempis.

We are informed that the army immensely enjoys those days when the kaiser visits the front. The things he has said at the front will fill a shining page when the history of the war comes to be written. The soldiers' eyes fill with tears when they see him. They are proud to hear that he has been in their trenches.

His majesty, we hear, always manages to be at the front on great occasions. You might think he is averse to fatigue. Not a bit of it! He likes fatigue. He has traveled longer distances by motor car than any of his generals. Sometimes on these trips he meets a marching regiment, and here is where his gentle knighthood is seen —he tells the chauffeur to go slowly lest the men be inconvenienced by the clouds of dust from his car! Or he stops, and cries out to the men, "Guten Morgen Leute!" and they reply, "Guten Morgen Majestat!" their eyes again full of tears. Again we hear that story of the kaiser tasting the soup prepared for the soldiers' dinner. "Give me a mouthful, he asks the cook, and he gulps down the stuff condescendingly that even the generals' eyes fill with tears. "I eat what my soldiers eat," says this historic personage, and the soldiers cheer

Chivalry of an almost unexampled character was displayed in the kaiser's treatment of prisoners We read of French officers who were so affected and dazed when they saw the kaiser majesty that they were rendered speechless, and even their eyes filled with tears.

But it is piety which mainly impresses the correspondents. A characteristic passage is the following: "There is something sacred which accompanies the emperor on all his ways, and this is his unshakable confidence and faith in the Creator. This piety streams out from him over the entire army. Those who have seen the kaiser at a field service will never forget the sight. When the kaiser joins in the singing of "Wirtreten zum Beten," his eyes raised to heaven, we remember his words of last autumn: "One must trust God is always in a majority."

SOME IRISH PRIESTS AGAINST SINN FEIN

Dublin, (by mail) —Some of the Irish priests, particularly in County Wexford, have been speaking strongly against the Sinn Fein movement. Very Rev. Canon Walsh, presiding at a meeting of the Crossabeg and Ballymurn branch of the United Irish league, said the prospect before Ireland was a gloomy one, as the "criminal lunacy" Sinn Fein" was turning all Ireland's friends against her By insulting and trampling upon the American flag and cheering for Emperor William he said the "unruly Sinn Fein faction" was turning the French republic, the American nation and the English democracy into bitter enemies of Ireland.

Rather than gain independence for Ireland they were more likely to get 20 years of coercion and martial law. If any general support were accorded by Irishmen to the antics of the "intolerable faction" whose record, said Canon Walsh, so far was one of disgrace, disruption and disaster The dean of Ely, England he continued, was favorably disposed toward Irish affairs and was willing to do them justice, but they would never consent to the lunacy of total separation and, until the evil spirit of Sinn Fein was banished from the land, Ireland would labor under the yoke of oppression. Resolutions were passed at the meeting condemning the latest German outrage in murdering seven innocent fishermen off the Galway coast, and denouncing the Gaelic league as "a branch of Sinn Fein."

STAND BY HER, BOY!

From "The Man Without a Country," by Edward Everett Hale.

For your country, boy, and for that flag, never dream a dream but of serving her as she bids you. Though that service carries you through 1,000 terrors. No matter what happens to you, no matter who flatters you or abuses you, never look at another flag, never let a night pass but you pray to bless that flag. Remember that behind all these men you have to deal with, behind officers of government, and people even, you see the country herself, your country, and that you belong to her, and you belong to your own mother. Stand by her, boy, as you would stand by your mother.

...my Makes Record Meat Purchase.

Chicago.—The largest single order bacon and canned meats in the tory of the world—90,000,000 unds of bacon and 134,000,000 pounds canned meat—has just been placed the Quartermaster's Department, S. A., for the American Army overas.

Louis F. Swift, in commenting on s today, said the order will take bacon from approximately 1,000,000 hogs, and if other work were opped to produce it, would be equivent to the total bacon production of e five largest Chicago packers for arly five weeks. However, six months ll elapse before delivery is to be cometed. Mr. Swift said:

"At the current prices on the day, week, when the purchase was ade, the packers would pay the live ock producers about $80,000,000 for e necessary hogs and over $50,000,000 about 900,000 cattle required. The ttle will cost us twice as much, and hogs two and one-half times as uch as in the pre-war period.

The whole order will be made up before the first of the year, despite the ct that, even before this purchase, e-fourth of the packers' facilities ve been devoted to filling military mands. In order to get out the nned goods the packers will find it cessary to employ night and day fts of canners. Notwithstanding fact that the products are being shed forward this hurriedly, not a gle complaint has been received on ats delivered to the armies abroad. The five packers are now killing out 360,000 hogs weekly to keep reast of martial and domestic needs."

FATHERS AND SONS.

From the London Times

Four years ago, when prophets held that three years, at the most would see the war through, boys born in 1900 were not inclined to take a very clear view of their chances of service. The overturn of the world seemed rather fine to live amidst at one remove but still outside themselves. Elder brothers on service were enviable fellows. "No such luck for us youngsters." It would be all over before we could be of military age. Spectators they expected to remain.

But there came a day when the boy realized that he might get a look in after all. The khaki of everyday school wear took a new meaning. It became a foreshadowing of a possible reality. And with that conviction came a gradual change, curious for parents and guardians to watch. Not that the boy ceased to be a boy in all outward essentials, but something different had been added, a hint of gravity, an increase of common sense, an interest in public affairs that used not to develop very strongly until the university was reached, a general impression that he could nation had been laid upon him. He was taking it up in earnest, and any burdened way but with a serious the seriousness will not be lived games, where one must be whole hearted or fail.

To his father the boy's sudden leap to manhood has been a revelation somewhat disconcerting. What his mother thinks of it has not been told. The days creep on toward his birthday. It seems but yesterday that he was an infant. In a few weeks more his country will have claimed him.

But if the father had something of a shock when he discovered that the years of war had stolen away his boy untimely, he has compensation deep and wonderful, in the man thus suddenly set before him. For in twilight talks it is indeed a man that now sits beside him, a man with all the freshness and charm of boyhood still unshed, more gracious perhaps and winning by its whimsical contrast with the new, strange gravity of certain moods. It lightens the brooding shadow of uncertain fate, which to the elder will not be denied; it purges of everything morbid that inevitable misgiving. The boy accepts the fortune of war gladly. These last years have been crowded with glorious life he looks only for something more glorious. And those who remain behind have a priceless possession—a remedy of good and evil fortune.

For, let the event be what it may, there cannot now be any sense of utter incompleteness in that young life. The boy may have ripened before his time as men accounted time in the sleek days of peace, but nature or Providence has spared him unhealthy precocity, and has vouchsafed a glimpse, and more than a glimpse of the man watched for, wondered over with a myriad tender hopes and surmises for 18 fleeting years, and now on a day we looked not for it suddenly revealed in full stature. It is as though the eternal law of compensation had ordained this clear provision of a character that might otherwise have remained only a fond speculation. But here is a comforting measure of certainty. It is a man that will go forth to war, a man not merely dreamed of, but one whom we have seen and known that will receive our parting blessing. "Macte virtute esto!"

SAMPLE OF GERMAN TREATMENT OF OTHERS

Amsterdam An imaginary dialog between a Dutchman and a German published in the Telegraaf shows the state of public opinion over the German refused to permit Dutch ships to sail for America to bring wheat for Holland.

"Why are you always pestering me? Why don't you hold your tongue," the German demanded.

"But why can't I have wheat for my bread?" asked the Dutchman.

"What do I care about that? Don't I send you coal?"

"Yes but——"

"None of your impudence," retorts the German. "And what do you send me in exchange?"

"Vegetables, cheese and milk. Also meat, and a little of everything besides. And I give you credit for it, too," replied the Hollander.

"What are you complaining about, then? Be thankful that I still allow you to trade with me. I might have taken everything I wanted of you without giving you a scrap in return."

"Have you the right to do so?"

"Right? I make my own right," is the German response.

"But my wheat?"

"Why should you have wheat? Have we any wheat?"

"At least allow us to give tonnage to America in exchange for wheat."

"Certainly not. If you give tonnage you strengthen the enemy, and he who does that is my enemy also."

"And what do you do to your enemy?"

"I club him to death and take all he possesses."

"Then if I give up tonnage you club me to death, and if I don't, I starve to death?"

"I don't object," says the German. "Do I ask you to keep alive? It is we who must live; you don't matter."

Ear Plugs for Burmese.

Burmah Correspondence Cleveland Leader: All the girls here wear ear plugs. They cannot enter society without them. As a maiden approaches the age of coming out, which is usually at 12 or 13, her ears are bored, and the ceremony is as important to her as the first long dress is to her American sister.

The ceremony is formal and it must be done when the stars are propitious. The family consults the fortune teller for this occasion, and a big feast is prepared. All the relatives and friends attend in their best clothes to witness the piercing. This is done by a professional earborer, who uses needles of pure gold for the rich and silver ones for the poor.

When the exact moment has arrived the girl is laid down upon a mat in the back of the room, and her relatives hold her there while the earborer thrusts the golden needle through the lobe and twists it around into a ring. This he leaves in the ear. The other ear is treated likewise.

While this is going on the bands play, and after it there is a feast. It takes the ear some time to heal. When it is quite well the process of enlarging the hole begins. The needle is pulled back and forth until the sore heals.

If is then taken out and a little cylinder of finely rolled gold is pressed in. This is gradually opened from week to week, stretching the hole larger and larger.

A new telegraph and telephone line is being constructed to connect Colon, Panama, with the small town of Porto Bello situated about 20 miles east of the city at one of the best harbors on the Caribbean coast of Central America. Before the completion of the Panama railroad in 1855, Porto Bello was the Atlantic port for the overland traffic across the Isthmus of Panama.

PROVIDE WORK FOR CRIPPLED SOLDIERS

Are to Be Given Every Opportunity In Addition to Insurance and Pension.

New York—American soldiers and sailors crippled in the war are to be given every opportunity in addition to war risk insurance indemnity and pensions to learn new trades or professions in order that they may resume their place of usefulness in civil life without the handicaps that ordinarily surround a man deprived of arms, legs sight or hearing.

One of the most interesting institutions that has been established here as a result of the war, is the Red Cross Institute for crippled and disabled men at 311 Fourth avenue where four schools the nuclei of others that are it is said to be organized in Chicago St. Louis and other places, are now under way teaching cripples the manufacture of artificial limbs, linotype and monotype operating, mechanical drafting and oxycetaline welding. These four to al schools have a capacity for 300 men.

The recent passage by congress of the Smith Sears bill providing an appropriation of $2,500,000 to be used in the discretion of the federal board of vocational education contemplated, it is said the elaboration of the plans which are now being worked out in the city. Soon it is thought, there will be additional schools in many other parts of the United States and other studies and trades will be added to the list. The new law authorizes the commandeering of private and public institutions for the reeducation of crippled soldiers and sailors and where necessary the building of new schools.

Learn Good Trade.

Four trades were selected for the New York school because they were in fields that were not overcrowded. A soldier or sailor, for instance, instead of having to pay $150 to $200 for an artificial limb may procure one for $30 and if he desires be taught to make it himself at the same time acquiring a trade that will pay him $4 to $8 a day.

Frank R. Bigler a cripple for 31 years and minus a leg and an arm, is the industrial agent of the institute which was founded about a year ago by Jeremiah Milbank with an initial endowment of $50,000 and a building in which to carry on its work. Mr. Bigler came from Kansas City, Mo. his services being loaned by an industrial corporation there to instill optimism and good cheer into the minds of all returning war cripples.

Douglas C. McMurtrie director of the institute a graduate of the Massachusetts Institute of Technology and in charge of the department of printing at Columbia University has made a study of the social and economic reconstruction of cripples for more than eight years. Mr. McMurtrie made it clear that while the institute has no official arrangement with the government authorities relative to the utilization of its facilities in the rehabilitation of war cripples that department being in charge of Surgeon Gen. William C. Gorgas when soldiers and sailors are discharged from army and navy hospitals then the institute will offer them every chance to "come back." Positions will be found for the men and where they are unable to pay expenses while learning their new trade funds will be advanced them as a loan to enable them to continue their training until competent to take a job.

The institute however is a national activity of the American Red Cross, responsible to the war council through the director general of military relief, Jesse H. Jones. It is the only non-commercial institution of the kind in the United States says Mr. McMurtrie, and its purpose is broadly humanitarian taking in civilian as well as military cripples. It is not a charitable institution, but intended to be self supporting. "Already the national authorities have gone on record," said Mr. McMurtrie, "as accepting without reservation responsibility for the aftercare of men injured in the service. The surgeon general's office of the war department is now preparing to provide for wounded men not only medical and surgical care, but also the curative advances afforded by the simpler forms of occupation. The government is further inaugurating vocational training, having as its object rehabilitation for self support. The government however is disposed to make use of under due supervision such private assistance as may be offered and found of value."

Protect Olive Trees.

From Food Conservation Bulletin

The felling of olive tree is forbidden by a decree published at Rome March 30, which prohibits also the cutting of the principal branches of such trees except when pruning. It is provided that the regulations may be extended to mulberry trees and fruit trees by ministerial decree. The present decree is effective until the end of the agricultural year following that in which peace is established.

More Than Skeptical.

From the Boston Transcript

Well, Dick, how's business?" said one traveling salesman meeting another.

Rotten! was the answer. How is it with you?"

Fine! Simply fine! On my last trip I sold one man a $6,000 bill and another one $5,000.

So? Well I think I ought to get a commission on those sales."

"Wuddye mean you ought to get a commission on the sales?"

Sure I ought to. If you hadn't met me you would not have made 'em."

The Real Question.

From the St. Louis Times

For some reason the Sunday school class had became interested in Methuselah. At their urgent request the teacher related all the authentic information recorded in the bible about the amazing man, also various anecdotes gleaned from less reliable resources. In conclusion she said:

"Now, is that all? Are there any further questions you would like to ask about Methuselah?"

"I'd like to know," said the most interested youngster of the lot, "where all his birthday presents are buried?"

Josh Comes Back.

From the Buffalo News.

One June day a city man went to the country to see about securing summer board with Uncle Josh, and, arriving about dinner time, he was invited to take a place at the table. This he did, and afterward sauntered out on the veranda and lighted a cigar.

"Let's get down to business, Mr. Jones," said he to the farmer. "I want to say that I enjoyed that meal very much."

"Ye did, eh?" returned Uncle Josh, gazing far over the green fields.

"Yes," responded the city man, "and if that is a fair sample of the meals you serve I think we can easily come to terms."

"Jes a minute," interposed Josh with a thoughtful expression. "First of all I would like to know if that was a fair sample of your appetite."

BREAD MADE WITHOUT SUGAR

Two Processes Said to Have Been Worked Out by Milling Company of Kansas City.

A method of making bread with neither sugar nor malt has been worked out by a milling company of Kansas City, according to the Baker's Helper. This process uses germ middlings, which are ordinarily sold for live stock food. Seven pounds of germ middlings are weighed out for use with 100 pounds of flour, placed in a vessel and scalded with water. After it has stood for a short time, the residium is strained out, and the water is used in making up the dough, adding as much water as is necessary. Sponge made in this way without the use of sugar or malt shows an increased expansion, with a loaf of fine texture and exceptional flavor, a trifle whiter than when sugar is used in baking. The process has been perfected in the milling company's laboratory, and is now being applied commercially. Another process consists in taking 5 per cent of the flour to be used in the bread batch and let it stand for several hours in five times its volume of water, at a uniform temperature of 150 degrees. This makes sugar unnecessary, but does not dispense with the desirability of using malt.

WILLIE FINALLY SAW LIGHT

But it Took Great Blow to Make Him Realize Why Everybody Hated the Kaiser.

It had been very difficult to impress little Willie with the seriousness of the war situation. He could not exactly understand why the people should all hate the kaiser so, but of course he hated him as a matter of principle because his father hated him, and his big brother hated him, and well, almost everybody else he knew hated him.

"But why, mother, do they hate him so awful much?" he would persist. The family couldn't explain it to him satisfactorily.

June came, and the close of school, and all was rosy for little Willie. Now he was looking forward to the Fourth of July.

But a few days before the great day a notice came around that there would not be any fireworks, not even torpedoes, or little mandarins, or "son-of-a guns." This was awful news.

"Why not, mother?" he pouted.

"Well, you see the kaiser is getting all the powder in this country now, and we can't waste it."

Now little Willie sees why everybody hated the kaiser.

"I wisht I was old," he concluded, "and then, beware old kaiser!"—Indianapolis News.

Festus Pester paused in his stroll down Grand avenue to glance in at the window of a motorcar display room.

WEAK KIDNEYS MEAN A WEAK BODY

When you're fifty, your body begins to creak a little at the hinges. Motion is more slow and deliberate. "Not so young as I used to be" is a frequent and unwelcome thought. Certain bodily functions upon which good health and good spirits so much depend, are impaired. The weak spot is generally the bladder. Unpleasant symptoms show themselves. Painful and annoying complications in other organs arise. This is particularly true with elderly people. If you only know how, this trouble can be obviated.

For over 200 years GOLD MEDAL Haarlem Oil has been relieving the inconvenience and pain due to advancing years. It is a standard, old-time home remedy, and needs no introduction. It is now put up in odorless, tasteless capsules. These are easier and more pleasant to take than the oil in bottles.

Each capsule contains about one dose of five drops. Take them just like you would any pill, with a small swallow of water. They soak into the system and throw off the poisons which are making you old before your time. They will quickly relieve those stiffened joints, that backache, rheumatism, lumbago, sciatica, gall stones, gravel, "brick dust," etc. They are an effective remedy for all diseases of the bladder, kidney, liver, stomach and allied organs.

GOLD MEDAL Haarlem Oil Capsules cleanse the kidneys and purify the blood. They frequently ward off attacks of the dangerous and fatal diseases of the kidneys. They have a beneficial effect, and often completely cure the diseases of the bodily organs, allied with the bladder and kidneys.

If you are troubled with soreness across the loins or with "simple" aches and pains in the back take warning, it may be the preliminary indications of some dreadful malady which can be warded off or cured if taken in time.

Go to your druggist today and get a box of GOLD MEDAL Haarlem Oil Capsules. Money refunded if they do not help you. Three sizes. GOLD MEDAL are the pure original imported Haarlem Oil Capsules. Accept No Substitutes.—Adv.

Watch Your Stomach In the Summer Time

Hot summer days upset the strong stomachs as well as weak ones.

Your vital forces reach their lowest level when the weather is the hottest. Then the danger is the greatest.

You can't guard your stomach and bowels too carefully through the long, hot season. Don't take any chance. Indigestion, sour stomach, that wretched, bloated feeling, belching, food repeating, pains that claw at stomach and bowels and an endless train of stomach ills that make life miserable are greatly aggravated in the hot weather.

This year of all others—it is vital that we keep our strength and full power at work. The extra war work, change of diet—all must be looked after because they hit us in the stomach. And now it is good news to tell you that tens of thousands are now using EATONIC—for all stomach and bowel ailments caused by too much acidity with such truly wonderful results that every one should always have it in the house.

EATONIC Tablets stop the cause of indigestive and dyspeptic ailments by neutralising the poisonous fluids, acids and gases largely the result of superacidity. This makes the stomach pain-free and ready to perform its proper work.

You can have a good appetite in hot weather to eat the things you like when you want them if you take one or two EATONIC Tablets after each meal. Such quick, wonderful relief would seem unbelievable but for the fact that thousands of sufferers everywhere have received marvelous results from EATONIC. Obtain a large box of EATONIC Tablets from your own druggist who you know and can trust. If they fail, go back to him and he will gladly refund your money. Do this today. You will then know what real stomach comfort means in hot weather.

Scenes of Prosperity

Are Common in Western Canada

The thousands of U. S. farmers who have accepted Canada's generous offer to settle on homesteads or buy farm land in her provinces have been well repaid by bountiful crops of wheat and other grains.

Where you can buy good farm land at $15 to $30 per acre—get $2 a bushel for wheat and raise 20 to 45 bushels to the acre you are bound to make money—that's what you can do in Western Canada.

In the provinces of Manitoba, Saskatchewan or Alberta you can get a

HOMESTEAD OF 160 ACRES FREE

and other land at very low prices.

During many years Canadian wheat fields have averaged 20 bushels to the acre—many yields as high as 45 bushels to the acre. Wonderful crops also of Oats, Barley, and Flax. Mixed Farming is as profitable an industry as grain raising. Good schools, churches, markets convenient, climate excellent. The following letter from Harry E. Hampell, who is now in active duty over-seas was received by Mrs. W. J. Hampell and given to the Times for publication and will be interesting reading for our subscribers:

ON ACTIVE SERVICE

With the British Expeditionary Forces
July 15th, 1918.
Somewhere in France.

Dear Folks:—

I will try and drop you a few lines. I got your last letter yesterday and was glad to hear from you. I don't see how it comes they sent my mail back, there is so much mail I never get. Well, I am fine and dandy, looking for Germans all the time and they are thick, too. We went Over the Top once, some sport I can tell you. We took a lot of German prisoners and by the looks of them I guess they were glad to come. This is some place over here I can tell you. I would not live here for the whole country. It puts you in mind of the Colony down home only this is worse. When you write my address will be the same only put on it American E. F. and don't wait for me to write for it is hard to get paper half of the time and we don't always have time to write. We are all broke, haven't been paid for 2½ months, don't make much difference here because you can't buy much anyway. We get a lot of hard tack and bully beef to eat so we should worry. Where did you spend the 4th? I don't suppose there is much doing down around there now, you will have to wait till all of us come back. There will be doings then, believe me. How is Burt and Frank? Tell them hello for me. Ask Burt if he goes fishing any more. Bill, I wish you could be here with me, something doing all the time, airplanes, fighting, cannon roaring—you would get used to hearing them. My pen run out of ink and I don't think there is any more in France. They say if I put my name on a slip of paper and tell them what I want I can send it to you and you get the stuff and address it to me. Show the slip to the postmaster and you can send it across, so I am going to try it.

With love to all,
Your brother,
Harry.

The first rear admirals in the United States navy were commissioned in 1862 when that rank was created by an act of congress. David Farragut, for his valor in the civil war, was made vice admiral in 1864, and two years later the rank of admiral in the United States navy was established for the purpose of honoring him. The grade of admiral was revived in 1899 and conferred upon George Dewey, the hero of Manila. The highest rank of American naval officers in active service was, up to a short time ago, that of rear admiral. The title of admiral was first used in France, and the first French admiral was appointed in 1284. A few years later the title was adopted by the English, and the rank of admiral of the English seas was first given to William de Leybourne by Edward I in 1297.

Gold and colored powders can be applied by pad and stencil process on thin fabrics so as to make attractive designs in the following way: Silk or cotton powder is sprinkled on a table, and on it is laid the tissue, held in a frame or otherwise. A zinc stencil is laid on, then a mordant or other adhesive substance is applied, this being a paste made of rye flour, gelatin glycerin and other substances The stencil is raised, then the fabric is lifted off the bed or powder Gold powder, etc., is then sifted upon the surface, and it adheres to the stencil design, producing very attractive effects, flowers or embroidery motifs, gold spangles, even of rather large size, can also be applied.

Sir Bernard Mallet, president of the Royal Statistical society, has declared that the United Kingdom has lost by the fall in births during the war more than 500,000 potential lives During the same period he estimates that Germany has lost 2,600,000 and Hungary 1,500,000 The greater decline in the birth rate in the central empires is ascribed to the fact that the poorer classes in these countries have suffered greatly in health and vigor on account of the war while the corresponding classes in Great Britain have actually enjoyed more favorable conditions than in time of peace.

When Macquarrie island situated 600 miles to the south of New Zealand, was discovered in 1810, it was inhabited by a peculiar flightless parrot, described by a contemporary who saw numbers of the birds which were taken to Sydney by sealers as "the giddiest of the loquacious tribe" Recent investigation of the island makes it almost certain that this strangely isolated specimen of the parrot family is completely extinct, probably as a result of the introduction of cats which have become wild and overrun the island

Here is a little information which will help you to solve the vexing problem that is apt to be a hardy annual, i. e., how much coal to order in order to fill the bunkers, but without having to put some in an old barrel in the outhouse. This may be done by multiplying together the length, breadth and depth of your bin.

Last year our exports in cigarets alone reached the $12,000,000 mark

TERRIBLE CONDITIONS ON IOWA POOR FARM

Stewart Is Ousted By Board of Supervisors—Investigate Other Institutions.

Dubuque, Ia., Aug. 8.—Tim Hanley, stewart at the Dubuque county poor farm, has been discharged by the board of supervisors, following an investigation of the farm and its inmates, conducted by members of the Dubuque Woman's club some days ago. The investigation conducted by the women disclosed the fact that the home was filled with filth and vermin, that the inmates were served with food wholly unfit for human consumption and that the inmates were clothed in filthy rags.

Hanley, a former saloon keeper, has been under fire since his appointment nearly two years ago and charges of drunkenness and carousal have been hurled at him and his administration of affairs repeatedly.

Recently ouster proceedings were commenced by Attorney General Havner against the members of the board of supervisors and a considerable part of the complaint against the members of the board is made up of charges against Hanley.

The disclosures made by the women at the county farm has resulted in the board appointing a committee, composed of prominent citizens, men and women, to investigate the condition of all county charges in the several privately conducted institutions of the county. Sensational disclosures are expected.

NEW DIVISION WILL TRAIN AT CAMP DODGE

Des Moines, Ia., Aug 8.—It is announced that a new division to be known as the Nineteenth United States army will replace the Eighty-eighth at Camp Dodge. The nucleus of this organization is already at Camp Dodge in the men transferred from other camps, in the men in the depot division and in the officers left to take care of the selected men now arriving almost every week.

Officers at the camp express the opinion that there is every reason to believe there will be a speeding up in the training of soldiers in this new division which will make possible its being turned out fit for overseas work in four to six months time. In the first place the camp is now complete in its facilities for training men. There are officers of experience on hand to facilitate the work. It is understood that the practice of taking men away from this camp to fill up divisions elsewhere will be discontinued, and this will greatly facilitate the completion of their training at Camp Dodge. The organization plans of the army has been thoroughly worked out so there will be no delay.

TOWN PEOPLE HELP WITH FARM WORK

Primghar, Ia., Aug 8.—The service rendered by the town men in getting the grain shocked has been considerable They have gone out in groups, some in the afternoons, and others in the evening, starting promptly at 6 o'clock. The groups going out from here have included business men, retired farmers, contractors, ministers, lawyers, bankers, officials and public service men. The farmers have been grateful for the assistance, gladly paying for the same, and in nearly all cases the money has been turned over to the committee in charge of making the comfort kits for the soldiers, whose treasury, overtaxed and depleted last month is once more prosperous.

UNIVERSITY MAN IS CITED FOR BRAVERY

Iowa City, Ia., Aug. 7.—For the second time Prof. Stephen H. Bush, of the University of Iowa, has been cited for bravery by the French government. This citation was the text of a lengthy cablegram from French headquarters to the national council of the Y. M. C. A. and to Mrs. Bush, of Iowa City. Other Y. M. C. A. workers in the same division with Professor Bush have also been cited.

The cablegram received by Mrs. Bush states that the American Y. M. C. A. workers attached to the Moroccan divisions displayed heroism under fire in the present push. "They were constantly under fire," says the message, "for four days at a time, helped the wounded, saved the fallen from death by shell fire and aerial bombs, and carried food and water. The French French medical officers paid glowing tributes to these men and insist on the Foyer du Soldat (Y. M. C. A. hut) men being with them constantly. The men act also as interpreters. S. H. Bush, of Iowa City, is cited for courage and tenacity in bringing in wounded over exposed places. The escape of these men was miraculous. The French are devoted to them and are gaining a high opinion of Americans through contact with them." This was the gist of the cablegram.

GERMAN PEOPLE WILL ASK EXPLANATION OF RETREAT

BY ROBERT J. BENDER.
United Press Staff Correspondent.

Washington, D. C., Aug. 7.—Beaten back to the Vesle river and presenting a shaking front at numerous other points on the great west front line, Germany, in the opinion of officials here, must soon make some reckoning to her people.

It is believed here that she will attempt to dig in soon and set up a bitter defensive front or attempt a new offensive at some other point in the line after she has had an opportunity to reorganize her forces, and, simultaneously, launch the first of a series of progressively attractive peace maneuvers.

That she is in no condition to start a successful offensive action anywhere is the conviction here. The British are stronger than in many months. The Americans and French are demonstrating their increasing effectiveness.

Hence it would appear that Germany's best play would be to [illegible] down to defensive warfare and try to gain peace before the [illegible] battle of the allies'—the action to be launched later to gain a decisive victory.

Strong pressure is being brought [illegible] some of the allies for a determined drive on Austria in the belief that once the armies of freedom got under way there would be widespread revolt in the dual monarchy Turkey and Bulgaria have long since ceased to be an important military figure. Already the signs are hopeful in Russia. A Siberian government has declared it will soon reconstruct the Russian army and place a determined front against the Germans.

At Archangel, where American and allied troops landed last week, the people have rallied to the allied banners Everywhere the feeling is strong for victory will soon be within the grasp of the allies if they sternly refuse to let the Germans hoodwink them into a premature peace

FOCH AGAIN REFUSES HINDENBURG'S LURE

BY J. W. T. MASON.
United Press War Expert.

New York, Aug. 7.—General Foch's high quality of patience is again controlling the allies' strategy south of the Aisne.

Von Hindenburg's enticements to the allies to overrun themselves and fall into carefully prepared German pitfalls are having no more success now than at any time since the retreat from the Marne began.

The Germans are in strong defensive positions north of the Vesle. They are holding their line desperately for the work of moving their guns across the Aisne is a slow and laborous process.

To drive the Germans back by frontal attacks along the Vesle would set a heavy death toll from the allies much in excess of what the Germans would suffer. General Foch has repeatedly shown he will not engage in these shortsighted tactics.

Artillery bombardments or threats to encircle the Germans are the rightly favored methods of attack, under present conditions. It is not worth the heavy cost of direct assaults on the German positions to drive Von Hindenburg beyond the Aisne more rapidly than he must go eventually

The time for the allies' major offensive has not yet come and the few casualties the allies suffer in the meantime, the more certain will the result of the offensive be. It does not matter to General Foch whether Von Hindenburg is compelled to shorten his line now or later The inevitable must happen. Von Hindenburg, however, strongly desires General Foch to try to force the inevitable before its time. If Von Hindenburg can inveigle General Foch into engaging in destructive minor offensives before America's millions are fully prepared, there remains a chance that in the end the allies will have whittled away their new resources.

So Von Hindenburg turns at bay and invites the foremost units of General Foch's troops to engage in pitched battles. But the trap is without avail. General Foch is familiar with all the tricks of the old fox Inexorable fate, the American troops are filing over to France. Time therefore waits on Foch's command, and the pause at the Vesle is an integral part of the allied strategy.

HUNS PLAN RETREAT TO BANKS OF MEUSE, SAYS GERMAN ORGAN

The Hague, Aug. 6.—The Berlin Vossische Zeitung, in a pessimistic article, hints at the possibility of a German retreat to the line of the Meuse, according to advices here.

A neutral traveler, returning from Berlin, declared today that the "man on the street" there is nervous and is beginning to reckon on the ultimate defeat of Germany.

With the British Armies in France, Aug. 6.—Crown Prince Rupprecht's readjustment of his line, especially abandonment of the plateau west of the Avre from Montdidier to the confluence of the Luce, is very significant, as the plateau gave observation of the entire valley of the Noye and the Amiens-Paris railway threading it.

There is gunfire in certain areas, particularly in the Givenchy region, north of the La Bassee canal, where German artillery is active, probably covering a further retirement. Thousands of gas shells were thrown into St. Venant yesterday, and the Ypres, Fletre and Lys sectors, and the back areas were shelled.

British patrols continue extremely busy. Likewise, British artillery is harassing German communications everywhere. This front appears to be increasingly uncomfortable for the boches, prisoners declaring numerous positions have been rendered untenable. The weather conditions showery, adding to their discomfort.

Such a retirement as hinted at in the Vossische Zeitung would mean the relinquishment of practically all occupied French territory and two-thirds of Belgium. The Meuse river, rising 25 miles south of Neufchateau, flows northward through Verdun, crossing the Belgian border south of Dinant. It turns sharply northeastward at Namur, flowing through Liege and crossing the border into Holland near Maastrich.

BY WILLIAM PHILIP SIMMS,
United Press Staff Correspondent.

With the British Armies in France, Aug. 6.—The German armies are at bay. Their full retreat toward the Aisne has forced them to abandon positions along the Avre and Ancre rivers and near Givenchy. The Teuton hordes are face to face with three rock bottom facts.

First, the German summer campaign so far is a complete failure.

Second, their reserves are badly used up.

Third, they are equaled, if not outnumbered, by eager forces, which are being increased weekly by tens of thousands of absolutely fit Americans, who are fidgeting with impatience to get at the Germans.

Von Hindenburg and Von Ludendorff, the German leaders, have only one card left to play and it is a card of doubtful value. It consists of a complete re-arrangement of the western front, suiting it to the altered conditions by shortening the line and adopting a purely defensive strategy behind the rivers and other natural barriers.

This plan would involve the selection of one spot, where remnants of the armies from everywhere would be collected to try for a decision.

This bid for victory, if made, must have the devil's luck, plus all possible aid from the German Gott, plus a large element of the miraculous. Without these conditions, this bit must fail, after which the last spark of Germany's hopes is gone forever.

Over the wreck of what was once the worlds greatest offensive army hovers today the oppressive shadow of defeat. Prisoners admit there is a spirit of hopelessness in the German camp, which is generally spreading to all parts of the army.

I have not spoken of pessimistic letters from Germans to their homes because I believed they did not represent the general feeling. I am convinced, however, that the following letter, from a soldier in the Marne operations to a friend newly arrived at British front from Germany gives a fair idea of the sentiment of a large part of the army.

"You should be a thick thinker. Now shirk all we can for we are still fighting now for the big wigs. At the Marne we did not get very far. Our regiment was nearly wiped out.

"War is becoming the greatest massacre that ever was. What is going to happen I don't know. Germany is slowly crumbling to pieces."

There is evidence that desperate efforts are in progress to coerce Austria to help the Germans in France with neutral labor and help from Austria, Bulgaria and Turkey Russia is being solicited in order to free German workmen for military duty But with all this help, can the Germans construct a real offensive? Prisoners frankly say they do not believe the Germans can continue an offensive movement.

It is too soon to start throwing [illegible] hats into the air or to collect beta[illegible] with ordinary caution and redoubled efforts, particularly in America, [illegible] where the allied reserves are pouring, the fifth year of the war ought to see its finish.

LONEL CHOPS WOOD TO GET DOUGHNUTS

BY MISS GLADYS M'INTYRE.
(Written for the United Press.)

With the American Troops at the at (by mail).—One bright morning w days ago just after we had kened and before we had begun work in the kitchen we heard ese chopping wood just back of canteen. We were pleased, for we ded wood chopped, and it is always r to have some doughboy volun- to do it than to have to ask.

told my sister it must be the home- doughboy who had said the day fore that chopping wood for us took back to home and his mother. He he felt better after chopping some od. After a while we left our billet went around to the kitchen. Who you suppose was out there chopping wood?

t was not the homesick doughboy, or other doughboy, but the colonel of regiment himself. We were too prised to see him swinging the axe know what to say, and almost for- to thank him. He said he liked his job and accepted our invitation have breakfast with us. But the ughboys all say he is encroaching their rights when he chops wood us.

The homesick doughboy was an in- esting problem to us. He had re- ved no mail for four months from me, and read in a paper, one of his s had received, of the death of his ther. His father is not living either, d the poor boy could hardly keep m crying.

Of course we wanted to do some- ng for him, but it is hard to help eryone like that, when you don't ow them. We don't dare to show too ch attention to anyone, no matter much he needs it, because it uldn't be fair to the others. So we t put the homesick doughboy to rk. He did everything we suggested, wood, fixed benches, fried dough- ts, and by the end of the day he s whistling and singing. Work seems be the best thing for them when y are homesick.

rom time to time we have had boys r our canteens who were more help n the ordinary crowd. They usually e more faithful than others, and got be our favorite workers—though we ays tried to stick to our rule and ver be partial.

But we can't let the boys make pies doughnuts. They never would learn do it right, though some of them be trusted with dipping doughnuts, putting the pies in the oven and re- ving them, if we tell them when y are done. We divide the work ong us. I always mix the doughnut ugh and make the pies, and my sis- manages the financial end of the nteen. That arrangement gives us th the work we like best.

We've just renewed the pie business, not, permanently, we fear. We had oven in this little village we are w in, and couldn't bake pies for a g time. But the boys' mouths wa- ed for pie, and finally a lieutenant nd an old French stove in some ins. We had to half bury it to engthen it enough for use, but it orks well enough to give the boys a te of pie every week or so. Pie day most means a riot, so many boys nt a slice.

Willing to Dig.

From the Chicago Daily News.

The conversation in the lobby of a shington hotel turned to the disincli- ion of the tramp to work, when Con- man William H. Carter, of Massa- setts recalled the following anecdote: summer a New England farmer, urgently in need of help and seeing tramp coming down the road, he went and stopped him.

I want a man for a day or two," said farmer to the hobo. "How would you to have a job?"

I don't know," was the hesitating re- der of the tramp. "What kind of a is it?"

Not a very hard one," replied the rmer, encouragingly. "I want somebody help me dig potatoes."

I don't believe I would mind a job of at kind," answered the tramp; "that is, you mean digging them out of gravy."

ALLIED NEWSPAPER MEN GIVEN ATTENTION

London, (by mail).—In order "to facilitate the study of the psychology of the English people" the ministry of information has established in its quarters here an Overseas Press center There, in comfortably furnished club rooms containing a reference library, newspapers and periodicals, the representatives of the press of allied and neutral countries will be in close touch with the ministry.

In opening the center, Lord Beaverbrook, minister of information, said it was important for the journalists to understand the determination of this country to win the war He urged that advantage be taken of the opportunities that would be afforded to study the people. "You will see," he said, "that never have we striven so hard, and you will realize that the British people will persevere to the end Everything depends on the will of the people. The mental attitude of munitions makers is as important as that of the men who fight the battles."

"Too often," he said, "war correspondents pay over much attention to maps. They judge the position by the swaying battle lines. When, however, you understand properly the whole British nation is straining every nerve to attain one great end, and how set backs only stiffen their resolutions, then only can you gauge the true position of affairs. We hope by means of this center to make such an understanding possible."

Newspaper correspondents from many lands, including Japan, were present at the opening.

New Money Record.

From the Washington Times.

Money making, as well as money spending records, have been broken by the government. In the fiscal year ended June 30, 714,139,119 new coins were turned out from the mints of the nation. The mints have been working on a 24-hour basis practically the whole year, the director of the mint stated recently Among the new coins placed in circulation were more than 500,000,000 1-cent pieces, 83,000,000 nickels, 24,000,000 half dollars, 116,000,000 dimes, and about 45,000,000 quarters.

The large number of small coins minted is considered an index to the remarkable industrial activities of the nation.

TWINS IN THE WAR VERY MUCH ALIKE

Officers Unable to Distinguish One From the Other—Have Queer Mixups.

BY FRED S. FERGUSON.
United Press Staff Correspondent.

With the American forces in Picardy, June 17.—(by mail).—When you go to war twice at the same time in the same outfit, maybe you can consider you really are doing your part to whip the boche At least Walter and Albert Grierson are inclined to feel thaat way about it. The only way it can be done, however, is to be a twin.

Walter and Albert are twins. Their father and mother live ata 5212 Lucas avenue, St. Louis. And if Mr. and Mrs. Grierson think they had a hard time telling Walter and Albert apart when they were little, they ought to see the sergeant and company commander trying it. After you know how to identify the twins it's easy. Walter (or is it Albert?) has a mole on one foot. But the sergeant can't tell the twins to take off their shoes every time he wants to pick one of them for some particular job. The result is that Walter and Albert are fighting the war both together and separately, for themselves and for each other, and in addition are—and also is—carrying on a mail courtship.

They are writing Clendine and Geraldine Smalley, who live in Sheldon, Ill. Glendine and Geraldine are twins. Walter or Albert is writing Glendine and Albert or Walter is writing Geraldine.

Walter, or Albert—anyhow one of the twins—first told the story as he sat in the window of the United Press billet one warm evening in Picardy. Wagons, guns and cannons were rolling and rumbling by The twins are with an engineering outfit and it was too early yet for them to set out for their work of stringing wire, and digging trenches and dugouts. As Walter, or Walter, talked of Delmar, the bridge, the river and other things of home, the other one came up. It was like seeing double. Their tin hats were even at the same angle.

Nobody Knows the Difference.

"You see, it's like this," said Albert. "When Walter"—that identified Albert—"when Walter is working and is tired and I'm fresh, I slip out and relieve him and nobody knows the difference. Then if I get tired he comes out and relieves me, and so long as one of us is where one or the other is supposed to be—well there you are."

No one in the company knows one fro mthe other. On one occasion a new sergeant was in charge of the detachment working on a dugout. Albert and Walter were working from opposite sides Just as Walter left the dugout with a wheelbarrow filled with dirt Albert left the other end of the runway and came down another path with his empty The sergeant didn't know there were two of them Every time he looked up he saw a Grierson loading and starting off with a wheelbarrow. The sergeant figured this man Grierson was doing twice as much work as any other man on the job and went to the lieutenant to tell him about it Then he learned there were two of them

Before enlisting in the army together the Griersons worked in different banks in St Louis. It so happened that each was at the pass book window in his respective bank. Depositors with accounts in both banks began to consider taking the pledge if they went from one bank directly to the other until they learned how things stood.

The sergeant and the company commander have given it up. They assign Albert and Walter to work and so long as a Grierson is there, that is good enough

The twins are over here because they want to help win the war. They are not yet 21, therefore they would not have been drafted, but they are doing the war double.

Tuckahoeing.

From Collier's Weekly.

In the long run it is planning that counts. For example, that record breaking 5,500-ton freight ship Tuckahoe, which was launched in 27 days, finished in 37 and sailed with a cargo in 40 days from the time her keel was laid, was not a record breaking job so far as the riveting, etc., are concerned. The materials were all ready at the precise time and spot needed; they moved into her hull like clockwork. Brains, planning, teamwork (not frantic "drives") built the Tuckahoe, and those same qualities in action will win the war

Labor, After the War.

From Investment News.

Among the post war problems which will demand the most careful consideration will be those that deal with labor and the future relations of employer and employe. At various times we have referred to the economic problems after the war investing commerce, and we have shown that preparedness to meet the intense rivalry for trade was not only necessary, but imperative, in view of the strenuous efforts which Germany even now is systematizing to dominate if not domineer that trade. In the field of labor, however, little has been said or written concerning measures to be taken to handle the labor problem; compel the lowering of commodity values, and the lowering of the yield of securities.

Labor in past years has become more and more restless as it grew stronger. The present restlessness is not surprising in view of the much higher cost of living. For whatever may be said concerning the increase in wages already granted to certain classes of labor, these increases do not offset—in some instances by 50 per cent—the diminished value of the dollar as evidenced in the smaller quantity obtained of various commodities. The purchasing power of one, two, or four years ago is no longer there. It is no solution to grant increasing wages and salaries to meet higher cost of necessities, because these increases rebound in subsequent enhancement of the commodities.

The truth of the matter is that the labor market has been thoroughly disorganized by the draft and the mobilization of thousands in munitions factories and other war activities, where wages paid have been phenomenal relatively to other fields of activity. Both factors brought about a scarcity of help which led first one group, then another group of employers to bid against each other for help. If, then, steadily mounting wages do not solve the labor problem today, is it likely to solve it after the war? This question need be approached sympathetically, both by the employer and the employe, for together they contribute to the national wealth.

The progress of a civilized nation, writes a French economist, is gauged best through the amelioration of working classes.

If we consider the period between 1900 and 1913 and the real salary received by labor, an immense progress may be seen. Workmen have seen the hours of a day's work diminish and their wages increase almost simultaneously in that period; they have similarly witnessed the lowering of foodstuffs and commodities, while their home comforts increased and their influence grew. In 1914, however, soon after the declaration of war, first in France, then in England, a pinch began to be felt with the pinch has in most instances become a grip from which there appears to be no relaxation. In England the government increased wages, then resorted to so-called bonuses to pacify labor, but in neither instance is the labor unrest appeased. In America things went well enough until about two years ago. Since then the high cost of living, going up by leaps and bounds, has brought about a situation which, if not threatening, is to say the least serious, as witnessed in the strike of various employes in the shipbuilding field. Samuel Gompers' influence and the patriotism of workers seem to promise a respite in strikes through the duration of the war.

England is approaching the question from what on the surface may be considered a promising basis. The Whitley report of the so-called reconstruction committee believes that present conditions are favorable for a permanent understanding between employer and employe. The Whitley report recommends that joint committees, local, district and national, be organized, made up of both employers and members of the unions whose duties would be first and foremost the establishment of harmonious relations between capital invested and labor employed. To these committees all questions affecting the well being of the workers, their salaries, their hours of labor, the conditions under which they should work would be referred.

The solution is not found with the joint committees of employers and employes. Committee members seldom agree. This subject demands the most serious consideration of statesmen, economists and patriots. Moreover, it is not one to be solved politically, but economically, and with full justice to all concerned.

The subject is so big and so complicated, that it should be given attention immediately. To postpone it until the day of peace dawns might carry consequences far more serious than the present war itself.

Ambassador Morgenthau's Story

From the World's Work.

A few hours after the bombardment of Odessa I was closeted with Enver, discussing the subject which was then uppermost in the minds of all the foreigners in Turkey How would the government treat its resident enemies? Would it intern them, establish concentration camps, pursue them with German malignity, and perhaps apply the favorite Turkish measure with Christians—torture and massacre? Thousands of enemy subjects were then living in the Ottoman empire; many of them had spent their whole lives there, other had even been born on Ottoman soil All these people, when war broke out, had every reason to expect the harshest kind of treatment. It is no exaggeration to say that most of them lived in constant fear of murder.

"Yet I had certain strong arguments on my side and I now proceeded to urge them on Enver. Turkey desired the good opinion of the United States, and hoped, after the war, to find support among American financiers.

I had arranged for another train that evening, and I now heard that the Turks were refusing to vise the passports of those whose departure I had provided for. Again I went to the railroad station and again I found a mass of distracted people; the women were weeping, and the children screaming, while a platoon of Turkish soldiers, commanded by an undersized popinjay of a major, was driving everybody out of the station with the flat sides of their guns.

I jumped into my automobile and went to the sublime porte, where Talaat usually had his headquarters

"Well, Talaat," I said, realizing that the time had come for plain speaking, "don't you know how foolishly you are acting? You told me a few hours ago that you had decided to treat the French and English decently and you asked me to publish this news in the American and foreign press. I at once called in the newspaper men and told them how splendidly you were behaving And this at your own request' The whole world will be reading about it tomorrow. Now you are doing your best to counteract all my efforts in your behalf; here you have repudiated your first promise to be decent. Are you going to keep the promises you made me? Will you stick to them, or do you intend to keep changing your mind all the time? Now let's have a real understanding. The thing we Americans particularly pride ourselves on is keeping our word. We do it as individuals and as a nation. We refuse to deal with people as equals who do not do this. You might as well understand now that we can do no business with each other unless I can depend on your promises."

"Now, this isn't my fault," Talaat answered. "The Germans are to blame for stopping that train. The German chief of staff has just returned and is making a big fuss, saying that we are too easy with the French and English and that we must not let them go away. He says that we must keep them for hostages. It was his interference that did this."

Finally the train was arranged. Talaat had shown several moods in this interview; he had been by turns sulky, good natured, savage, and complaisant. There is one phase of the Turkish character which westerners do not comprehend, and that is its keen sense of humor. Talaat himself greatly loved a joke and a funny story. Now that he had reestablished friendly relations and redeemed his promise, Talaat became jocular once more.

"Your people can go now," he said with a laugh. "It's time to buy your candies Mr. Ambassador!"

Gouging Switzerland.

From Commerce Reporter.

The new economic agreement between Switzerland and Germany of May 15, 1918, was signed and ratified June 3, and became effective from the latter date. Under it Germany allows the exportation of 200,000 tons of coal monthly to Switzerland. The price of the coal will average $33.38 per metric ton at the mine. For 60,000 tons (the quantity approximately used for household purposes), Germany grants a rebate of $7.72 per ton.

The Swiss economic department published the rules regarding the maximum prices of German coal. The prices are per 10 tons and in entire carloads from the pit. The qualities of the coal are divided into eight groups, which vary in price from $160.19 to $401.44 per 10 metric tons (22,046 pounds)

For deliveries in entire carloads from inland stocks the prices increase by $19.30 for each 10 tons. For deliveries to the house of the buyer the usual transport fee will be charged. For retail, i. e., for deliveries under 10 tons, the selling prices have to be fixed through an agreement between the cantonal and local authorities and dealers, taking in consideration the location of the place. Price disputes between buyer and seller, cantonal and local authorities, will be settled by the coal central office.

The prices of German coal in Switzerland have increased considerably on account of the new agreement. The old agreement had fixed the price of coal per metric ton (2,204 pounds) at $17.37. This figure served as basis, but was the price for coal at the Saar pit. Taking into consideration the deliveries of coal from other and nearer German mines, the price in general amounted to $16.06. The new agreement prescribes a price of $17.37 higher, or just double that previously charged, i. e., $34.74 per ton. Bearing in mind the various German coal mines, it has therefore been calculated that the average price will be, as already stated, $33.38 per short ton under the new agreement. It is understood that low grade coal can be bought under $33.38, whereas good quality German coal is sold at $40 per ton and more. The increase will therefore in some cases amount to $8 per ton.

Sincerity or Nothing.

Lieut. Harold Hersey, in Scribner's.

The most prevalent mistake made by observers and writers is concerning the faith of the men. They seem to think that the religion of the soldier has undergone a mysterious change, when in fact the same faiths exist today in the army as in civilian life. These men are huge receptacles of feeling. They are sincere. Their hearts are in the battle. It may be that they lack the power to express this as splendidly as the president can, but where one of them says, "Every decent chap ought to fight when his country is at war," he is saying in his way what more clever men express with smooth phrases.

The faith of their fathers and mothers—that is the faith of our soldiers. No man can get away from his early years. His training clings to him through all of life. So it is with the soldier. He comes to the army with his entire spiritual baggage. Perhaps he dwells more upon the thoughts of a hereafter than he did previously, but I doubt it. He firmly believes that death is only a door to a future life and he rests content with that. At least, this attitude of mind has been my experience among them at all times.

In most men this faith is not often brought forward. There is no "lip service" in the army Sincerity or nothing—that is the watchword.

POPULATIONS SUFFER BY LOW BIRTH RATE

London.—(by mail).—The war has caused the belligerent countries of Europe the loss of not less than 12,500,000 potential lives because of the decrease in the number of births resulting from the war, says Sir Bernard Mallet, register general of Great Britain. This country, he asserts, has lost in these potential lives, 650,000 children. He believes hat other belligerent countries have suffered in this respect more than has Great Britain.

Sir Bernard estimated that every day of the war means a loss of 7,000 potential lives of children to the United Kingdom, France, Italy and the central powers. Dealing with the decline in the birth rate here, he said the births registered in England and Wales in 1913 numbered 881,800. In 1915 they fell to 814,614, in 1916 there was a further fall to 780,520, and in 1917 to 668,346, a decline of 24 per cent compared with 1913.

BONES OF NAPOLEON'S MEN ARE UNEARTHED

French Troops In Italy Give New Burial For Grenadiers Slain In 1797.

Italian Front.—The French soldiers who have come to Italy to fight for liberty found early tropries of the campaign fought by Napoleon III, in 1859. One day recently while throwing up works between Lake Garda and the Adige, they unearthed in the neighborhood of Rivoli human bones with shreds of uniforms and buttons bearing coats of arms, or the designation of regiments.

It was not possible to doubt that they were the remains of French grenadiers slain in the memorable battle which on January 14, 1797, opened the way to Napoleon's victorious army to further successes over the Austrians.

After 120 years other French soldiers, also coming into Italy to complete their work, and bring about a more complete restoration of Italy, gathered up their bones and buried them again on the hill where they fell on that cold day of the long winter of Bonaparte's first campaign, an incident which added color to the fighting carried on at that time as now, when the piety of companions in arms gathered and buried the remains of the other dead of Rivoli.

And on a sunny afternoon in the beauty of the valley of the Adige in spring, where the river flows green and limpid on its course down from Trentino, the ceremony of the reburial of soldiers of a bygone day was simple and impressive.

For the ceremony a gathering of officers of the French and Italian armies of all arms assembled in the circle of cypress trees. On the Italian side was General Rossi, of the grenadiers, who sent two companies with the band and the flags the men had borne to victory Honors for France were entrusted to a company of infantry. In a group of artillery officers was the young duke of the Puglie, one of the sons of the Duke of Aosta. He wears the shoulder straps of a captain won in battle with two promotions for valor.

The strains of the Marseillaise greeted General Grange, who organized the celebration. Accompanied by Italian generals he reviewed the grenadiers of Sardinia and the French troops, and the infantry of the Italian brigade from Novara. After that he invited the parish priest of Rivoli to step forward The cleric entering the square of officers blessed the remains of the Napoleonic soldiers, which were in two coffins covered with the tricolor of France.

The honor companies presented arms, and the officers saluted. One of the French colonels described the battle of Rivoli, and emphasized the importance of the Franco-Italian fraternity of arms, his faith in the great future of the two countries and his faith in victory. The soldiers paid a farewell salute to their companions of other days, and the ceremony was over.

"PIONEER SECTION" IS MEN OF ALL TRADES

Behind British Lines in France, (by mail)—The "pioneer section" of a British battalion consists of a sergeant and 10 men, attached to headquarters. The members of this little band are really "men of all trades" and all round workmen, ready to do plumbing, painting, carpentry or almost anything else. The pioneer sergeant is generally known by the nickname "Old Two-by-four"—apparently named for a piece of wood with a cross section two inches by four inches, which is the foundation in the building line.

If the pioneer sergeant is asked for a bed he must produce it forthwith. Four short pieces of two-by-four for the legs, two long and two short pieces for the frame, together with a suitable amount of wire netting and the result is what seems in the trenches the best bed in the world.

The pioneers are as handy with the paint brush as with the saw. They paint the "tin hats" of the battalion in the regimental colors and with the letters of the different companies, an invaluable device in fighting when companies get mixed up. Of course, the pioneer is prepared to do his fighting when necessary. He is a trained soldier like every other specialist. His knowledge of saws and planes and paint has been merely added to his knowledge of bombs and rifles.

A New Red Cross Worker.

From the Literary Digest.

An electrically operated machine for turning out surgical bandages is now aiding Boston Red Cross workers at the rooms of the New England surgical dressings committe. The device has a capacity of 50 yards of gauze bandages per minute. Says a writer in The Electrical World (New York, June 8):

The machine was designed by J. A. Butler, of the Industrial Service & Equipment company, Boston, and will easily turn out 10 times as much work as the usual staff of four persons can perform by hand. The machine will produce two sizes of folded bandages, one four inches and one three inches wide, and the number of cutters of dressing stock is varied to suit the convenience of the local workers. In operating the machine one worker feeds the material through the outfit and the others devote their time to cutting and packing. A Singer sewing machine type motor of about 1-7 horsepower rating, operated by 110-volt direct current energy from the Boston Edison mains, runs the unit. The bandages are folded eight or four times, as desired. Recently the Boston chapter of the Red Cross had a rush order of dressings to prepare, and the work was done on this machine in four days, 2,000 five-yard gauze rolls being made up. By hand the work would have taken at least three weeks with the local staff then available.

High Prices in Belgium.

From the Belgian Bulletin.

You wouldn't want to pay $1 for two pounds and a half of apples, would you? Well, that's the current price in Belgium, and if you wanted that many russets you would have to pay up to $1.30, even though they would be specked and full of worms. Other fruits have about the same prices: Pears 45 cents apiece, lemons, 60 cents each and grapes about $2.50 a pound. Recently at Liege pickled herrings were placed on sale, the ration was one herring to a person, at the price of 31 cents apiece.

RINGLING BROS. ANNOUNCE DATE

Gigantic Spectacle and Thousand Arenic Sensations To Invade This Locality In Near Future

Word comes that Ringling Brothers mammoth circus is to exhibit afternoon and night at Mason City, Wednesday, August 28th.

Always the leaders in introducing the newest and greatest features the famous showmen this season announce the most remarkable program of their career. There is a brand new spectacle of gigantic proportions entitled "In Days of Old." Produced on the biggest stage ever built, it tells the story of the golden age of Ivanhoe, Robin Hood and King Arthur. An entire trainload of scenery is carried. The cast numbers 1,250 actors and there is an entrancing ballet of 300 dancing girls. A thousand arenic sensations follow the spectacle on the main tent program. There are great troupes of seals, dogs and monkeys that walk on tight ropes and ride horseback; herds of elephants in all new tricks; international athletes in feats of amazing strength; slides for life from tent top to the ground by men suspended by the hair, and one—the great Hillary—who "jumps the gap" with skates attached to his head. The world's greatest stars, such as May Wirth, who leaps from the ground to galloping steed with baskets tied to her feet, are presented in great number. There are twice as many clowns as before, a menagerie of 1,000 splendid animals and, to introduce the holiday, an all new street parade three miles long.

THE FOURTH LIBERTY LOAN

The campaign for the Fourth Liberty Loan will begin September 28th and close October 19th. The result of the loan will be watched with keen interest in Europe, not only by our associates in the war against the Teutonic powers, but by our enemies. It will be regarded by them as a measure of the American people's support of the war.

The Germans know full well the tremendous weight and significance of popular support of the war, of the people at home backing up the Army in the field. As the loan succeeds our enemies will sorrow; as it falls short they will rejoice. Every dollar subscribed will help and encourage the American soldiers and hurt and depress the enemies of America.

The loan will be a test of the loyalty and willingness of the people of the United States to make sacrifices compared with the willingness of our soldiers to do their part. There must be and will be no failure by the people to measure up to the courage and devotion of our men in Europe. Many of them have given up their lives; shall we at home withhold our money? Shall we spare our dollars while they spare not their very lives?

NO MORE FOR HIM

Why Texas Visitor Was Definitely "Off" New York.

Visitor From the Southwest Could Not See That He Had Anything in Common With the Superelilious Manhattanite.

"I'm off it—dad burn it!" stormed the man from Dallas, Tex., slamming his hat on a hook and assaulting an innocent rack with the ferrule of his umbrella, says the New York Sun.

"You are off what?" inquired his host, who teaches something or other on Morningside heights, New York.

"This rotten town of yours. I've enjoyed my visit and all that, of course—but never again for me."

"But we thought you liked New York. We thought you were converted to New York!"

"I was. I've backslid now, though. I'm in my right senses once more. New York's all I ever heard it was. It's cold, it's slimy, it's selfish, it's suspicious, it's inhuman, it's—"

"Before we argue the point, suppose you tell us what has happened."

"Well, sir, you know how I felt when I struck this burg and then how broad-minded you found me. I liked the cafes and the restaurants—the tip thieves did not bother me.

"I liked the crowds along Broadway; different from ours at home, but interesting and human looking, most of 'em. And I began to think all this talk about the New Yorker being a frozen fish of the shark variety was libelous.

"And then this morning I dropped in a place down on John street to buy a cigar."

"And you got stuck with a bad one? You'll have to pay more than six for two bits if you want a good smoke in—"

"Bad nothing! The cigar was all right. It wasn't the cigar. It was what happened when I was buying it.

"I stood there lamping the case and up steps a typical New Yorker."

"Indeed? And pray, Dallas, Tex., what is a typical New Yorker like?"

"Never you mind what it's like. This was it. This feller had all the earmarks—the overcoat cut just so, the stitched hat tilted just so, the cane held so, the last word in collars, the sleek, smug, powdery, satisfied phiz—with the same human aspect in spite of himself that's bunked me about all the others. Understand, I wouldn't have picked him out to take on a pack train trip as my boon companion, but if we'd been lost together in the Arizona desert I wouldn't have felt entirely deprived of the pleasures of human fellowship.

"He says to the clerk—now, what do you reckon?—he says, 'Two five-cent corncobs.' Wouldn't that fool anybody into thinking he had the earmarks of humanity? 'Two five-cent corncobs,' he says, and there's a nice old snoozer standing close by (from the Southwest, like me, I take it)—a nice, good-natured old veteran with a soft white mustache, and he's so overcome by these symptoms of loving kindness in New York that he ups and speaks to the typical specimen just like it was regular folks.

"'You've got the right idea,' the old gentleman says pleasantly. 'Corncob's the sweetest smoke they is on earth.'

"Typical New York turns on him and looks him up and down. All in a flash, and as cold as a March norther; you never saw anything icier than that eye.

"'Thanks!' he snaps. 'Thanks!' That was all, but you ought to heard him. Yes, I'm off New York for good."

Big Trench Plows.

Whenever and wherever it has been possible to do so, gigantic trench digging machines have been used for entrenchments instead of the spade of the soldier. Many hundreds of "trench plows," as they are called, were used by the Germans in the early days of the war, and that gave rise to the common belief that the Germans were the first to use them. But so long ago as the Boer war British army authorities experimented with plows and found them so successful that they became part of the equipment of the army.

The smaller plows cut a trench 20 inches wide and 20 inches deep, turning the earth over so as to form a parapet. The large ones will cut trenches from 3 to 4 feet deep, doing the work of 50 soldiers, and in half the time. These plows have proved extremely useful in digging trenches in front of towns and other prepared positions in the path of the enemy.

Intense Heat Quickly Furnished.

In most of the British shell-making plants an ingenious type of transformer is being employed for heating the copper shell bands. Briefly, the transformer consists of a closed core of laminated iron, one leg of which is hinged and counter-weighted so that it can be readily lifted to permit the copper band to be inserted over the primary winding. The copper band when once in position forms the secondary of the transformer, and because of the conversion of a small flow of standard lighting current into low tension but high amperage current in its single turn of winding the copper band is heated in short order to the desired degree.—Scientific American.

Profits and Prices

Profits may be considered from two angles:

1st*—Their effect on prices;
2nd*—As a return to investors.

When profits are small as compared with sales, they have little effect on prices.

Swift & Company's profits are only a fraction of a cent per pound on all products sold, and if eliminated entirely would have practically no effect on prices.

Swift & Company paid 10 per cent dividends to over 20,000 stockholders out of its 1917 profits. It also had to build extensions and improvements out of profits; to finance large stocks of goods made necessary by unprecedented requirements of the United States and Allied Governments; and to provide protection against the day of declining markets.

Is it fair to call this profiteering?

Camp Pike, Arkansas.
August 5th, 1918.

Dear Friend:—

Will write you a few lines to let you know I am as well as always and am enjoying myself same as always, and I hope you folks in Klemme are the same.

I got into Camp Pike a week ago last Thursday night at ten o'clock and got to bed at eleven. Sure were a tired bunch of boys when we got here. It took us 39 hours to get here. We saw a lot of country on the way down but didn't see any as good as old Iowa. The biggest fields we saw in Missouri ran from one-half acre to 5 or 10 acres and Arkansas is just the same. The corn and small grain didn't amount to very much. I'll tell you, you've got to go a long ways to beat Iowa.

We went through tunnels and over mountains and everything else on the way down here. The soil here is nothing but clay and stones as much as I saw of Missouri or Kansas. On the way down as far as St. Louis, Missouri, we had 11 coaches and from there on they put on two dining cars with eight nigger cooks. There were around 650 men on our train. We have all been vaccinated and have had two shots in the back. We just got one today and have one more coming. There are seven boys from Hancock county in my barracks which makes it nice. Haven't done any drilling to speak of since I have been here. There are around 20,000 Iowa boys here now. We all have our uniforms now.

Say Art, as we are under quarantine for 14 days, which makes it awful lonesome here for us, we would appreciate a box packed with fruit and candy very much.

I remain as ever,

OUR SAVED FOOD FED THE ALLIES

Food Administrator Writes President America Conserved 141,000,000 Bushels Wheat.

CREDIT DUE TO WOMEN.

Meat and Fat Shipments Increased by 844,000,000 Pounds.

Conservation measures applied by the American people enabled the United States to ship to the Allied peoples and to our own forces overseas 141,000,000 bushels of wheat and 844,600,000 pounds of meat during the past year, valued in all at $1,400,000,000. This was accomplished in the face of a serious food shortage in this country, bespeaking the wholeheartedness and patriotism with which the American people have met the food crisis abroad.

Food Administrator Hoover, in a letter to President Wilson, explains how the situation was met. The voluntary conservation program fostered by the Food Administration enabled the piling up of the millions of bushels of wheat during 1917-18 and the shipment of meat during 1917-18.

The total value of all food shipments to Allied destinations amounted to $1,400,000,000, all this food being bought through or in collaboration with the Food Administration. These figures are all based on official reports and represent food exports for the harvest year that closed June 30, 1918.

The shipments of meats and fats (including meat products, dairy products, vegetable oils, etc.,) to Allied destinations were as follows:

Fiscal year 1916-17....2,166,500,000 lbs.
Fiscal year 1917-18....3,011,100,000 lbs.

Increase ..... 844,600,000 lbs.

Our slaughterable animals at the beginning of the last fiscal year were not appreciably larger than the year before and particularly in hogs; they were probably less. The increase in shipments is due to conservation and the extra weight of animals fed by our farmers.

The full effect of these efforts began to bear their best results in the last half of the fiscal year, when the exports to the Allies were 2,133,100,000 pounds, as against 1,266,500,000 pounds in the same period of the year before. This compares with an average of 801,000,000 pounds of total exports for the same half years in the three-year pre-war period.

In cereals and cereal products reduced to terms of cereal bushels our shipments to Allied destinations have been:

Fiscal year 1916-17..259,900,000 bushels
Fiscal year 1917-18..340,800,000 bushels

Increase ..... 80,900,000 bushels

Of these cereals our shipments of the prime breadstuffs in the fiscal year 1917-18 to Allied destinations were: Wheat 181,000,000 bushels and of rye 18,900,000 bushels, a total of 144,900,000 bushels.

The exports to Allied destinations during the fiscal year 1916-17 were: Wheat 135,100,000 bushels and rye 2,300,000 bushels, a total of 137,400,000 bushels. In addition some 10,000,000 bushels of 1917 wheat are now in port for Allied destinations or en route thereto. The total shipments to Allied countries from our last harvest of wheat will be therefore, about 141,000,000 bushels, or a total of 154,000,000 bushels of prime breadstuffs. In addition to this we have shipped some 10,000,000 bushels to neutrals dependent upon us, and we have received some imports from other quarters.

"This accomplishment of our people in this matter stands out even more clearly if we bear in mind that we had available in the fiscal year 1916-17 from net carry-over and as surplus over our normal consumption about 200,000,000 bushels of wheat which we were able to export that year without trenching on our home loaf," Mr. Hoover said. "This last year, however, owing to the large failure of the 1917 wheat crop, we had available from net carry-over and production and imports only just about our normal consumption. Therefore our wheat shipments to Allied destinations represent approximately savings from our own wheat bread.

"These figures, however, do not fully convey the volume of the effort and sacrifice made during the past year by the whole American people. Despite the magnificent effort of our agricultural population in planting a much increased acreage in 1917, not only was there a very large failure in wheat, but also the corn failed to mature properly, and our corn is our dominant crop.

"I am sure," Mr. Hoover wrote in concluding his report, "that all the millions of our people, agricultural as well as urban, who have contributed to these results should feel a very definite satisfaction that in a year of universal food shortages in the northern hemisphere all of those people joined together against Germany have come through into sight of the coming harvest not only with wealth and strength fully maintained, but with only temporary periods of hardship.

"It is difficult to distinguish between various sections of our people—the homes, public eating places, food trades, urban or agricultural populations—in assessing credit for these results, but no one will deny the dominant part of the American women."

THE TEETH OF THE TIGER

ALEXANDER TEIXEIRA DE MATTOS

CHAPTER THIRTEEN. (Continued.)

"There is a very simple way of thanking me, Monsieur le Prefet," said Don Luis, "and that is to allow me to carry out my task to the end."

"Your task?"

"Yes, Monsieur le Prefet. My action of last night is only the beginning. The conclusion is the release of Marie Fauville and Gaston Sauverand."

M. Desmalions smiled.

"Oh!"

"Am I asking too much, Monsieur le Prefet?"

"One can always ask, but the request should be reasonable. And the innocence of those people does not depend on me."

"No; but it depends on you, Monsieur le Prefet, to let them know if I prove their innocence to you."

"Yes, I agree, if you prove it beyond dispute."

"Just so."

Don Luis' calm assurance impressed M. Desmalions in spite of everything and even more than on the former occasions, and he suggested:

"The results of the hasty inspection which we have made will perhaps help you. For instance, we are certain that the bomb was placed by the entrance of the passage and probably under the boards of the floor."

"Please do not trouble, Monsieur le Prefet These are only secondary details The great thing now is that you should know the whole truth, and that not only through words."

The prefect had come closer The magistrate and detectives were standing round Don Luis, watching his lips and movements with feverish impatience. Was it possible that that truth, as yet so remote and vague, in spite of all the importance which they attached to the arrests already affected, was known at last?

It was a solemn moment. Every one was on tenterhooks. The manner in which Don Luis had foretold the explosion lent the value of an accomplished fact to his predictions; and the men whom he had saved from the terrible catastrophe were almost ready to accept as certainties the most improbable statements which a man of his stamp might make.

"Monsieur le Prefet," he said, "you waited in vain last night for the fourth letter to make its appearance We shall now be able, by an unexpected mircle of chance, to be present at the delivery of the letter. You will then know that it was the same hand that committed all the crimes—and you will know whose hand that was"

And, turning to Mazeroux:

"Sergeant, will you please make the room as dark as you can? The shutters are gone, but you might draw the curtains across the windows and close the doors. Monsieur le Prefet, is it by accident that the electric light is on?"

"Yes, by accident. We will have it turned out."

"One moment. Have any of you gentlemen a pocket lantern about you? Or, no, it doesn't matter. This will do."

There was a candle in a sconce. He took it and lit it.

Then he switched off the electric light

There was a half darkness, amid which the flame of the candle flickered in the draught from the windows Don Luis protected the flame with his hand and moved to the table

"I do not think that we shall be kept waiting long," he said. "As I foresee it, there will be only a few seconds before the facts speak for themselves and better than I could do."

Those few seconds, during which no one broke the silence, were unforgettable. M. Desmalions has since declared; in an interview in which he ridicules himself very cleverly, that his brain, over stimulated by the fatigues of the night and by the whole scene before him, imagined the most unlikely events, such as an invasion of the house by armed assailants, or the apparition of ghosts and spirits.

He had the curiosity, however, he said, to watch Don Luis. Sitting on the edge of the table, with his head thrown a little back and his eyes roaming over the ceiling, Don Luis was eating a piece of bread and nibbling at a cake of chocolate. He seemed very hungry, but quite at his ease.

The others maintained that tense attitude which we put on at moments of great physical effort. Their faces were distorted with a sort of gimace. They were haunted by the memory of the explosion as well as obsessed by what was going to happen. The flame of the candle cast shadows on the wall.

More seconds elapsed than Don Luis Perenna had said, 30 or 40 seconds, perhaps, that seemed endless. Then Perenna lifted the candle a little and said:

"There you are."

They had all seen what they now saw almost as soon as he spoke. A letter was descending from the ceiling. It spun round slowly, like a leaf falling from a tree without being driven by the wind. It just touched Don Luis and alighted on the floor between two legs of the table.

Picking up the paper and handing it to M. Desmalions, Don Luis said:

"There you are, Monsieur le Prefet. This is the fourth letter, due last night."

CHAPTER XIV.

The "Hater."

M Desmalions looked at him without understanding, and looked from him to the ceiling. Perenna said:

"Oh, there's no witchcraft about it; and, though no one has thrown that letter from above, though there is not the smallest hole in the ceiling, the explanation is quite simple!"

"Quite simple, is it?" said M. Desmalions.

"Yes, Monsieur le Prefet. It looks like an extremely complicated conjuring trick, done almost for fun. Well, I say that it is quite simple—and, at the same time, terribly tragic. Sergeant Mazeroux, would you mind drawing back the curtains and giving us as much light as possible?"

While Mazeroux was executing his orders and M. Desmalions glancing at the fourth letter, the contents of which were unimportant and merely confirmed the previous ones, Don Luis took a pair of steps which the workmen had left in the corner, set it up in the middle of the room and climbed to the top, where, seated astride, he was able to reach the electric chandelier.

It consisted of a broad, circular band in brass, beneath which was a festoon of crystal pendants. Inside were three lamps placed at the corners of a brass triangle concealing the wires.

He uncovered the wires and cut them. Then he began to take the whole fitting to pieces. To hasten matters, he asked for a hammer and broke up the plaster all round the clamps that held the chandelier in position.

"Lend me a hand, please," he said to Mazeroux.

Mazeroux went up the steps; and between them they took hold of the chandelier and let it slide down the uprights. The detectives caught it and placed it on the table with some difficulty, for it was much heavier than it looked.

On inspection, it proved to be surmounted by a cubical metal box, measuring about eight inches square, which box, being fastened inside the ceiling between the iron clamps, had obliged Don Luis to knock away the plaster that concealed it.

"What the devil's this?" exclaimed M. Desmalions.

"Open it for yourself, Monsieur le Prefet; there's a lid to it," said Perenna.

M. Desmalions raised the lid. The box was filled with springs and wheel, a whole complicated and detailed mechanism resembling a piece of clockwork.

"By your leave, Monsieur le Prefet," said Don Luis.

He took out one piece of machinery and discovered another beneath it, joined to the first by the gearing of two wheels; and the second was more like one of those automatic apparatuses which turn out printed slips.

Right at the bottom of the box, just where the box touched the ceiling, was a semicircle groove, and at the edge of it was a letter ready for delivery.

"The last of the five letters," said Don Luis, "doubtless continuing the series of denunciations. You will notice, Monsier le Prefet, that the chandelier originally had a fourth damp in the center. It was obviously removed when the chandelier was altered, so as to make room for the letters to pass."

He continued his detailed explanations:

"So the whole set of letters was placed here, at the bottom. A clever piece of machinery, controlled by clockwork, took them one by one at the appointed time, pushed them to the edge of the groove concealed between the lamps and the pendants, and projected them into space."

None of those standing around Don Luis spoke, and all of them seemed perhaps a little disappointed. The whole thing was certainly very clever; but they had expected something better than a trick of springs and wheels, however surprising.

"Have patience, gentlemen," said Don Luis. "I promised you something ghastly; and you shall have it."

"Well, I agree," said the prefect of police, "that this is where the letters started from. But a good many points remain obscure; and, apart from this, there is one fact in particular which it seems impossible to understand. How were the criminals able to adapt the chandelier in this way? And, in a house guarded by the police, in a room watched night and day, how were they able to carry out such a piece of work without being seen or heard?"

"The answer is quite easy, Monsieur le Prefet: the work was done before the house was guarded by the police."

"Before the murder was committed, therefore?"

"Before the murder was committed."

"And what is to prove to me that that is so?"

"You have said so yourself, Monsieur le Prefet; because it could not have been otherwise"

"But do explain yourself, monsieur!" cried M. Desmalions, with a gesture of irritation. "If you have important things to tell us, why delay?"

"It is better, Monsieur le Prefet, that you should arrive at the truth in the same way as I did When you know the secret of the letters, the truth is much nearer than you think; and you would have already named the criminal if the horror of his crime had not been so great as to divert all suspicions from him."

M. Desmalions looked at him attentively. He felt the importance of Perenna's every word and he was really anxious.

"Then, according to you," he said, "those letters accusing Madame Fauville and Gaston Sauverand were placed there with the sole object of ruining both of them?"

"Yes, Monsieur le Prefet."

"And, as they were placed there before the crime, the plot must have been schemed before the murder?"

"Yes, Monsieur le Prefet, before the murder. From the moment that we admit the innocence of Mme. Fauville and Gaston Sauverand, we are obliged to conclude that, as everything accuses them, this is due to a series of deliberate acts. Mme. Fauville was out on the night of the murder: a plot! She was unable to say how she spent her time while the murder was being committed: a plot! Her inexplicable drive in the direction of La Muette and her cousin Sauverand's walk in the neighborhood of the house; plots! The marks left in the apple by those teeth, by Mme. Fauville's own teeth; a plot and the most infernal of all!

"I tell you, everything is plotted beforehand, everything is, so t ospeak, prepared, measured out, labelled, and numbered. Everything takes place at the appointed time. Nothing is left to chance. It is a work very nicely pieced together, worthy of the most skilful artisan, so solidly constructed that outside happenings have not been able to throw it out of gear; and that the scheme works exactly, precisely, imperturbably, like the clockwork in this box, which is a perfect symbol of the whole business and, at the same time, gives a most accurate explanation of it, because the letters denouncing the murderers were duly posted before the crime and delivered after the crime on the dates and at the hours foreseen."

M. Desmalions remained thinking for a time and then objected:

"Still, in the letters which he wrote, M. Fauville accuses his wife."

"He does."

"We must therefore admit either that he was right in accusing her or that the letters are forged!"

"They are not forged. All the experts have recognized M. Fauville's handwriting."

"Then?"

"Then——"

Don Luis did not finish his sentence; and M. Desmalions felt the breath of the truth fluttering still nearer round him.

The others, one and all as anxious as himself, were silent. He muttered:

"I do not understand——"

"Yes, Monsieur le Prefet, you do. You understand that, if the sending of those letters forms an integrant part of the plot hatched against Mme. Fauville and Gaston Sauverand, it is because their contents were prepared in such a way as to be the undoing of the victims."

"What! What! What are you saying?"

"I am saying what I said before. Once they are innocent, everything that tells against them is part of the plot"

Again there was a long silence. The prefect of police did not conceal his agitation. Speaking very slowly, with his eyes fixed on Don Luis' eyes, he said:

"Whoever the culprit may be, I know nothing more terrible than this work of hatred."

"It is an even more improbable work than you can imagine, Monsieur le Prefet," said Perenna, with growing animation, "and it is a hatred of which you, who do not know Sauverand's confession, cannot yet estimate the violence. I understood it completely as I listened to the man; and, since then, all my thoughts have been overpowered by the dominant idea of that hatred. Who could hate like that? To whose loathing had Marie Fauville and Sauverand been sacrificed? Who was the inconceivable person whose perverted genius had surrounded his two victims with chains so powerfully forged?

"And another idea came to my mind, an earlier idea which had already struck me several times and to which I have already referred in Sergeant Mazeroux's presence: I mean the really mathematical character of the appearance of the letters. I said to myself that such grave documents could not be introduced into the case at fixed dates unless some primary reason demanded that those dates should absolutely be fixed. What reason? If a human agency had been at work each time, there would surely have been some irregularity dependent on this especially after the police had become cognizant of the matter and were present at the delivery of the letters.

"Well," Perenna continued, "in spite of every obstacle, the letters continued to come, as though they could not help it. And thus the reason of their coming gradually dawned upon me: they came mechanically, by some invisible process set going once and for all and working with the blind certainty of a physical law. This was a case not of a conscious intelligence and will, but just of material necessity. * * * It was the clash of these two idea—the idea of the hatred pursuing the innocent and the idea of that machinery serving the schemes of the 'hater'—it was their clash that gave birth to the little spark of light. When brought into contact, the two ideas combined in my mind and suggested the recollection that Hippolyte Fauville was an engineer by profession!"

The others listened to him with a sort of uneasy oppression. What was gradually being revealed of the tragedy, instead of relieving the anxiety, increased it until it became absolutely painful.

M. Desmalions objected:

"Granting that the letters arrived on the dates named, you will nevertheless have noted that the hour varied on each occasion."

"That is to say, it varied according as we watched in the dark or not, and that is just the detail which supplied me with the key to the riddle. If the letters—and this was an indispensable precaution, which we are now able to understand—were delivered only under cover of the darkness, it must be because a contrivance of some kind prevented them from appearing when the electric light was on, and because that contrivance was controlled by switch inside the room. There is no other explanation possible.

BOMBING WORK MOST DIFFICULT OF ALL

Airmen of Allied Forces Resort to Many Tricks to Fool the Enemy.

Behind British Lines in France.—(by mail)—One of the most exciting tasks to which airmen are assigned is what is known as "dewitery bombing" over one spot for an hour or more. The object is to distract the attention of the anti-aircraft defenders of a given district, and a machine carrying a dozen or more bombs is employed for the work.

At first the airmen, a pilot and an observer, approach their target cautiously. With engines throttled down, the craft glides nearer and nearer. Below, all is quiet. No German searchlights are sweeping the sky. When the attackers are almost over their objective a rocket rises toward them and bursts into a cluster of red stars. The machine has been discovered. At once six or seven searchlights throw their beams aloft. The pilot looks at his watch: it is time to begin his dewitery bombing.

He flies steadily on, although a barrage of bursting shells lies now in front of him. The observer looks through the wires of his bomb sight to the ground below. At the proper instant he thrusts his lever forward and releases the bombs. A few second later he sees the flash of their explosions, and above the crackling barrage he can hear two dull roars. He signals to the pilot and the machine turns and sweeps away from the fiery ring of shells and searchlights.

A few miles away the airplane flies to and fro at top speed. The puzzled searchlights vainly feel the sky in all directions and then, one by one, are switched off. Then the pilot quickly moves again toward the target. Another bomb is dropped. As it explodes the searchlights reappear and the barrage is renewed while through the thickly grouped shell bursts are threaded the chains of green flaming globes, so much used by the Germans.

Again the machine flies away and this time, to bewilder still more the soldiers below, the observer fires a white light which slowly drifts below and fades out. All the searchlights follow it until it dies. Repeatedly the airmen return to the attack. Bombs are dropped at intervals until the end of the hour, when the machine departs, flickering fires and clouds of smoke telling of the havoc wrought by the bombs.

CAMP CODY SOLDIERS ARE WELL ENTERTAINED

Camp Cody, New Mexico—Soldiers in training here do not depend upon outside theatrical companies for their entertainment. The division exchange theater is the most popular place in camp, for there the entertainers of Camp Cody appear almost nightly. A number of the men who took part in the Cody minstrels remain in camp, and, with the assistance of others recruited from among the selective draft troops recently sent here, the soldiers are given high class entertainments. A typical program at the division exchange theater includes an eccentric musical act, during which the musician squeezes music from everything from a biscuit box to a row of pop bottles, Scotch dialect songs by the various "Scotties" in camp, vocal solos, instrumental numbers and concerts by the regimental bands. The theater is under the direction of the division adjutant.

Pullman Wages and Tips.

From the Indianapolis News.

Simultaneously with the announcement that the government is to continue to operate the Pullman company comes an order raising the wages of its employes on the same basis as the advance recently given railroad workers. The industrial relations commission once found that the average salary of porters was from $27.50 to $35 a month and of conductors from $70 to $90 a month.

Most of the porters will probably have their wages increased by almost half. The question now arises whether to tip or not to tip. For years, the charge against the Pullman company that its porters were not paid enough has been answered to the effect that their wages were raised to affluent proportions by tips. When it was suggested that the public should not be expected to pay the wages of Pullman car employes in addition to paying the usual fares, the response was made that the company had no way of curbing the generosity of travelers and that if they would tip it was proper for that source of income to be taken into consideration in computing wages.

Possibly the porters received many tips that they would not otherwise have got because it was generally understood that they were dependent on tips for a living. With their wages substantially advanced a different situation exists. The traveler who gave up a quarter with a smile for the badly paid victim of corporate niggardliness may feel differently toward a better paid government employe. The government can not with propriety force any class of its employes to depend upon the tips of citizens for a livelihood.

Danger Signal and Leaders.

From the Saturday Evening Post.

Many states have passed laws against habitual idlers—which is a late start in attacking the vice of laziness; for it is just as much a vice as drunkenness or opium eating. It destroys the manhood in a man and the integrity of his character. We have known our share of drunkards and dope fiends. We have seen those who seemed fairly hopeless shake off their vice and emerge useful, honorworthy men. According to our observation, however, a man once really sunk in the vice of laziness seldom gets out, but remains the nearest to absolute zero in human character.

Laziness has not been attacked as other vices have. There have been few warnings, reprobations, inhibitions. The young man hangs round pool rooms—or round club grills if he has money. He engages in imitation work—petty, incidental jobs; or golf if he can afford it. He is not girding himself; he is not attacking the problem of his life; he is loafing. But if he does not indulge in the recognized vices nobody says decisively "This will not do!"

Youth is just as prone to the vice of laziness as to any other vice. But there are no danger signals on that road. There ought to be. We believe society has a right and a duty to say to every able-bodied young man "Work or you shall not eat;" for we believe that laziness is the most curable of vices if taken in time—and about the least curable when it has become chronic.

Little Freddie had just been put in a khaki suit with long trousers. "Mamma," he asked, "am I a man now like papa?"

"I suppose so," she replied.

"Well, then," he continued, "I guess I'll take a dime out of my bank and go down to the barber shop and get shaved."

IRISH FARMERS ARE WARNED OF POSITION

Standish O'Grady Asserts They Are Insulting Their Best Friends.

Dublin (by mail).—Irish farmers have been the most backward of all classes in regard to recruiting for the army. Standish O'Grady, a distinguished Irish writer, the author of several Irish novels and historical works has issued a warning to them that, under the land purchase acts, they hold their lands by an act of the imperial parliament; that parliament has advanced over $500,000,000 for the purchase of the land from the landlords has handed it over to thousands of peasant proprietors and is collecting from them the purchase money by annual instalments, less in amount than their old rents.

Mr. O'Grady reminds the farmers that "in supporting an attempt to overthrow the authority of the imperial parliament they are trying to overthrow the very power to which they owe their existence as proprietors and which alone can maintain them in secure ownership."

"Is it likely," he asks, "that the imperial parliament, having its hundreds of thousands of discharged brave loyal soldiers to provide for, will leave Ireland in the ownership of men a mere class, who in this deadly crisis this life and death struggle, are proving themselves foes of England of Great Britain, of the British empire which ought to be their Anglo-Irish empire and of their great allied nations? They will not respect the brand new land titles which they themselves have made and can unmake.

"With every day that passes the temper of England is rising. Let it rise a little more and things will happen.

The question of their future fortunes as peasant proprietors has certainly been exercising the minds of some Irish farmers in a very different direction from that indicated by Standish O'Grady. A leading Dublin lawyer told the Associated Press representative that he had been remonstrating with a local Sinn Fein leader in the country, an influential farmer, as to his attitude towards the war, and asking him what he supposed his position would be if the Germans won the war and came to Ireland. The reply he got was that if the Germans completely overthrow the British government the Irish farmers would be no worse off and might be better; there would no longer be any legal authority to collect the land instalments, the Germans might remit them, and leave them the land for nothing. The Sinn Fein leaders in Dublin have no such delusions but it is asserted that followers of this type throughout the country have enabled them to win elections.

YANKEES MISS THE DOUGHNUT GIRLS

BY FRANK J. TAYLOR.
United Press Staff Correspondent.

With the American Army in France (by mail).—There is gloom in a certain regiment of Yankees, and it is not because they haven't had opportunity to whip boches.

The regiment is going to lose what the men consider their most valuable asset, the McIntyre sisters, also known as the Salvation Army girls. The McIntyre sisters—Gladys and Irene—who have made chocolate, doughnuts, pies and sandwiches for the boys of this regiment, sent letters for them, banked money, and who have been "good sisters to every fellow in the regiment," have been transferred to a new post.

The troops holding this part of the line want to adopt the McIntyre sisters permanently—and who wouldn't?

"They're good pals, not dolls," is the way the doughboys compare the rugged, lively American sisters with French girls out near the front. When the doughboy comes around, he usually is eager to work, and he's happiest who is given a job dipping doughnuts, cutting wood, or doing anything to help the McIntyre sisters. It is a happy American family, this, out here where the shells rain in all too regularly, interrupting even pie making and doughnut dipping, for orders are that everyone scoot for dugouts when the boches begin a bombardment. Practically every house in town has been hit and partly demolished.

These American soldier girls have a dugout handy to sleep in. While they were absent at work one day a shrapnel came through the roof and punctured the bed full of holes. There is plenty of excitement in this work, but very little time to get excited.

It is easy to see why there is gloom in a certain regiment at the front. Of course, there are some more girls just arrived in the little village to take over the already established canteen of the McIntyre sisters. But they are not the same as your own favorite tried-and-true, stick-through-shot-and-shell sisters, the doughboys say. These brave pioneer girls are needed to begin another post. One thing I sure, some other regiment is going to be made awfully happy when the McIntyre sisters join it.

NAVAL RECRUITING IN IRELAND IS BRISK

Dublin (by mail).—Lieutenant Percy, director of naval recruiting in Ireland declares that recruiting for the British navy was never more brisk in Ireland than it is at present. There are Irishmen in every department from the admiralty down, and the recruiters in the towns and villages throughout Ireland are always warmly welcomed. Dublin has just given a cordial sendoff to a number of recruits of the trawler section of the royal naval reserve. This branch appeals particularly to Irish fisher boys who have experienced in the past few months around the Irish coasts the cruelty with which the German submarine campaign is conducted.

The recruits paraded the streets of Dublin accompanied by bluejackets and marines and the band of the Yorkshire regiment. Among the inscriptions on the banners in the procession were:

"The Germans are sinking Irish ships and murdering Irishmen. Join us and avenge these crimes."

"We are Beatty's boys, brother Irishmen, come along."

Imperishable Potatoes.

From American Review of Reviews.

The potato's principal drawbacks are its bulk, which increases the transportation costs, and its perishablity, which causes losses from the field to the table unless particular care is given. To lessen these losses and to cut the costs Germany has resorted to drying and the manufacture of potato flour. We do not know the extent of the business now, but we know that before the war more than 800,000,000 bushels of the fatherland's potato crop were dried each year—and that is in excess of two years' production in this country. Part of this enormous amount of dried food was fed to live stock, but much of it was ground into a nutritious flour for human consumption.

Holland has one of the largest plants now making flour from potatoes. J. W. Robertson-Scott, in his book, "Wartime and Peace in Holland," says this factory dries 33,000 bushels every 24 hours. A special variety of potato is grown by the farmers who are the cooperative owners of this and other mills. This variety is particularly high in starch and other solids and yields remarkable crops. The average in 1917 on 79,000 acres was 500 bushels to the acre, making a total of 39,500,000 bushels. The general run of market potatoes in Holland yield only a little more than half as much to the acre.

In these Dutch mills 137 pounds of potatoes will make 20 pounds of first class flour, four and a half pounds of second class and one pound of third class, the difference probably being in the amount of crude fiber contained and in the color. The cost of making the flour is about 3½ cents a pound. From the special variety of potato Holland made 346,000,000 pounds of flour of the first grade last year at a cost of $73 on a long ton.

We now have six plants in the United States making natural potato flour. About 6,000,000 bushels of the 1917 crop were made into dehydrated potatoes, natural flour, and potato starch. "Natural" potato flour—made from the whole cooked potato, minus the skin—is the only kind that should be made. It contains, in addition to the highly digestible starch protein, mineral salts, albuminoids and the vitamines so necessary for growth.

There is every reason to believe that natural potato flour will become a regular part of our diet. It can be made at a reasonable price once the industry is established, and it can compete with wheat flour up to 16 2-3 per cent of the loaf. Used in a larger proportion it makes the bread wet and soggy. Dr. Le Clerc, of the bureau of chemistry of the United States department of agriculture, says that potato flour at 8 cents a pound is equal to wheat flour at 6 cents. The one third greater value is due to the large content of mineral salts. Dr. Le Clerc gives the following analysis as representing a fair comparison of the two kinds of flour:

	Moisture	Ash	Fat	Protein	Carbohydrates
Wheat	12%	.5%	1%	11%	75.5%
Potato	77%	3.5%	.4%	9%	80.1%

We have known for a long time that there was something about the potato that improved the flavor, consistency, and keeping qualities of bread. That is why "potato water" was considered essential by every bread maker. Now we know there are even better reasons—economy and better nutrition.

American potato growers need to give their best attention to the problems of growing the right varieties for flour and developing drying plants and flour mills. There should be as good an opportunity for a cooperative potato flour mill in a potato growing section as there is for a cooperative creamery or cheese factory in a dairy section.

This newly imported method of handling the potato crop will go a long way toward putting one of the most unstable industries on a solid foundation. It will make the spud one of the non-perishables along with wheat, beans and canned foods.

THE SOLDIER'S SINS.

From the Stars and Stripes.

What are the four deadly sins of the soldier?

A Y M C A man wanted to know. So he held a questionnaire among some men who had just come out of the line, and repeated it among other groups who had just come out of the line until he had what he considered a number sufficient to represent the sentiments of the whole A. E. F.

And the four cardinal vices were not liker, likker, likker and failure to submit to prophylactic treatment. They were these, in this order:

Cowardice, selfishness, stinginess, bragging.

"The answers surprised me," says the Y M C A man. "They weren't the answers I expected. But they also delighted me. Did you ever see a finer code of ethics in all your life—for a soldier or anyone else?"

How Names Are Changed.

From the Brooklyn Daily Eagle.

"Who Was Who?" is the suggested title for a new book to contain the names of all persons who have changed their names. A new publication will do that in England. If the work is carried back far enough it will be found that scarcely a name has survived the wear and tear of time. Some of the changes are intentional, like our daily applications in court, but most of them are due to bad spellers or poor pronunciation and phonetic spelling to express the errors of pronunciation. Our Dutch ancestors had a habit of cutting off everything that went down to and including the "Van." The name "Burch" was originally "Birch," and meant the man who lived by the birch tree. It is a curious comment on this new book that the London newspaper editor who is putting it out has juggled his own name after the English custom when taking a title.

May Ration Tobacco.

From the New York Times.

Government control of the tobacco industry of the United States may result from the heavy requirements of the allies and the American military forces abroad. Rationing of the American population is believed to be a possibility.

The war industries board announced recently that it has been conducting an investigation to determine the requirements abroad and the quantity that could be conserved in this country to meet the situation. It estimates that approximately two-thirds of the leaf tobacco raised in this country in 1917 will be available for American manufacturers. Out of this must come cigaret and pipe tobacco for troops not yet overseas and exports of manufactured tobacco, in addition to cigarets and tobacco purchased here for Belgium.

The crop in 1917 was 1,196,000,000 pounds. Of this the board estimates that 850,000,000 pounds will be available this year for United States manufacturers while 346,000,000 pounds of leaf will be available for export to the allies.

Tobacco issued to the military forces of Great Britain, France and Italy amounts to approximately 159,000,000 pounds a year. Britain and France each allot 40 per cent of their entire consumption to the army and navy, while Italy allows her military forces 45 per cent. The total yearly consumption of the entire population of these countries, the board estimates at 287,000,000 pounds, or 41,000,000 more than this country is able to export.

England, France and Italy are now chiefly dependent on imports from the United States, as their imports from other tobacco growing countries have been materially reduced through lack of shipping and inability to import from Turkey and Bulgaria.

Of the tobacco consumed by the Italian army and navy, probably one-third is issued free to the men in the form of tobacco, cigarets or cigars, but only those actually at the front or under fire are allowed free rations of tobacco. Soldiers and sailors in the zone of operations, but not actually at the front and those elsewhere, pay for their tobacco.

Since You Went Away.

Since you went away, every gay sailor lad,
Every khaki clad soldier I see,
Has a place in my heart, and a share in my thoughts
And belongs, just a little, to me,
He's a comrade of yours, and is bearing his share
Of the burden that rests upon you.
Both are doing the task which a nation has set
For its glorious manhood to do.

Since you went away, every fold of the flag
Has a message that's tender and true,
It has always meant liberty, freedom and right,
It now means my country—and you.
Your honor is part of the deep azure field
Your courage, of each crimson bar,
And the soul of you, shining, resplendent and clear,
Is a part of each beautiful star.
—Allison Brown, in the Metropolitan Magazine.

Too Much Fire Proof Coal.

From the New York Herald.

The fuel administrator has revoked the federal license of a coal dealer charged with selling for ships coal unsuited for use in the war zone. Similar action taken by our authorities with respect to domestic fuel would cause a wholesale decrease of the slate and other fireproof material it contains.

Camouflages Letter.

From the Portland Orgonian.

It is well known that the Germans compel prisoners of war to praise the treatment they receive and permit no letters to pass which contain complaints, but one American prisoner evaded their vigilance when he wrote to his parents the following apparently laudatory letter: "We are having the very best treatment. The Germans provide us with the best of everything. We could not be better treated if we were with our own people. There is only one thing we could wish for, and that is to be at Lakewood park." Lakewood park is a cemetery.

From the Pittsburgh Leader.

"When I came to this town, everything I had was tied up in a red bandanna," said the old citizen.

"And now?" asked his interviewer.

Antarctic sea leopard, Weddell seal and penguin oil may one day have a place in world commerce. Samples of these oils sent to the Imperial institute in London by Sir Douglas Mawson for the Australasian Antarctic expedition, have been pronounced of good quality and capable of being utilized for the purpose to which commercial seal and whale oils are applied, for soap making, leather dressing, burning, etc. The London Chamber of Commerce Journal remarks that there would doubtless be a ready sale for consignments of any of these oils at about the current price of whale and seal oils if they should become available in commercial quantities.

PRICE FOR FAME TOO HIGH

Modern Poet Not Willing to Undergo Martyrdom for Sake of Living in History.

Uncle John, the gifted poet of the Excelsior Spring Standard, has been studying the lives of the old masters and is much discouraged. He writes:

Old John Bunions told his Pilgrim piece while in the penitentiary doin' time for some little offense. Nearly all of 'em wrote their best stuff while in great distress.

Nearly all of 'em had sore eyes, some was totally blind, an' the common run of writin' material was poor—a sharp stick an' a gourdful of homemade ink was the best they had; in spite of them handicaps they managed to compose stuff that will live long after my best poem has went the route.

"Dad, I want a balloon."

"No you don't want any of those things," said the father; "if you had one it might burst and hurt you."

"Those things won't hurt," argued the boy.

Hot Weather "Out of Fix" Stomachs Easily Put Right

When hot weather comes, stomach and bowel miseries begin. Strong, sound stomachs as well as weak ones are easily affected by the harmful gases and acids so often produced in the things we eat and drink during hot weather. Winter—Nature's ice-box, is gone—hot weather breeds the poisonous germs that cause ptomaine poison in all its many forms.

Every one knows that the after-eating nausea, belching, that wretched, bloated, "lumpy" feeling, sour stomach, heartburn, food repeating, and other forms of indigestion and dyspepsia are far more frequent during hot weather. It is the time when you have to guard constantly against an upset stomach and the many ills that are always apt to follow. Then again—we have the world's war to win—with the change of diet and extra work which means we must all carefully guard our stomachs this year—keep ourselves fit and fine.

Millions Saved—
Get Your Share

Improved methods of building cars, that build them better and save millions of dollars to the public, is one of the substantial advantages you get in this Overland Model 90.

The time to save money is when you select your car, because afterwards you cannot make it any more economical than it is built to be.

Select this Model 90 and you save money in the first cost and in the maintenance cost. You cannot get complete satisfaction from less advantages than it gives—

And you cannot get as much value in any other car for the low price of this Model 90.

It has a powerful, fuel-saving motor; narrow turning radius; rear cantilever springs; 106-inch wheelbase; 31 x 4 tires, non-skid rear. Auto-Lite starting and lighting and vacuum fuel system.

It is as desirable as it is adequate, comfortable and easy-to-handle.

With it a salesman can double his value; a housewife gains time for Red Cross work, and business and professional men save time and multiply their activities.

It coins time and money for more than 80,000 others. Why not for you?

THE CIRCUS CAME TO TOWN

Early last Saturday morning the small boys of the town had congregated on the street corners of Klemme, eagerly watching for the first glimpses of the big show which was to show in Klemme that day Soon you could hear a boyish voice yell, "Here they come," and down the road they would run when the first motor truck pulled in The boys were right there ready to earn a "comp" Honest Bill's Show was scheduled to show at Garner Friday, but could not get there in time so showed at Klemme Saturday and passed up Garner They did not put on the afternoon performance on account of the rain, but had a good crowd in the evening and gave a good entertainment. This show travels entirely on trucks and they had a number of large 5-ton Kelly Springfield trucks, together with a number of smaller ones They had a goodly number of animals with them also, including a drove of four camels, three large elephants, lions, zebra, etc. The show was far above the average show playing small towns.

He is a jolly good fellow to meet and says he is here to stay. He invites you to come to his shop for a good careful shave or haircut or any other first class barber work. Mr. McCullough will run a laundry basket in connection.

SMITH—SAMPSON

Married at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Lewis Sampson, their daughter, Florence Ethel to Mr. Harry L. Smith of Ft. Atkinson, Wisconsin, on Wednesday, August 14th, at 4 p. m. Rev. Myer performed the ceremony.

The bride is the third daughter of Mr. and Mrs. L. Sampson who has grown up in our midst to a beautiful young lady. She graduated from the Klemme high school in the class of 1917 and attended Highland Park college in Des Moines last year, and she taught a very successful year of school west of Klemme. She was attired in a green taffeta silk suit.

The groom is a prosperous clerk of the freight yards at Atkinson, Wisconsin. He has had three years of service for the U. S., being in the late Mexican war and guarded the border in Texas until his health became so that Uncle Sam gave him a very honorable discharge.

A bountiful five o'clock dinner was served by the mother of the bride and the happy couple left at 6:40 to make their future home in Atkinson.

The wedding was a quiet one, only the closest friends and relatives were present.

They will be greatly missed in Klemme but best wishes for a long and prosperous wedded life is the wish of their Klemme friends.—Contributed.

THE KLEMME SERVICE FLAG

Klemme has the most beautiful service flag of any town around here and the Red Cross ladies are to be congratulated for it's making. Now such a beautiful service flag as we have should be hung up some place where the citizens of Klemme, and also all visitors can see it. Since it's dedication we have only seen it flown once or twice on the ropes above the street. Why not put it up again? Of course we don't want it exposed to rain but it should be there in good weather. Why not see to it that it shall float over the street again? We suggest that in disagreeable weather that it be placed in the Post Office. At any rate let's have it unfurled in the breeze again as a tribute to Our Boys fighting for Uncle Sam.

KLEMME, IOWA

One of the things that make New York an interesting city is the practice of some shopkeepers of putting in their windows attractive goods with price labels. An arresting instance of this sort was seen recently in a Broadway jeweler's window. Here was a finger ring of diamonds and an emerald, price $12,500, a marquise shaped diamond ring, $4,250, pear shaped diamond pendant, $2,250, diamond earrings, $5,800, and a galaxy of other resplendent gems to appeal to the frequenters of the "Great White Way." At the other extreme of the social scale for the buying public are the push carts of New York's east side, equally interesting in their way. On one of these carts in Canal street an astonishing variety of things mechanical was found—among others, clocks and watches, music boxes, all kinds of tools and at least a score of second hand cameras of various makes.

At Ann Arbor, Mich, workmen recently repaired the outside stairs of old University hall. The building was constructed in the '70s, and complaint was made at that time that the stairway was too narrow to permit the co-eds to pass comfortably, as the era of the hoopskirt was on them. The stairway, though rebuilt, is as narrow as the original passageway.

LOYALTY TO FAMILY PAID IN THE END

Ayre, Mass., Aug. 15.—Two days after Russell R. Vaughn enlisted in Company I, of the Forty-second infantry, at Council Bluffs, Ia., last August, he received word from his mother that his father was incapacitated for work and that she and the children were dependent on charity. Without the formality of applying for leave, the boy went home and for six months supported the family. The day his father was able to resume work Russell gave himself up to the military authorities at Fort Omaha.

The case was so plainly against the boy when he was courtmartialed for desertion that the court was obliged to sentence him to three years at hard labor, forfeiture of pay and allowances and dishonorable discharge.

Maj. Barratt O'Harra, former lieutenant governor of Illinois, now judge advocate at Camp Devens, where the regiment had been transferred, in the meantime recommended clemency. The sentence thereupon was mitigated to six months at hard labor by Col. George L. Byroade, commandant. With all the requirements of strict army discipline fulfilled, Colonel Byroade in the next breath suspended the mitigated sentenced and restored the boy to his old place in his company with a bit of soldierly advice.

EXEMPT PRESS WIRES FROM 10 PER CENT TAX

Washington, D. C., Aug. 13.—Reversing its former action, the House ways and means committee today struck from the great tax bill the proposed 10 per cent on press association wires. Only broker wires are now included under this tax. Representative Rainey, Illinois, next to Kitchin in democratic rank on the committee, led the fight for reconsideration and disapproval of the original action on the tax. He showed that the levy proposed, coming atop the voluntary sacrifice of revenue by newspapers in curtailing the amount of news and advertising by reducing print paper consumption would make it virtually impossible for scores of small dailies to receive telegraph news if forced to meet the additional tax.

CITY OFFICIALS GET BOOST IN SALARIES

LeMars, Ia., Aug. 12.—At the regular meeting of the city council this week [illegible] to raise the salaries of the mayor and policemen. Mayor McLain will receive $10 per month instead of $25 as formerly. Chief of Police Alex Davidson will receive $55 and Night Policemen [illegible] Harbour and G. G. Davis were [illegible] from $65 to $80 per month.

The question of a raise in salaries of these officials has been up for some time. City Attorney Miller claims it is contrary to the state law but members of the council believe an emergency exists because of the high cost of living and favor the raise.

RACE TROUBLE FEARED: RESULT OF EXPLOSION

Persia, Ia., Aug. 12.—A bitter feeling arising over the war which has caused a division of people in and near Persia, where there are many Germans who are considered hostile to the American government, is believed to have been responsible for a serious explosion which almost resulted in the deaths of several men of a threshing crew. Suspicions point to two Germans. A bloodhound trailed a trace from the [illegible] to their homes. They have not been arrested but the case will be investigated by the council of defense in Shelby county.

ASKS DAMAGE FOR ALLEGED MALPRACTICE

LeMars, Ia., Aug. 12.—Mrs. Angelina Struse of this city has started suit against [illegible] & Harvey, chiropractors, alleging malpractice and filed a petition with the clerk of the courts. She asks $5,000 damages, claiming that she was injured when she went to them for treatment. She asserts she suffered a fractured rib through their negligence and carelessness, while under treatment and had to call in a surgeon to attend to her injuries.

SPENCER SCHOOL HEAD TO TAKE NEW POSITION

Spencer, Ia., Aug. 10.—Edward W. Goetch, superintendent of the public schools of Spencer for the past three years has resigned to accept a position as professor of rural school education in the state teachers' college at Cedar Falls. He is a graduate of the normal and of the University of Iowa. He was formerly superintendent of schools at Bedford, Ia.

SPENCER CHILDREN DEMONSTRATE LOYALTY

Spencer, Ia., Aug. 12.—Professor Goetch, head of the schools reports a per capita investment in War Savings stamps of pupils in the Spencer schools of $20. Every pupil has bought a stamp. This average is the best of any school in the state. Spencer pupils have a total investment of nearly $18,000 in War Savings stamps, $13,000 in Liberty bonds, and donated $500 to the Red Cross.

DES MOINES—Twenty counties which were unable to furnish their quotas of men to be sent to Camp Forrest, Lytic, Ga., July 29, have received a deficiency call. There were 20 counties which were unable to furnish their share of the 3,265 Iowa men asked for. Reports show that these counties now have sufficient men to make up their deficiency. If there are not enough men furnished through the reclassification of 1917 registrants, 1918 men will be taken.

SPAIN MAY COME IN WITH ALLIED FORCES IN CRUSHING BOCH

London, Aug. 13.—That a break between Spain and Germany likely was reported here this afternoon.

The recent sinking of two Spanish steamers by German submarines led to considerable unrest in Madrid. This was followed by internment of the crew of a U-boat that sought refuge in a Spanish port.

Rumors of strained relations between Spain and Germany, largely on disputes over U-boat operations, have been circulated some time past. Today's report is the first given by London authorities.

Germany is supposed to have maintained submarine bases on Spanish coast most of the time since the beginning of the war, and have kept up wireless communications through Spain continuously.

Should Spain elect to open active hostilities against Germany, army could be placed on the western front in France within a few weeks at most.

The effect of her fresh troops hurled against the crippled German army just at this time could hardly be overestimated.

Russia Back Into War By Next Summer at Le[illegible]

BY JOSEPH SHAPLEN.

United Press Staff Correspondent.

(Who arrived today from Russia.)

New York, Aug. 14.—Events are sweeping Russia back into the war. There is every reason to hope now that next summer will bring restoration of the eastern front. The abrogation of the Brest-Litovsk peace treaty may be expected any moment.

That the end of the bolshevists is near has been pointed out repeatedly in United Press dispatches. I have never been so convinced of it as I am now. The big question was who would succeed them. Germany has felt the inevitable downfall of the bolshevist. The late Count Mirbach's principal work in Moscow was to prepare for the downfall of the bolshevists and the establishment of a government similar to that of Skoropadski in the Ukraine. But Russia's passion for freedom and unity has frustrated the schemes of Germany. There will be no Skoropadski government in Moscow. The constituent assembly composed of an overwhelming majority of social revolutionists and socialists of the Menshevist groups are coming back into power. Their first act will be an announcement to the world that the shameful Brest-Litovsk treaty no longer exists, that the revolutionary democracy of Russia does not recognize it. FOCH IS AGAIN USING HIS SQUEEZE METHO[illegible]

BY J. W. T. MASON.

United Press War Expert.

New York, Aug. 14.—The allies' advance is slowing down in conformity with Marshal Foch's policy of not wasting the lives of his troops when time is working so powerfully on the side of the allied cause.

In substitution for direct assaults with their heavy casualties to the attacking troops Marshal Foch is again reverting to his squeeze plans. Pressure at strategical points is now the dominant feature in plans now being formed at Foch's headquarters. The Germans must eventually fall back to the old Hindenburg line and beyond the Chemin des Dames as well, and Marshal Foch is showing that he will not force this retirement within any given number of days.

Neither the Marne attack nor the present drive in Picardy constitutes a true major offensive. Marshal Foch issued a firm veto in each series of operations against any extension of the assaults beyond strictly limited objectives. The enemy was caught in traps on both occasions and outguessed and outgeneraled.

During the Marne engagements as well as now Marshal Foch [illegible] vealed that it was useless for Von [illegible] denburg to seek to entrap the [illegible] At the point where Von Hinde[illegible] set out to "lure the allies on" Marshal Foch immediately brings his [illegible] mands to a standstill. This [illegible] of caution and of regard for the [illegible] of his men is in full conformity [illegible] Marshal Foch's ultimate strategy. [illegible] Neither Picardy nor the Chemin [illegible] Dames, nor even the Belgian [illegible] contains the allies' main ob[illegible] That objective is the River Rhine [illegible] beyond. It would be a short [illegible] policy for Marshal Foch to use [illegible] main power driving Von Hinde[illegible] back to Belgium by direct [illegible] through French territory, in pref[illegible] to using this great [illegible] invasion of Ger[illegible] Once the [illegible] led by Americans [illegible] are [illegible] Germany, the rest will follow.

But, in the meantime, whenever Hindenburg [illegible] gross error in strategy, Marshal Foch [illegible] to take full [illegible] of these mistakes. Thus the allies [illegible] be kept down [illegible] the great [illegible] the Rhine, but in the while, [illegible] morale will be [illegible] to suffer no deterioration.

GOMPERS AT HEAD OF MISSION TO ENGLAND

Washington, D. C., Aug. 13.—America's mission to the British trade unions congress which meets in London September 17, 18 and 19 will be headed by Samuel Gompers, president of the American Federation of Labor, and will tour England, France and Italy to confer with labor leaders.

Mr. Gompers left Washington today for New York for a series of conferences there before sailing. He will be accompanied abroad by William J. Bowen, president of the International Bricklayers' and Plasterers' union; John T. Frey, president of the International Moulders' union; Edgar Wallace, editor of the United Mine Workers' Journal, and C. L. Paine, president of the International Boot and Shoe Workers' union.

Mr. Gompers conferred yesterday with President Wilson. He declined today to discuss questions to be considered by the congress, or the purpose in visiting France and Italy. Socialism, he declared, would occupy no part in deliberations of the American delegates. He added there would be no socialist representation.

THIRTY SCHOOLS QUALIFY

Washington, D. C., Aug. 13.—Thirty more universities and colleges were added today to the list of institutions qualifying for special army training camp units, entitling them to uniforms and rifles [illegible] army instructors. They include:

Iowa State college, Baylor university, Waco, Texas, and State agricultural college, Fort Collins, Colo.

The question of whether an enlisted man in the American army does [illegible] his money has been answered [illegible] Alexandria, La., by a disclosure of financial affairs of one member of a machine gun company at Camp Beauregard. The soldier receives $30 a month. Of this $15 is sent home to his mother, $5 is paid on a Liberty bond for [illegible] and $6.50 is deducted for [illegible] leaving a balance of $3.50 or approximately 25 cents a day. An Army regulation provides [illegible] with [illegible] which is [illegible] stores, and the officers have decided to [illegible] a saving he has decided to [illegible] account.

SAFE FARMING

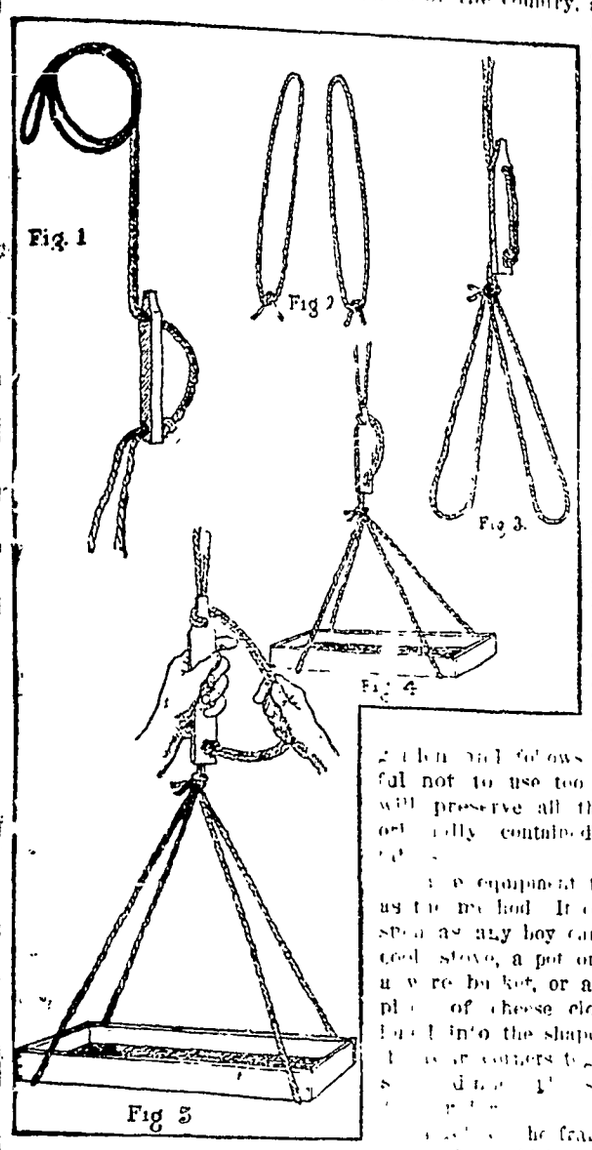
Dry Vegetables at Home

Article No. 1—Necessary Equipment Found in Every Home or Easily Made

By P. G. HOLDEN

AT NO other time was it so important to dry or can fruit or vegetables in the home as it is this year, as commercially canned products will be hard to obtain. In a special bulletin, "Food Conservation," recently issued by the United States Department of Agriculture, the following statement of greatest interest to every family is made:

"We are informed by the U. S. Government that it has contracted for 65 per cent of the output of the canners of the country, and that the Allies will probably take over the other 35 per cent. This information should induce American housewives to preserve vegetables which are plentiful in the summer for winter consumption."



Method of Constructing Rope Harness for Drying Frame.

Drying saves the product, saves storage space, saves transportation. Dried products may be kept anywhere, as long as they are in airtight containers and are out of the reach of rats or mice.

Any one can successfully dry and save any product. When desired for food, all products can be partly restored, many of them to nearly their original condition. The housewife who takes vegetables fresh from the garden and follows directions, being careful not to use too much heat in drying, will preserve all the taste and nutrition originally contained in the green vegetables.

The equipment for drying is as simple as the method. It consists of three frames such as any boy can make, any kind of a good stove, a pot or pan or a tin bucket; a wire basket, or a flour sack, or even a piece of cheese cloth that can be fashioned into the shape of a bag by bringing the four corners together; a few pie pans, some drying trays and an earthenware crock.

The frames should be about 27 inches long 14 inches wide and 11½ inches deep. The sides and ends can be made of wood and the bottom should be of galvanized wire screen wire fastened with double pointed tacks. Get two pieces of small sized rope or window weight cord, each six feet long. Tie the ends of each piece together making two loops, each exactly 30 inches long (Fig 2). Place one loop around one end of the frame, the other loop around the other end (Fig 4). Bring the upper ends of the loops together and fasten them with a third loop of the rope sufficiently long to reach from a few feet above the stove to a hook in the ceiling (Figure 3). Near each end of a block of wood, 8 inches long and 1½ inches wide, bore a hole large enough to let the doubled rope pass through easily. Pass the end of the upright rope through one hole and shove the block down to the junction of the two loops (Fig. 3). Tie a knot in the upright rope to keep the lower end of the block from slipping up, then pass the double rope through the upper hole in the block (Fig. 4), and place the upper end of the upright loop over the hook in the ceiling.

The purpose of the block of wood is to make it easy to adjust the height of the frame. To raise the frame pull the rope through the upper hole in the block until the desired height is reached, then fasten the frame in place by looping the "slack" of the rope around the upper end of the block as shown in Figure 5.

Place two loops of rope, each about 24 inches long around the suspended frame, one loop at each end, and let them hang down. In the lower ends of these loops, place the second frame and suspend the third frame from the second in the same manner.

TWILIGHT IN THE WOODS

From the London Times

Going to bed is one thing getting up is another. There are no doubt there must be, people who rise with ease and facility, and incontinently break into profuse strains of unpremeditated art. There are such people and they are rather hard to live with. But going to bed is a very different matter. To go to bed is, on the face of it, an easy thing, and the pressure of the times is in the direction of making it easier. Hard worked people need a great deal of work, and every one is glad or ought to be, hard worked today. This is the day of work, and every one is glad, or ought to be, when the night cometh. Moreover, there is a too long delayed movement on foot to make children go to bed earlier. It is a town movement and fits in with the policy that people who are called educationists have announced the "healthy, wealthy and wise" policy. But, strangely enough, children do not like going to bed, they much prefer falling asleep in their traces, so as not to miss a moment of the gladness of living.

Children, especially in our village, make every possible excuse for not going to bed. In the big houses they are, they say, afraid to go to bed afraid of bogies, who glide across magic casements or slide down miraculous moonbeams; afraid of the fox with his three quick, hoarse barks, in the neighboring woods; afraid of the owls who cry; afraid (to think of it!) of the nightingales who sing of lost love and irretrievable fate. But they are not really afraid; they want to be up and seeing and listening and doing. The cottage children achieve more fully what the manor house children long for. They know something at first hand of the mysteries—mysteries of sunset and moonrise, half light and moonlight, starlight and firelight and no light, mysteries of glade and woodland light, mysteries of glade and woodland and winding, shadowy paths, which all children crave after. Going to bed! It is only mortals who go to bed, and children are immortals.

It is right and proper for town children to go to bed early, the streets are no places for them. But in the country, the lure of the twilight, of clean cool, flower scented breezes on faces warm with the gathered sunlight of a long June day, is irresistible. The magic of a warm June evening in the woodland paths is such that no child can resist it. The birds do not resist it, though they will arise before the sun. The skylark is singing long before sunrise. Late in the dusk, mysteriously flitting, a grey shadow in a moon gray copse, a cuckoo calls. His note dominates the eventide, the call of a magician who bids the woodland oafs and gnomes come out from their shelters and dance on a turf in a green glade. And, behold, they come.

Shadowy, tiny figures are dancing, shrill little voices are calling, calling from tree trunk to tree trunk and they have a fire, a little glowing red charcoal heap, the hearth of their revels. And there are human oafs and gnomes and they are breathing, and in a sense making the mysteries that men humanly talks about and writes about. They are in love with their forest and its winding aisles and green theaters of unrecorded joys. And they are prudent folks these forerunners of the midsummer fairies they have brought their supper with them and each couple of adventurers are earrying its own hearth in the heart of the leafy wood. There is a moment in spring when the summer heat has not yet come and the winter cold has fled away, when the green of the year has no darkness in it, and the quick ear can feel the growth of things, in which the children roam with irresistible ardor the right to take the twilight road.

But at last in the deepening shadows the little people take their homeward paths and the charcoal glows untended in the quiet clearing that the full moon roofs with beams. Even oafs and gnomes must go to bed, and the mallet of the sleep god is smiting them. More and more they scatter, each seeking some special path to some special cottage in the scattered village. Quietly they lose a long golden lads and lassies all plucking a leaf, snatching a song till at last mother and her apron loom in sight and a word of welcome is obliterated with bread and butter are bed in a twinkling ends the long, glad June day.

Great Britain's Bit.

From the London Daily News

When war broke out the British army consisted of 250,000 regulars. 200,000 reserves and 250,000 territorials. About 100,000 of these were serving abroad. But an expeditionary force of 160,000 was put into France in a fortnight there were 100,000 volunteers. In the fifth week 175,000 men enrolled—no fewer than 30,000 in one day. In the first year 2,000,000 men had enlisted. The position today is that the empire has raised 7,500,000 men, as follows:

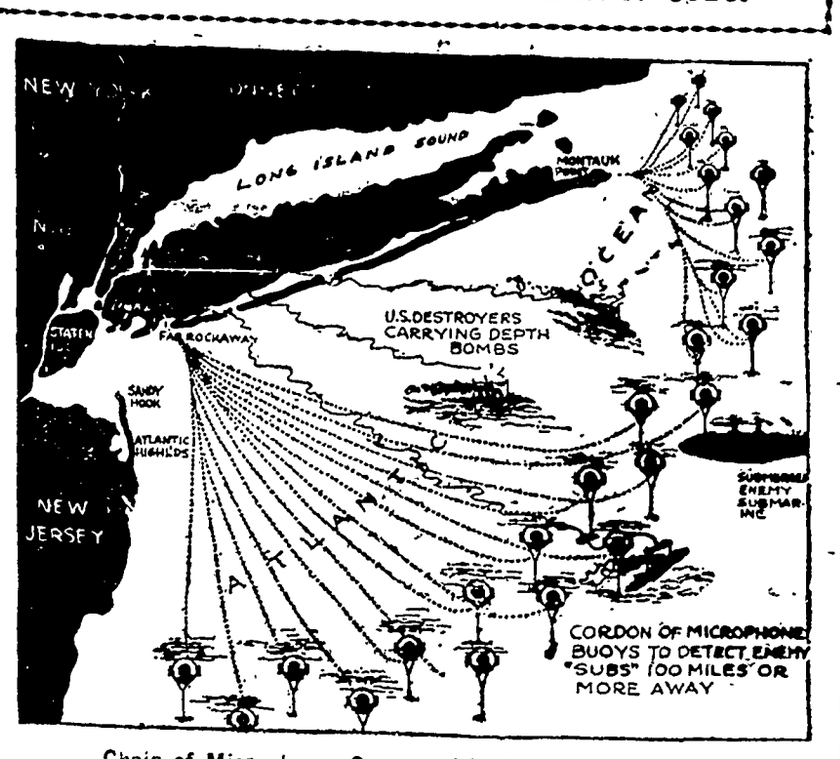
England	4,530,000
Wales	280,000
Scotland	620,000
Ireland	170,000
Self governing dominions	900,000
Native troops and labor corps	1,000,000
Total	7,500,000

In 1907 alone 820,000 troops were put into the army and this was before the age limit was raised from 41 to 51, or even 55 in certain instances. It means that in England and Scotland one person in every seven and one-half is serving, while in the dominions it is one person in every 15. Out of all males in England from the cradle to the grave one out of every four is or has been fighting Germany either on land or sea.

Total British casualties have been as follows:

To the end of 1915	550,000
In the year 1916	650,000
In the year 1917	800,000
	2,000,000

MICROPHONES TO WARN NEW YORK OF SUBS.



Chain of Microphones Suggested for New York Harbor.

A project for throwing about New York harbor a deadline for submarines is outlined by H. Gernsbach in the Electrical Experimenter. The illustration shows how a chain of submerged microphones connected with a central switchboard is suggested, to listen for the sound of the whirring submarine propellers. Upon the receipt of telltale noises waiting destroyers are dispatched to the indicated vicinity and the submarine hunted down.

Taxes and the Bond Issue.

From the New York World.

The House ways and means committee is beginning work on a war revenue bill to raise $8,000,000,000 from taxes this year, instead of the $4,000,000,000 raised last year. It expects to have the bill ready by late in August, while the treasury department is planning a big loan drive for late September.

The president has urged early action on the tax bill for the reason that business men should know where they stand as soon as possible. It is quite as important that the people generally should know where they stand in relation to taxes in order that they may know what they can do in subscribing for the new Liberty bonds.

This will not matter so much with those whose incomes have been favorably affected by war conditions or by that species of inflation which is reflected in a more or less arbitrary and very high and fictitious state of prices and valuations of property. But it will matter greatly to the so-called salaried class, who have been a large support of previous bond issues, but whose nominal incomes have not advanced and whose real incomes or wages have been falling steadily under rising prices and necessary costs of living.

There is nothing elastic in these incomes. It is all the other way. It is a case of being caught between an immovable body on one side and an irresistibly constricting force moving from the other side. It will be a case not of willingness to continue buying bonds, but of an honest inability to do anything of the kind.

The tax revenues are to be doubled. It is important not only that congress keep in mind this forthcoming bond issue in its distribution of the doubled tax burdens, but that this class of income earners as well as all others be informed beforehand of just where they stand in relation thereto.

BRIGANDS AND CONQUERORS.

From the Columbus (Ohio) Dispatch.

It is an old, old story, but it is applicable today when considering a certain emperor and the doing of his troops in stricken Russia. It will not, therefore, do any harm to again relate it.

Once there was a Thracian pirate named Dionides, who had been ravishing the seas in the days of Alexander. He was finally rounded up and taken before the mighty conqueror for sentence. Alexander said to him something like this:

"You contemptible brigand, how dare you infest the seas with your misdoings?"

But it didn't frighten Dionides. The pirate simply grinned as he replied:

"And you! By what right do you ravish the universe? Just because I have but one ship I am called a brigand, but, having a whole fleet at your command, you are called a conqueror!"

It is recorded that Alexander saw the point and released the pirate. But the moral is that if one man were to go into the Ukraine and rob the people, he would be called a robber or brigand or something else despicable. But here we have the German emperor throwing thousands of men into the region and taking everything they can carry off and murdering the people who refuse to give up their property to them, and it is called warfare.

War, As Usual.

Chester M. Wright, in the New York Tribune

Big pictures are made of little sweeps and daubs of paint. Big, wide mind impressions sometimes are made up of little jottings and flashings of men and things. The war "over there" is really a collection of experiences through which millions of men and women are going in various ways. It is made up of howitzers and food shortage of trenches and hospitals, of women who say 'goodby' to their men with a smile on their faces, and of men who go bravely into hellfire over heaving earth—of these and many other things is this war made up. It is made up of English girls working in big munition plants where they wear rubber shoes to keep from blowing themselves up, of engineers who pull long trains of wounded into a big London railroad station, of brave men who go up over that same city to fight off murderous raiders, of nurses who care for men who may live and who may die and of silent folk who go without the food they used to know about uncomplaining and resolute. And it is made up of a thousand other things, some of which don't look as if they had any relation to war. Here are some little flashes at just a few of the things that we saw while we (members of the American Federation of Labor mission to Great Britain and France) went through Britain and France a tour lasting five weeks, in which we saw and saw until our eyes ached with seeing and our minds balked at taking in any more of the multitude of strange impressions:

The war is as near to New York as it is to Paris. The fighting is not. If it were you would see something like this:

The lions that flank the public library entrance would be covered with sandbags. The statue of Ben Franklin down by city hall would no longer stand as a visible symbol of meditation and wisdom. You would see a yellow pile of irregular shape (protection against bombs and bits of shrapnel. They would be taking the glass out of the most precious of the art windows in the cathedrals and churches. Queer criss crosses of paper would turn shop windows into checkerboards, so that when the flying bits of iron came splintering through them the glass wouldn't fly in large quantities.

In Washington square the great arch would be lost to view under a protecting structure of wood and sandbags or brush. There would be signs near every subway approach and near every basement door. On these signs would be an arrow and this inscription, "Bomb shelter, 50 people," or whatever number the place might accommodate. Now and then a structure would be closed to the public—wrecked by a bomb, as is St. George's church, in Paris, where on Good Friday, a shell from the supercannon came hurtling against a huge pillar, killing 107 as they prayed. A bit of stone chipped out of the municipal building would show where a crippled airplane had crashed into the structure while trying to make a landing in the inadequate space near the bridge approach.

And the visitor would be told about how things used to be before the Germans came so near. But the fortitude of liberty loving humanity would be just as evident in New York as it is in Paris, let us hope.

Most Wills Are Good.

Robert Grant, in Scribner's Magazine.

The right to regulate what shall be done with one's property, after death, remains substantially intact, and this, too, notwithstanding the popular impression that the intention of testators is very easily frustrated. It is a current belief, which derives color from the sensational contests of which we read in the newspapers, that a great many wills are broken. But, though the attacks of disappointed or greedy relatives are numerous, the contrary is true, according to the records of the largest county of the state with which I am most familiar and where predatory tendencies against testators are well developed.

These records show a steady average of rather less than 1 per cent of wills disallowed during the last 10 years, a result which is made more remarkable by the reminder that some of these were set aside because of defective attestation instead of the mental incapacity and undue influence of the maker ordinarily urged by the rapacious. The statistics for the same period show a yearly average of less than 1 per cent of wills compromised—that is where the legatees and next of kin agreed to split their differences with the sanction of the court. These figures, which are undoubtedly indicative of conditions elsewhere, reveal a disposition on the part of juries to uphold the validity of legal testaments and tend to contradict the notion of the man in the street that his last wishes are apt to be disregarded.

It is rather surprising, however, that the showing on the side of validity should be so good considering the haphazard and hasty, if not sloppy, execution of so many wills. Instead of regarding the making of a will as one of the most solemn of ceremonials, the man in the street, if not the capitalist, is constantly asking foolish chances, as if he conceived it to be a privilege of democracy to be able to make a will in "any old way," and have it stand.

Kept His Hand In.

From the Pittsburg Chronicle-Telegraph.

"Smith is a great golf bug, isn't he?" said Brown.

"Yes," said Jones. "He kept his hand in all winter and practiced every day."

"But how could he practice in winter when the links are closed?" asked Brown.

"We walked downtown every morning, and every 200 yards he would swing at an imaginery ball with his cane," replied Jones. "Then he would cuss a blue streak."

AMERICAN WAS DOVE OF PEACE FOR SURE

Made Airplane Flight of 200 Miles and Prevented Another War.

London, (by mail).—An American's flight by airplane 200 miles from Jassy to Odessa was the means of bringing about peace between the Bolshevists and the Rumanians last March.

The American "peace dove," as the Rumanians called him after his daring flight, was Colonel Joseph Boyle, Colonel Boyle, who was formerly in the Canadian army on the west front, was sent to Russia as the representative of the committee of the American Engineers in London and spent several months in Rumania and south Russia. The story of his secret airplane trip is now told for the first time.

Colonel Boyle was one of the few foreigners in Russia who had the confidence and close friendship of the extremist Russian parties from the beginning of the revolutionary period. He was known among the bolshevists as a man of action, honest and fearless and anxious to extend them a helping hand in every work of reconstruction. On his journeyings around Russia he was never interfered with or challenged. He carried personal letters and credentials from Lenine, Trotsky and a host of lesser leaders and could obtain almost anything he wanted from the local or provincial Soviets. He was accompanied everywhere by a staff of three Russian officers who spoke English fluently and who displayed great personal loyalty to Colonel Boyle.

During the latter part of February the situation between the bolshevists and Rumanians became very serious. War had even been declared on Rumania by the bolshevist government, owing to misunderstandings about the status of certain Russian troops in Rumanian territory and Rumanian troops in Bessarabia. Active hostilities, however, had been generally avoided, and both sides were presumably anxious to reach an amicable understanding.

But communication between Odessa and Jassy was in a state of disorganization which made the telegraphs and the mails useless. Every attempt at negotiations between the Rumanians at Jassy and the bolshevists at Odessa was blocked or brought to naught by by intriguers or mischief-makers. It began to look as if things were going to drift straight into bloodshed on a large scale.

It was at this point that Colonel Boyle, who had been trying to alleviate the food shortage in Rumania, arranged a meeting of unofficial representatives of both sides on the Rumanian frontier and succeeded in putting through an agreement between these representatives. The Rumanian government was ready to approve the decision of these informal plenipotentiaries, but how was formal confirmation or even favorable consideration, to be obtained from the bolshevist side?

The bolshevist "delegates" were without credentials or authority, but they felt if their case were properly put before the authorities in Odessa their course of action would be approved. Travel between Jassy and Odessa had been impossible for several weeks owing to the tearing up of the railway line in Benderi and the wrecking of several bridges and trestles.

Colonel Boyle volunteered to be the bearer of the olive branch, to carry the peace proposals to Odessa with the least possible delay by means of an airplane which he had already persuaded the Rumanian authorities to put at his disposal, and he proposed also to use his own personal influence with the bolshevist leaders in Odessa to secure their approval.

Speedy action was necessary, for it was known that orders had already been given to the bolshevist troops to begin hostilities on a large scale, and it was felt that once serious fighting had begun, the chances of an amicable adjustment would be much diminished.

The necessary papers were hastily prepared and signed, and Colonel Boyle motored to an airdrome near Jassy where a Rumanian pilot was waiting. The weather on the day of Colonel Boyle's departure was stormy and threatening, and several aviation experts advised him to postpone his journey. He declined to be dissuaded and left Jassy about noon, arriving safely at Odessa shortly before sunset.

The flight was made at a height of about 8,000 feet across a rough mountainous country and in the face of a driving sleet storm. The machine twice developed engine trouble, but this was overcome and a landing was made in an open field not far from the water front at Odessa. By midnight Colonel Boyle had secured the signing of the peace treaty and the cancellation of the orders for a bolshevist offensive against Rumania.

Trench Shoe Four Soles Thick.

From the New York Evening Post.

According to the government hide and leather control board the principal use to which leather is being put at the present moment is for the Pershing trench shoe. Beginning August 1 there will be delivered 1,500,000 pairs of the Pershing trench shoes every month. Each pair of these shoes weighs five and a half pounds. The shoes are heavier than those used by the armies of Great Britain or France. They are composed of a sole about three-quarters of an inch thick, made of four soles, or four thicknesses of leather. The sole and heel are completely studded with iron nails. Affixed to each heel and sole are iron plates so that the soldier is wearing out the metal all the time instead of leather. After these metal nails and plates wear out the shoes are exchanged for new ones, while the old are being restudded and replated to be worn again. The uppers of these shoes are the finest and heaviest that can be made.

The largest use of leather outside of that set aside for the Pershing trench shoe, or possibly larger, is for harness, for which there is a tremendous demand. It is stated that the government expects, within 60 days, to have all the black harness leather it requires, as for russet harness leather, large quantities are still required. The tanners of the United States are endeavoring to supply this demand for russet harness leather, which unquestionably will be met in time. Army officers are paying special attention to the manufacture and quality of stirrup straps for cavalry and artillery horses. They are making the most minute inspection of every stirrup strap, because if one breaks it means almost certain death to the rider. The strap is made of russet leather; it has got to be of the very finest quality and as strong as it is possible to turn it out.

"Yes, mum," was the reply, "but——"

"But what?"

"I've mislaid the hair, mum!"

CARL KUEHNLE GIVES TALK

Carl Kuehnle, of Denison, one of the most prominent speakers in the state, gave a talk to the people of Klemme Monday evening in the Idle Hour Theatre. The talk was to have been given in the park but on account of the cold damp weather it was advisable to hold it at the hall. Music in connection was given by a male quartette. Kuehnle gave a very good patriotic talk that was well worth hearing and which was greatly enjoyed. The crowd was rather small on account of the threatening weather.

RED CROSS NEWS

July shipment was 4 dozen pillow cases, 23 pair knitted socks and 8 sweaters.

The surgical quota has been received and is well under way as class meets twice a week.

The 25 underdrawers of the quota for this month are nearly finished.

We need more workers at our Red Cross on Wednesday and there is no reason why more mombers should not respond. This is OUR WAR, one and all and don't let there be just a faithful few, but all faithful to this cause. We have about 200 members in all and one-fourth ought to be there at least. Give a half day each week. Your work can some of it wait and if our boys need this Red Cross material don't let them have to wait. Let one and all take heed and come to help Win The War in this respect.

A Message to "Kitchen Soldiers"

How much shorter will this war be,
If every person saves as much as me?

The chance for women to be soldiers is here and each one of us is needed to enlist at once as a "Kitchen Soldier." This is not a selective draft of a few who are willing to save. It is a universal appeal to every thinking individual n Hancock county. By faithfully complying with the suggestions of the Food Administration a woman turns her kitchen into a trench from which point she fights the enemy no less effectively than do the men in France. I am glad this all-important field is left, in which we women may serve. Here we may prove our loyalty and our fidelity to the cause.

Now the call is S. O. S.—Save On Sugar. It is a little thing for each one to do, yet how much it means when we all answer the call. The bit of inconvenience it causes is as nothing compared with the sacrifice of English, French, Belgian and Italian women. Did you know that one-third of all our sugar goes into our coffee cups and tea cups? The challenge comes straight to you and to me. What shall we do with it? As true-blue American citizens we will not fail to meet it squarely and assume the duty with all other patriotic citizens:

To conserve sugar.

To omit it's use when possible.

To cut down consumption of candy, soft drinks and sweets.

To decline to eat cake with sugar in it.

To demand ice cream in which substitutes for sugar are used.

To learn to use cereals, coffee and sauces with less sugar, or no sugar at all.

To urge everyone to save sugar whenever possible.

To keep "canning sugar" strictly for canning.

The Conservation Exhibit at the County Fair in Britt, August 27-30 is planned to help train better Kitchen Soldiers. Questions will be answered and literature along all kitchen problems will be given free.

IOWA DID HER "BIT" TO FEED SOLDIERS

IMMENSE SAVING OF WHEAT FLOUR EFFECTED UNDER DIRECTION OF FOOD ADMINISTRATOR DEEMS.

Iowa's part in effecting such a saving of wheat flour that the United States could increase its export for our soldiers and associates in the war from 20,000,000 to 175,000,000 bushels of wheat in the past year was so large as to excite comment from the United States food administration at Washington.

The work of effecting this saving was in charge of D. G. Thompson, who was made chief of the flour division of the United States food administration in Iowa by Food Administrator J. F. Deems last winter, and through the effective co-operation of Mr. Thompson Administrator Deems was able to report to Mr. Hoover early in the summer that Iowa had gone over the top and far beyond in the campaign for conserving this essential bread stuff.

Mr. Deems and Mr. Thompson secured a census of all the wheat flour and the wheat supply in the state, determined the amount of flour which our people required under the six-pound-a-month rule, inaugurated an extensive campaign to induce saving to a point below the minimum ration fixed by the administration and thoroughly organized the milling and flour interests of the state, including wholesalers and retailers, in a co-operative effort to save the products.

Food Administrator Deems estimates that more than a million barrels of flour were saved by Iowa people for the use of our soldiers. He is confident that our people used very much less than six pounds a month—the minimum ration fixed by the government—and he has authorized the issuance of a message to Iowa people congratulating them on their very great part in this national movement in support of our troops.

Administrator Deems has just issued the rules covering the handling of new wheat, which are as follows:

1. The minimum price for No. 1 hard wheat, F. O. B. Chicago, is $2.26 per bushel.

2. A farmer can sell his wheat to the highest bidder.

3. A farmer can sell his wheat in any market that he chooses; there is no restriction.

4. A farmer, at the present time, can hold his wheat as long as he wishes.

5. It may be, later on, that the government will deem it advisable to requisition same.

6. The farmer is permitted to retain his wheat for seed.

7. The farmer is permitted to sell his wheat for seed.

8. A farmer can ship his wheat direct to any market without license.

9. If a farmer wishes his wheat graded, he can send sample to any United States grain inspector.

10. The farmer is permitted to take his wheat to the mill and have it ground into flour, not to exceed a supply that will last him over 30 days, based upon six pounds per capita, providing he will use substitutes and sign the pledge card same as was in vogue early this year.

Following is the actual price for sacked flour, bran, mixed feeds and middlings, F. O. B., at the four points of especial interest to Iowa people, under the price fixed by congress, and including the various margins of profit which are allowed by the United States food administration for products of wheat:

	98 Pound Flour	Bran	Mixed Feed	Mid-dlings
Omaha	$10.51	$23.17	$23.67	$23.17
Wichita	10.29	21.62	21.87	21.62
Kansas City	10.51	23.17	23.67	23.17
Minneapolis	10.05	19.77	20.52	21.27

These figures cover carlot shipments only, and they include prices for sacks quoted the last week in July.

DEEMS POINTS OUT DANGER FROM FIRE

UNITED STATES FOOD ADMINISTRATOR URGES FARMERS TO PROTECT GRAIN FIELDS ALONG RAILROAD LINES.

United States Food Administrator J. F. Deems of Iowa is concerned about the danger of losses of grain by fire and has issued a statement urging farmers, railroad managers and everybody to co-operate in avoiding this menace.

Travel through the state discloses that much grain is stacked and shocked near railroad lines; and hay is stacked adjacent to rights of way. Railroad rights of way, for the most part, are covered with rank growths of weeds.

All of this material will burn rapidly. Indeed, cut-over fields will burn as readily as grain and hay which have stood for a day or two after being cut.

Sparks from locomotives will carry, with the wind, sometimes 200 or 300 feet.

This combination of circumstances makes the danger from fire a very great peril.

But it is easy to guard against it. If farmers will stack as far from railroad rights of way as possible and will plow guards 75 to 125 feet within their fences along railroad rights of way, burning the strip from the furrows to the railroad, the danger will be largely eliminated.

Administrator Deems urges that attention be given to this vital matter in Iowa at once.

Coal Conserves Oxygen.

Recent developments in the coal situation in the Philippines, including a shortage in the supply of fuel for the archipelago during the last few months and the increasing use of fuel in the islands for industrial purposes in which fuel costs are of prime importance, have led to the organization of an association of large coal consumers in Manila, which is likely to be of great importance in industrial matters in the far east.

CANNING ACTIVITY IN HOMES IN IOWA

HOUSEWIVES HAVE DOUBLED THEIR OPERATIONS ON SUGGESTION OF THE FOOD ADMINISTRATION.

Early in the spring United States Food Administrator J. F. Deems of Burlington asked Iowa women to double their canning and preserving operations this year. Reports to his headquarters at Burlington indicate that this request has been followed, and perhaps twice as much home canned goods are being put up by Iowa women this year than were shelved last year.

Home demonstration agents under the leadership of Miss Neale S. Knowles, have made canning without sugar one of the important parts of their campaign of education, and Iowa women have been supplied with directions how to accomplish this result through the bulletin prepared by Catherine J. MacKay, Director of Home Economics for the United States Food Administration, on "Save Sugar When You Can," which has had very extensive circulation in the state.

The food administration proposes the establishment of communal kitchens in most of the towns in Iowa where canning operations can be carried on and encouraged, and a movement has been started to induce the preservation of wild fruits. In this connection the Camp Fire Girls of the state have been interested in gathering this fruit on their hikes, and canning it at home. The food administration also proposes the establishment of exchanges where women who have canned more fruit of one kind than they can use, in order to save it, will be enabled to exchange it for fruit of another kind of which some neighbor may have a surplus.

The food administration discourages the purchase of commercially canned goods during this season in order to encourage the consumption of fresh fruits and vegetables. This saves for consumption by the army commercially canned goods now in stock. For the same reason home canning and preserving is of benefit to the soldiers because it releases as much commercially canned goods as are put up at home. This is a vital matter for our soldiers, and it is on that account, as well as on account of the general program of conservation of food, that Iowa women have so generously responded to the appeal of the food administration for a maximum of canning this year.

The U. S. Food Administration for Iowa.

Following is a list of the officers and attaches of the United States food administration for Iowa, whose headquarters at Burlington, Iowa, were opened August 1, 1917:

"We have to do with an automatic distributor that delivers the incriminating letters which it contains by clockwork, releasing them only between this hour and that on such and such a night fixed in advance and only at times when the electric light is off. You have the apparatus before you No doubt the experts will admire its ingenuity and confirm my assertions But, given the fact that it was found in the ceiling of this room, given the fact that it contained letters written by M Fauville, am I not entitled to say that it was constructed by M Fauville, the electrical engineer?

Once more the name of M Fauville returned, like an obsession and each time the name stood more clearly defined It was M Fauville; then M Fauville, the engineer then M Fauville, the electrical engineer And thus the picture of the hater as Don Luis said, appeared in its accurate outlines, giving those men, used though they were to the strangest criminal monstrosities a thrill of terror The hater was now no longer prowling around them They were already fighting with [illegible] an adversary whom you [illegible] but who [illegible] throat and [illegible] ground

And [illegible] s [illegible] the [illegible] th [illegible]

"So that [illegible] in one part of his [illegible] was—what shall I say?—the complice of his own murder? He dreaded death. He [illegible] against it. But he [illegible] his hatred should [illegible] That's the reason why [illegible] it is?"

"Almost Monsieur le Prefet You are following the same stages by which I travelled and, like myself, you are beginning to see the last truth before the truth which leaves the tragedy its sinister character and deprives it of all human proportions"

The prefect struck the table with his two fists and, in a suddenly violent voice, cried

"It's ridiculous! It's a perfectly preposterous theory M Fauville threatened with death, and observing his wife's ruin with that Machiavellian perseverance? Absurd! The man who came to my office the man whom you say was thinking of only one thing: how to escape dying! He was possessed by one dread alone, the dread of death

It is not at such moments the police emphasized that a man sets up clockwork and lays traps specially when those traps cannot take effect unless he dies by foul play Can you see M Fauville working at his automatic machine, putting in with his own hands letters which he has taken the pains to write to a friend three months before and intercept, arranging events so that his wife shall appear guilty and saying, 'There' If I die murdered, I'm easy in my mind, the person to be arrested will be Marie!'

"No you must confess, men don't take these gruesome precautions Or, if they do—if they do, it means that they're sure of being murdered. It means that they agree to be murdered. It means that they are at one with the murderer, so to speak, and meet him halfway. In short, it means——"

He interrupted himself, as if the sentences which he had spoken had surprised him. And the others seemed equally disconcerted. And all of them unconsciously drew from those sentences the conclusions which they implied, and which they themselves did not yet fully perceive.

Don Luis did not remove his eyes from the prefect, and awaited the inevitable words.

M Desmalions muttered:

"Come, come, you are not going to suggest that he had agreed——"

"I suggest nothing, Monsieur le Prefet" said Don Luis "So far, you have followed the logical and natural trend of your thoughts; and that brings you to your present position"

"Yes, yes, I know, but I am showing you the absurdity of your theory It can't be correct, and we can't believe in Marie Fauville's innocence unless we are prepared to suppose an unheard of thing, that M Fauville took part in his own murder. Why, it's laughable"

And he gave a laugh: but it was a forced laugh and did not ring true

"For, after all," he added, "you can't deny that that is where we stand"

"I don't deny it."

"Well?"

"Well, M Fauville, as you say, took part in his own murder."

This was said in the quietest possible fashion, but with an air of certainty that no one thought of protesting After the [illegible] and supposition [illegible] had compelled his [illegible] make they found [illegible] paper which it [illegible] for them to leave [illegible] against unan [illegible]

[illegible] never any doubt [illegible] in his [illegible] But of what did that [illegible] WI [illegible] part had he [illegible] traces of hatred [illegible] He [illegible] played that [illegible] the sacrifice [illegible] or under [illegible] all was [illegible] acted as his [illegible] executioner?

M [illegible] ons came crowding [illegible] s of M Desmalions [illegible] They thought of [illegible] of how to solve [illegible] Don Luis could feel certain that [illegible] was accepted [illegible] hand. From that moment [illegible] had but to tell his story of what [illegible] with out fear of contradiction. He did so briefly, after the manner of a superior report limited to essentials

Three months before the crime M Fauville wrote a series of letters to one of his friends, M. Langernault, who, as Sergeant Mazeroux will have told you, Monsieur le Prefet, had been dead for several years a fact of which M. Fauville cannot have been ignorant These letters were posted, but were intercepted by some means which it is not necessary that we should know for the moment M Fauville erased the post marks and the addresses and inserted the letters in a machine constructed for the purpose, of which he regulated the works so that the first letter should be delivered a fortnight after his death and the others at intervals of 10 days

"At this moment it is certain that his plan was concerted down to the smallest detail Knowing that Sauverand was in love with his wife watching Sauverand's movements, he must obviously have noticed that his detested rival used to pass under the windows of the house every Wednesday and that Marie Fauville would go to her window

"This is a fact of the first importance one which was exceedingly valuable to me and it will impress you as being equal to a material proof Every Wednesday evening, I repeat, Sauverand used to wander round the house. Now note this: first, the crime prepared by M. Fauville was committed on a Wednesday evening; secondly, it was at her husband's express request that Mme. Fauville went out that evening to go to the opera and to Mme. d'Ersinger's."

Don Luis stopped for a few seconds and then continued:

"Consequently, on the morning of that Wednesday, everything was ready, the fatal clock was wound up, the incriminating machinery was working to perfection, and the proofs to come would confirm the immediate proofs which M Fauville held in reserve Better still, Monsieur le Prefet, you had received from him a letter in which he told you of the plot hatched against him, and and he implored your assistance for the morning of the next day—that is to say, after his death'

"Everything, in short, led him to think that things would go according to the 'hater's' wishes, when something occurred that nearly upset his schemes; the appearance of Inspector Verot, who had been sent by you, Monsieur le Prefet, to collect particulars about the Mornington heirs. What happened between the two men? Probably no one will ever know Both are dead; and their secret will not come to life again. But we can at least say for certain that Inspector Verot was here and took away with him the cake of chocolate on which the teeth of the tiger were seen for the first time, and also that Inspector Verot succeeded, thanks to circumstances with which we are unacquainted, in discovering M. Fauville's projects."

"This we know," explained Don Luis, "because Inspector Verot said so in his own agonizing words, because it was through him that we learned that the crime was to take place on the following night; and because he had set down his discoveries in a letter which was stolen from him

"And Fauville knew it also, because, to get rid of the formidable enemy who was thwarting his designs, he poisoned him, because, when the poison was slow in acting, he had the audacity, under a disguise which made him look like Sauverand and which was one day to turn suspicion against Sauverand, he had the audacity and the presence of mind to follow Inspector Verot to the Cafe du Pont-Neuf, to purloin the letter of explanation which Inspector Verot wrote you, to substitute a blank sheet of paper for it, and then to ask a passerby, who might become a witness against Sauverand, the way to the nearest underground station for Neuilly, where Sauverand lived! There's your man, Monsieur le Prefet."

Don Luis spoke with increasing force, with the ardour that springs from conviction; and his logical and closely argued speech seemed to conjure up the actual truth.

"There's your man, Monsieur le Perfet," he repeaed "There's your scoundrel. And the situation in which he found himself was such, the fear inspired by Inspector Verot's possible revelations was such, that, before putting into execution the horrible deed which he had planned, he came to the police office to make sure that his victim was no longer alive and had not been able to denounce him.

"You remember the scene Monsieur le Prefet, the fellow's agitation and fright: 'Tomorrow evening' he said. Yes, it was for the morrow that he asked for your help because he knew that everything would be over that same evening and that next day the police would be confronted with a murder, with the two culprits against whom he himself had heaped up the charges, with Marie Fauville whom he had so to speak, accused in advance * * *

"That was why Sergeant Mazeroux's visit and mine to his house at 9 o'clock in the evening embarrassed him so obviously Who were those intruders? Would they not succeed in shattering his plan? Reflection reassured him even as we, by our insistence, compelled him to give way

"After all, what did he care?" asked Perenna.

"His measures were so well taken that no amount of watching could destroy them or even make the watchers aware of them What was to happen would happen in our presence and unknown to us Death, summoned by him, would do its work * * * And the comedy, the tragedy, rather, ran its course. Mme Fauville, whom he was sending to the opera, came to say good night. Then his servant brought him something to eat, including a dish of apples Then followed a fit of rage, the agony of the man who is about to die and who fears death and a whole scene of deceit, in which he showed us his safe and the drab cloth diary which was supposed to contain the story of the plot. * * * That ended matters.

"Mazeroux and I retired to the hall passage, closing the door after us; and M. Fauville remained alone and free to act.

Nothing now could prevent the fulfilment of his wishes. At 11 o'clock in the evening, Mme. Fauville—to whom no doubt, in the course of the day, imitating Sauverand's handwriting, he had sent a letter one of those letters which are always torn up at once, in which Sauverand entreated the poor woman to grant him an interview at the Ranelagh—Mme. Fauville would leave the opera, and, before going to Mme. d'Ersinger's party, would spend an hour not far from the house.

"On the other hand, Sauverand would be performing his usual Wednesday pilgrimage less than half a mile away, in the opposite direction During this time the crime would be committed.

"Both of them would come under the notice of the police, either by M. Fauville's allusions or by the incident at the Cafe du Pont-Neuf; both of them, moreover, would be incapable either of proving an alibi or of explaining their presence so near the house; were not both of them bound to be accused and convicted of the crime? * * * In the most unlikely event that some chance should protect them, there was an undeniable proof lying ready to hand in the shape of the apple containing the marks of Marie Fauville's teeth! And then a few weeks later, the last and decisive trick, the mysterious arrival at intervals of 10 days of the letters denouncing the part So everything was settled

The smallest detail were foreseen with infernal clearness You remember Monsieur le Prefet, that harpoon which dropped out of [illegible] and was found [illegible] safe? [illegible] four persons who could have seen it and picked it up M Fauville was one of them Well, he was just the one, whom we all excepted and set it was he who, to cast suspicion upon me and to forestall any interference which he felt would be dangerous, seized the opportunity and placed the harpoon in the safe * * *

This time the words [illegible] petrified Fate was about to [illegible] Between the 'hater' and [illegible] there was but the [illegible] of an act The act was [illegible] M Fauville died."

[illegible] ceased [illegible] words were followed by a long silence and [illegible] felt certain that the extraordinary story which he had just finished telling met with the absolute approval of his hearers They did not discuss, they believed And yet it was the most flagrant denial of truth that he was asking them to believe

M Desmalions asked one last question:

"You were on the stairs with Sergeant Mazeroux That is to say, detectives outside the house M Fauville knew that he was to be killed that night and at that very hour of the night who can have killed him and who can have killed his son? There was no one within these four walls"

"There was M Fauville"

A sudden chaos of protests arose The veil was promptly torn, and the spectacle revealed by Don Luis provoked, in addition to horror an unforeseen outburst of incredulity and a sort of revolt against the too lucid attention which had been accorded to those explanations The prefect of police expressed the general feeling by exclaiming

"Enough of words! Enough of theories! However logical they may seem they lead to absurd conclusions"

"Absurd in appearance Monsieur le Prefet but how do we know that M Fauville's unheard of conduct is not explained by very natural reasons? Of course no one dies with a light heart for the mere pleasure of revenge But how do we know that M Fauville, whose extreme emaciation and pallor you must have noted as I did, was not stricken by some mortal illness and that, knowing himself doomed ——"

"I repeat, enough of words!" cried the prefect "You go only by suppositions What I want is proofs, a proof, only one. And we are still waiting for it"

"Monsieur le Prefet when I removed the chandelier from the plaster that supported it, I found, outside the upper surface of the metal box, a sealed envelope. As the chandelier was placed under the attic occupied by M. Fauville's son, it is evident that M Fauville was able, by lifting the boards of the floor in his son's room, to reach the top of the machine which he had contrived. This was how, during that last night, he placed this sealed envelop in position, after writing on it the date of the murder, '31 March, 11 p. m.,' and his signature, 'Hippolyte Fauville.'"

CONCENTRATE.

From the Washington Times.

All the education that all the colleges of the world could give you would not equal in value the education that you can give yourself by compelling your mind to work steadily and your will to keep pointing in one direction.

Nobody can teach you that but yourself. Here is a quotation from Lecky. You might paste it up on your little mirror, thus making sure that you will see it quite frequently when you study your thoughtful face or your tie-rack in the morning:

The discipline of thought; the establishment of an ascendancy of the will over our courses of thinking; the power of casting away morbid trains of reflection and turning resolutely to other subjects or aspects of life; the power of concentrating the mind vigorously on a serious subject and pursuing continuous trains of thought—form perhaps the best fruits of judicious self education.

Lend Money to Yourself.

From the Saturday Evening Post.

The men who make a living by manufacturing grievances for others would have to pay a heartbreaking excess profits tax this year if they were incorporated. Their industry is so prosperous that they are now delivering grievances by automobile instead of on foot. They are the foremost of our profiteers. They are the J. Rufus Wallingfords of economics, selling get-rich-quick theories of how to live without work and to take away the money of those who do work.

We have always had with us the fellows who complain that Shakespeare came along first and used up all the ideas, leaving nothing to write about; that the last generation settled down like a swarm of locusts on all the free land, leaving nothing to farm, and that big business has hogged all the loose dollars, leaving on spare change for the late comers. Now we have the man who says that in the future we must have no leisure class except the laboring class, and that the capital accumulated during the past 100 years must be given them to blow in.

Shakespeare used old stuff. He was a success because he added himself to it. When we say that a man "has got it in him" we mean that he has put it in. The socialist is right when he argues that all raw material is valueless except for the labor that is added to it—if he means human raw material.

Today there is a chance to put more of yourself into your work than ever before—and to make more out of the investment. More money is being made in a year out of $200 an acre land than the pioneer saw in a lifetime. The big business of 1999 is mere piking beside the big business of today and the bigger business that is coming tomorrow. The most successful farmers in the west were immigrants and hired hands 20 or 30 years ago, the most successful business men were laborers, clerks and salesmen; and practically all the writers whose names loom large in print were $15 or $20 a week reporters.

For the man with skilled or merely willing hands there are today more jobs, better jobs with higher pay and a wider margin for saving, with possibilities of quicker advancement, than at any time in the past 100 years. This is the era of big opportunity for the little fellow. If you have the will to work and the grit to save you are on the way up. A few hundred, $1,000, $5,000 laid by in War Savings stamps and Liberty bonds may mean a fortune later If will certainly mean a step up.

Every time you stick a stamp in the War Savings book you are sending money to yourself—to be delivered on that day in the future when opportunity will stand ready to furnish the chance if you can find the cash Every man who speeds up on production and slows down on spending is helping the country in its hour of need and making sure provision for his own

America Pays Damages.

From the European Edition of the New York Herald.

A cable from Washington reads:

"President Wilson has asked congress to appropriate $13,511 to be paid to Marie Crignier, of Paris, for damages caused Grange-aux-Belles by the excavations made in 1906 in searching for the body of Admiral John Paul Jones. Congress will make the appropriation."

The body of John Paul Jones, the "Father of the American navy," was on Thursday, July 8, 1906, formally delivered over by Gen. Horace Porter, ambassador extraordinary, to Francis B. Loomis and Admiral Sigsbee delegated to receive it by the president of the United States. The admiral's body had rested forgotten for 113 years in its grave. Five hundred American sailors and marine came to Paris to act as an escort and French soldiers paid the last honors. The body lay in state in the American church in the Avenue de l'Alma before being conveyed to Cherbourg.

The thoroughfare outside the church was lined with soldiers and crowded with spectators, while thousands of people waited along the Champs-Elysees, on the Pont Alexandre III and on the Esplanade des Invalides to see the cortege. A tribune has been erected in the Place des Invalides and here the casket was placed on a bier and covered with an American flag and with flowers.

With the body of the man who, as captain of the United States Ranger received from a French man-of-war the first salute ever given the American flag by a foreign power lying thus in state and surrounded by the ambassadors and ministers of nearly every civilized nation, the soldiers of France filed before the bier twice, saluting as they marched past. At Cherbourg the coffin was placed on board Admiral Sigsbee's flagship, the cruiser Brooklyn.

Monday July 21 the body was taken ashore at Annapolis Md., and placed in a simple brick vault awaiting the national reception. The French nation participated in this ceremony with a landing party from the cruiser Jurien de La Graviere.

It Will End.

The captain and the colonel still bravely charge the foe; but, nothing is eternal in this punk world below. some day when we are snooping around with spirits drooping, fair peace will come kerwhooping, and end the reign of woe. They're shooting and they're blasting, as they have done for years; but nothing's everlasting in this, the best of spheres, all things on earth are ended, the pifflin and the splendid, when Father Time has wended, a while, knee deep in tears. Today is charged with sorrow and comfort is denied; but there'll be a tomorrow all wool and three feet wide; it's worth our while repeating that mundane things are fleeting, the trials we are meeting some fine day will have died. I'm glad the world keeps shifting until we are perplext; I'm glad we're always drifting from one thing to the next; I'm glad that every Sunday is followed by a Monday, that I am happy one day, the next day sorely vext. So let us all endeavor to keep our smiles on straight, the war won't last forever, and that's as sure as fate; some morn breakin' upon a world forsaken by every war lord skate.

Socialists Not of Today.

From the New York Telegraph.

Truly the socialists do not deal with the things that are. The other day a crowd of these talkative persons got together in what [illegible] called a state convention and nominated candidates for state [illegible]. Their platform [illegible] one can call a lot of bombastic phrases [illegible] with the present war but with what will come [illegible] the fighting. Socialists evidently always are thinking of jobs, [illegible] plank of the platform favored six hours' work each day, [illegible] of the fact that the nation is at war and offering large [illegible] who will work double-time. Evidently the socialists do [illegible] Sam builds ships and manufactures shells [illegible] or not.

Keeping Faith.

From "Over There" With the Australians," by Capt. R. Hugh Knyvett, in Scribner's.

We might erect to our fallen dead the most magnificent monument that the world has ever seen, we might build it in marble and stud it with gems and have the greatest poets and artists decorate it—but it would be a mockery and a sham. The only monument that we dare erect to our fallen dead, the only monument that would not be a dishonor to them and a shame and eternal disgrace to us, is the monument of victory.

And the army will never quit until we have sure victory, for we dare not break faith with our dead.

"OH BOY! IT'LL BE SOME WEDDING"

And the Cap's Going to Act As Best Man, Yank Private Announces.

BY FRANK J. TAYLOR.
United Press Staff Correspondent.

The medical officer is a captain, his assistant a second lieutenant, and they have a private for orderly. The three are living in a single room of an old dull looking French house, inhabited by a French family, despite the proximity of the front lines.

On the walls were French lithographs [illegible] religious. One showed friends [illegible] relatives gathered around the cradle of a new born child of Lorraine. Underneath was the inscription, "He will be French." A goodly number of [illegible] style portraits were hanging over bright colored wall paper. On the mantlepiece was a complicated clock [illegible] glass case, the luxury of the family [illegible] bably.

With the clock on the mantlepiece were the folding photographic portraits [illegible] three lovable and wholesome looking American girls. Regardless of the rank [illegible] their sweethearts these three girls [illegible] entitled to equal positions on any mantlepiece their men find in France. Since correspondents were visitors, the three men had maintained mili[illegible] formality in their conversation be[illegible] us. Someone called attention to the three girls' pictures. Formality [illegible] ished. "We couldn't get along without them," said the second lieutenant.

"I never got acquainted with Bob and Joe until I found they were in love with girls back there," said the cap[illegible]. "We became chums instead of fellow workers. It's a mighty strong bond, those girls on the mantlepiece."

These fellows think they've got it on me because they're married and I'm only engaged," added the private, "but they've no better girl than I. There's going to be a big time when I get to the old town. The Cap's going to come up state and be best man, and the Lieut's slated for next best, and their wives they are going to be bridesmaids. Believe me, it's going to be some wedding. O boy!"

Killing the Future.

From the New York Tribune

President Wilson, whose insistence [illegible] brought about the passage of the child labor law which the supreme court recently declared unconstitutional, is reported from Washington to be urging the men who worked for that measure to attempt another which shall stand the test of the courts. He is said to believe that now more than ever before, protection by federal statute is needed for the [illegible] of the nation, to prevent their exploitation by unscrupulous employers and ignorant parents, hard pressed by the tremendous cost of living.

The need is patent enough. The tremendous demand for labor is taking women into kinds of work hitherto attempted only by men, and wherever child skill and child strength may compass it, and state laws do not prevent, boys and girls are taking the places of women or are being broken in to manufacturing processes for which they had not been thought of before. Hard work and long hours are their portion. It is the experience of school authorities that of children who go into the factory in the summer vacation the percentage which fails to return to school is dangerously high.

What this means for the young and for the nation cannot be overstated. For the children it means stunted bodies, dwarfed minds and a future of dull, grinding toil, because they will have potentialities for nothing else. Their future will have been [illegible] in their youth.

The Robin's Quarters

At the country home of George G. King, on Pine lake, a robin has built its nest in a corner of the lattice which covers a pump within lo[illegible] and reaching distance of anybody who goes for water.

With some friends from town who visited the place a few days ago was a little girl who was much astonished at what she saw.

Stepping outside the lattice the little girl waved a hand at her mother and called:

Don't Poison Baby.

FORTY YEARS AGO almost every mother thought her child must have PAREGORIC or laudanum to make it sleep. These drugs will produce sleep, and a FEW DROPS TOO MANY will produce the SLEEP FROM WHICH THERE IS NO WAKING. Many are the children who have been killed or whose health has been ruined for life by paregoric, laudanum and morphine, each of which is a narcotic product of opium. Druggists are prohibited from selling either of the narcotics named to children at all, or to anybody without labelling them "poison." The definition of "narcotic" is: "A medicine which relieves pain and produces sleep, but which in poisonous doses produces stupor, coma, convulsions and death." The taste and smell of medicines containing opium are disguised, and sold under the names of "Drops," "Cordials," "Soothing Syrups," etc. You should not permit any medicine to be given to your children without you or your physician know of what it is composed. CASTORIA DOES NOT CONTAIN NARCOTICS, if it bears the signature of Chas. H. Fletcher.

Genuine Castoria always bears the signature of Chas. H. Fletcher.

Watch Your Stomach In Hot Weather

A Cool, Sweet, Strong Stomach Your Best Safeguard Against Summer Sickness

"Keep your stomach in good, working order during the hot summer months and you will have little to fear in the way of sickness" the advice many physicians give as hot weather approaches.

Good, sound, common sense advice, too. For very frequently, and especially in hot weather, these common stomach disorders which so many people seem to regard as of minor importance, do open the way for serious illness.

So keep your stomach sweet, cool and comfortable all summer long. The extra war work—change of diet—poisons that come with hot weather—all hit us in the stomach. The strongest stomach will need help this summer as never before.

The one easy way if you have the right remedy is to rid the stomach of too much acid. Because it's superacidity that interferes with digestion and assimulation, and this causes about all those stomach miseries you are so familiar with—heartburn, food-repeating, indigestion, sour, gassy stomach and that miserable, bloated, puffed-up condition after eating.

Now here is good news. An easy, sure relief has been found to get rid of the harmful acidity and gases in the stomach. It is called EATONIC, a good tasting compound that you eat just like candy. A tablet or two of EATONIC after meals will work wonders. You can have no idea of what sure, quick comfort EATONIC brings until you do try it. Use EATONIC after your meals, enjoy a good appetite and get full strength from the food you eat. At the same time protect yourself from summer stomach and bowel miseries.

Get a big box of EATONIC from your druggist today. He will tell you that people who have used EATONIC say that they never dreamed that anything could give such quick and wonderful results. It costs only 50c a box and if it fails in any way, your druggist, who you know and trust, will return your money.

A BOX FROM HOME

Drawn by Gaar Williams, Division of Pictorial Publicity.

Food savings of millions of Americans during our first year of war enabled this government to send enormous food shipments abroad for our fighting forces and the Allied nations. Our savings in cereals—out of a short crop—amounted to 154,900,000 bushels; all of which was shipped to Europe. We increased our meat and fat shipments 844,600,000 pounds. This was America's "box from home" to our army abroad and the civilians and military forces of the Allied nations.

Maintain High Ideals.

The most difficult problem that any human being has to solve is the prevention of an insidious lowering of his standards. It is so easy to grow a little careless about personal appearance, to be a trifle less particular in discerning the difference between right and wrong, to drop into habits of neglect in small matters that were once considerd duties, that gradually the whole life has slipped to a lower plane before one is aware. The lowering of ideals along any line means a lowered life.—Great Thoughts.

WINTER WHEAT

The Food Administration has asked for a large increase in the acreage of winter wheat They have asked Iowa to sow a million acres and the acreage has been allotted to the counties ranging from 800 acres to 50,000 acres per county Hancock county has been asked to sow at least 800 acres

Whole winter wheat in this county has not been very successful, because of winter killing, we have had some very good yields on several farms in the county this year 800 acres is a very small amount in comparison with the number of acres that are being sown in other counties It seems that Hancock County at least ought to be willing to try that much winter wheat and run the risk of winter killing

Top dressing with straw or light manure has proven a great benefit in the prevention of winter wheat killing This could be easily applied where there is only two or ten acres

It is time now to begin preparations for wheat as early plowing has been found to be the best July and August plowing are preferable to later plowing because more time remains for the settling of the ground and for firming by frequent cultivation Early plowing helps free the ground from weeds by destroying them before they mature seed and by causing more wheat seed to germinate before the wheat is seeded The proper depth of plowing depends upon the character of soil and also on the amount of material being turned under The general recommendation is to plow fairly deep at least 6 inches, that is if the plowing is done early If plowing just before sowing the wheat it should be shallow

All wheat sown should be treated for smut This may be done by adding one pint of Formalin to 20 gallons of water 20 gallons of this solution will treat 10 bushels of wheat. The seed should be sprinkled with this solution thoroughly stirred until all the grain is moistened and after leaving in a covered pile for a few hours, should be dried by shoveling and spreading in a shallow layer.

This treatment may also help get rid of the scab which has been so notable in the spring wheat this year All seed should be thoroughly cleaned

While there is but very little seed available in the county, we will be able to get it from outside sources. Anyone who is willing to do their share in increasing this winter wheat acreage, should see or write to the County Agent at Britt, Iowa, and he will obtain the seed for them

IOWA WOMEN WORK FOR FOOD PROGRAM

MRS WHITLEY'S COMMITTEE GIVEN MUCH CREDIT FOR SUCCESS OF CONSERVATION IN THIS STATE.

The achievements of the United States food administration during its first year, which ended August 1st, were made less difficult on account of the preliminary work done by the members of the women's committee, under the leadership of Mrs. Francis E. Whitley of Webster City.

Soon after Food Administrator J. F. Deems had taken charge of the work of the food administration in this state he enlisted the co-operation of an organization formed by Mrs. Whitley, which included a chairman for each congressional district, a chairman for each county, and more than 2,000 women workers in townships.

This force went to work early in the fall to secure food pledges from the women of Iowa. Practically all of the 600,000 homes in the state were personally visited by members of the committee and the county workers, and more than 517,000 women of the state pledged themselves to co-operate with the food administration in the conservation of food, and particularly to save sugar, wheat flour, meats and fats.

The success of this campaign is held responsible for the instant response to every appeal made by Herbert Hoover and the promotion of the program to save food for our soldiers overseas and our associates in the war.

Mrs. Whitley was for two years president of the Iowa Federation of Women's clubs, and through many years' activity in club work and her official connection with the organization has been in very close touch with the influential women of Iowa who make up the 675 clubs which belong to the federation. She has devoted a large part of her time during the year to the promotion of the campaign for the conservation of food and has enlisted with her hundreds of the most influential women of the state. Her district chairmen are:

First District—Mrs. W. H. Davidson, Burlington.
Second District—Mrs. Max Mayer, Iowa City.
Third District—Miss Anna B. Lawther, Dubuque.
Fourth District—Mrs. C. H. McNider, Mason City.
Fifth District—Mrs. R. D. Taylor, Cedar Rapids.
Sixth District—Mrs. Henry L. Sprowles, Bloomfield.
Seventh District—Mrs. F. S. Burberry, Indianola.
Eighth District—Miss Daisy Deighton, Shenandoah.
Ninth District—Mrs. C. G. Saunders, Council Bluffs.
Tenth District—Mrs. O. M. Oleson, Fort Dodge.
Eleventh District—Mrs. J. W. Cory, Spencer.

Whenever the food administration has decided upon a program of conservation, Mrs. Whitley and her committee have been interested in it and have been relied upon to organize every township in the state to carry it out. This has been done through public meetings, through publicity, through co-operation of the women's organizations, and through personal work. The message has been carried to every fireside by the members of the women's committee, and in co-operation with the home demonstration agents, the home economic teachers and the organization of the county food administrators of each of the counties, the people of the state have been quickly interested and promptly convinced that the request for voluntary co-operation made by the food administration was worthy of enthusiastic support.

TO THE PATRONS OF THE BANKS OF HANCOCK COUNTY

The Superintendent of Banking, acting in harmony with the Comptroller of the Currency at Washington, has demanded that the Banks refuse payment of checks unless the Depositor has sufficient funds to his credit to meet the same.

The Bank will have no discretion in the matter, and our patrons are requested to assist the Banks in carrying out the above order, as we will be compelled to refuse payment of all checks that will cause overdrafts.

We further agree not to solicit business from customers of other Banks whom we know are dissatisfied with their banking connections because they are refused overdraft privileges.

This resolution to become effective on the 10th day of September, 1918.

NO PROFITEERING CAN GO IN IOWA

FOOD ADMINISTRATOR DEEMS MAKES PLAN TO PREVENT EXCESSIVE PROFITS FROM CONSUMERS.

Nearly one-half of the counties of Iowa have organized price interpreting committees under the direction of United States Food Administrator J. F. Deems.

Price interpreting committees are authorized by the food administration to be composed of representatives of consumers, retailers, jobbers, brokers and other classes engaged in the food business.

The food administration does not fix prices of commodities but it has announced what it regards as fair profits on articles of food. The price interpreting committee in each county applies these profits to the cost of the goods to wholesalers and to retailers, and in this way interprets a fair price for the retailer from the wholesaler and for the consumer from the retailer.

An essential part of the program is to have these prices published by the newspapers, so that consumers may be advised as to what the food administration regards as fair prices.

This very effectively checks profiteering and at the same time does away with much of the complaints which consumers are inclined to make against retailers.

It is an open and above board way of interpreting prices for the community and absolutely prevents speculation in food products. One of the rules governing price interpreting is that invoice prides shall govern in applying prices and not the real present market price of the goods. Thus a wholesaler or a retailer is prevented from increasing his prices above a fair profit on the cost of the goods, no matter what the value of the goods may be at the time the price is made.

VIOLATOR OF LAW MUST FACE DEEMS

FOOD ADMINISTRATOR FOR IOWA IMPOSES DRASTIC PENALTIES ON HOARDERS AND OTHER LAW BREAKERS.

In the neighborhood of 400 cases of alleged violations of the rules and regulations of the United States food administration and of the food control act have been investigated by agents of United States Food Administrator J. F. Deems of Iowa. A force of men has been employed by Administrator Deems to investigate complaints relative to violations and a large number of cases have been tried before county food administrators and at the headquarters of the administration in Burlington.

Fines in the form of voluntary contributions to the Red Cross have been imposed on a large number of persons. The largest contribution to the Red Cross, $1,000, was made by a DeWitt flour dealer who was found guilty of selling flour without substitutes. A large number of persons have been bound over to the federal grand jury for hoarding, and a large number of reprimands have been given to people less flagrantly guilty for violating the regulations of the administration.

In cases of complaint against people who are accused of hoarding food or wasting food or failure to obey the rules and regulations of the food administration, Administrator Deems assigns one of the special agents from his headquarters to investigate the case, evidence is secured in the form of affidavits, and the suspected persons are summoned to appear either at the Burlington headquarters or before the county food administrator of the county in which the offense is alleged to have been committed. After trial judgment is pronounced, and when given the opportunity to contribute to the Red Cross in lieu of being bound over to the federal grand jury, most offenders make the contribution. The result is that the Red Cross funds are several thousand dollars better off on account of the enforcement work of the food administration.

In one Iowa case nearly $5,000 was turned over to the Red Cross by one merchant who had been found guilty of profiteering in eggs. This and the $1,000 fine mentioned above are the largest in this state.

IOWA HOTEL MEN AID FOOD PROGRAM

IMPORTANT DIVISION OF THE UNITED STATES FOOD ADMINISTRATION GIVES GOOD SERVICE.

One of the very important agents upon which the United States food administration relies to effect conservation of food is the public eating house. It is a licensed institution, so far as baking operations are concerned, and authority is exercised over it through the hotel and restaurant division of the United States food administration. Administrator J. F. Deems of Iowa has chosen to administer this control W. F. Miller of Davenport, and R. E. Pettigrew of Burlington. Mr. Pettigrew is associated with the headquarters staff at Burlington and is actively in charge of the work.

Last winter representatives of the hotels and restaurants met Mr. Hoover in Washington and agreed to cut out the service of wheat bread. This was followed by a similar agreement on the part of the dining cars of the country. The result has been an enormous saving in wheat flour by the hotels and restaurants. The regulation has just been withdrawn by Mr. Hoover.

Rules regulating the service of meat and sugar at public eating houses and hotels and restaurants in Iowa were later adopted and confirmed. There are about 3,000 hotels and eating houses in Iowa and they feed hundreds of thousands of people every year.

Food Headquarters.

The United States food administration for Iowa, maintains a dozen headquarters. All of the officers in them are directed and the divisions and headquarters are managed out of the headquarters of Administrator Deems at Burlington The different headquarters include the following:

THE KLEMME TIMES

RAY A. JORGENSON, PUB.

KLEMME, IOWA

On July 26, 1847, the first electric magnetic locomotive was exhibited and operated. The exhibition was made in the town hall of Dover, N H., by its inventor, Moses G Farmer. It carried several people, who were doubtless the first passengers transported on a railroad by electricity in the United States. Farmer lectured upon the invention at various eastern points, after which he opened a telegraph office, where he devised the well known fire alarm apparatus. As early as 1850 Professor Farmer predicted, among other results, the talking exactly as we talk today by telephone, and he also saw the feasibility of electric traction by means of the storage battery and trolley system now in use. He also invented a flying machine, but his sudden death prevented his bringing it before the world.

Swimming is undoubtedly one of the greatest of all round body builders. It is best to try to do your swimming in salt water which is exposed to sunlight. One can usually bathe in such water as long as he feels comfortable, the fleshiness and physical condition of the individual governing the duration of time in the water. Thin and raw boned persons cannot usually stay in the water too long. Fleshy persons can stand much more of it. Some persons should not attempt to remain in the water more than 15 minutes at a time, while others, especially when accustomed to it, can remain in the water for hours and feel no had effects.

The trappers and others employed by the Hudson Bay company have noticed that where deep water was to be found heretofore it is becoming so shallow that navigation is accomplished with difficulty. Investigation has led to the discovery that the shores of the great body of water are gradually being tipped as if an effort was being made to empty its waters into the adjoining sea. The bay where Henry Hudson spent the winter of 1610 has entirely disappeared or has so changed that it can not be now located, although there is sufficient data left by him to locate the bay under conditions as he found them.

The light at Navesink is the highest from the level of the water, being 246 feet above mean high water The tower of this lighthouse is but 53 feet in height. The highest tower is that at Cape Hatteras, N C 189 feet in height. The tower at Cape Charles, Va., comes next, being 175 feet in height. Along the New Jersey coast the towers at Atlantic City and Cape May Point are the highest, being each 159 feet.

General Lew Wallace wrote a tragedy entitled "Commodus," which was founded on the story of Maternus, an escaped slave, who rebelled against his country placed himself at the head of a band of outlaws, planned the capture of Rome and his own elevation to the throne, but was finally betrayed and killed It was never produced, but Lawrence Barrett to whom it was submitted, wrote General Wallace that it was the best play since "Richelieu," and that "both as a poem and as an acting play 'Commodus' is the best English drama" It was printed, but never staged.

Perhaps the most frequent excitant of all causes, so far as skin cancer is concerned, is dandruff, says the New Orleans Medical and Surgical Journal It falls from the scalp, and lights on the ear eyelids, nose, neck, lips and face and if there is already a scaling spot, or a thickening, or a wart, a mole or a gland ready to receive the dandruff scale, it sets this spot alive with activity and it goes on to form a skin cancer Probably 60 per cent of skin cancers are due to this cause, and many a cancer has been prevented and may be prevented by curing the dandruff or by preventing it.

Smoke is a valuable weapon in this war; it is extensively used on both sides to mask military and naval movements, and elaborate means have been devised to throw up clouds of smoke. The Scientific American says: "During a poisonous gas attack smoke is employed to ward off the fumes Being considerably heavier than the poisonous gases generally employed, a barrage of smoke causes the dangerous fumes to pass over trenches and dugouts and to dissipate themselves in the higher regions."

CUMMINS' RELATIVE WOUNDED IN FRANCE

Lieutenant Lee Williams, of Des Moines, Is In Hospital at Bordeaux.

Washington, D. C., Aug. 23.—Word has reached here that Lieut. Lee Williams, of the sanitary corps of the Sixteenth regiment, was wounded at Chateau-Thierry and is in a hospital at Bordeaux. Mrs. Williams, who has been here most of the summer, was formerly Miss Mary McHenry, of Des Moines, a niece of Senator Cummins, and sister of Capt. Harry McHenry, who was killed in action. Lieutenant Williams will recover.

IN AMBULANCE HE MET BOYS FROM HOME

Marshalltown, Ia., Aug. 23.—To be taken back 15 miles behind the lines to a base hospital, and to meet in an ambulance on the way two of his former home friends, was the unusual experience of Dwight L. Frazer, Battery B, 10th field artillery, who is suffering from shell shock in a base hospital in France.

News of the injury to Frazer came in a letter received yesterday by his parents, Mr. and Mrs. A. L. Frazer of this city, and was the first word received of the accident to the young man on July 24. The shell that caused Frazer to suffer from concussion killed every other man who was with him.

Not being knocked out completely by the explosion, Frazer began to help a wounded comrade and "pal," who had a severe wound in the back. Securing a stretcher, and with the aid of another companion, Frazer started for a first aid post two miles away. That is the last he remembered. When he awoke he was in an ambulance, and had not traveled far until two of his Marshalltown boy friends, Harry Gableman and Wayne Cumming, both in the aero service, stepped on to the running board of the ambulance. Frazer had a short visit with his friends.

The same mail that brought news of Frazer's accident contained a letter to Mr and Mrs. W. L. Peckham from their son, Charles, who was reported on July 28 as being wounded and a prisoner in Germany. This letter was written July 28, so without doubt some error in reporting the names existed. Peckham, just three days before writing his letter, says he had spent an evening with Gabelman and Cumming, and that they had told him they had seen Dwight Frazer, and that he had been hurt by shell concussion

Another letter that reached the city from France told of the wounding of Floyd C Staves, of this city. He is in a base hospital suffering from a wound in the abdomen caused by shrapnel

PORTER WILL STILL BE A BUSY MAN

Des Moines, Ia., Aug 23.—Following the successful conclusion of his work in connection with the prosecution of the I. W W trial at Chicago, Claude R Porter, democratic candidate for governor, will probably be in Iowa during the remaining months of the campaign.

Mr Porter, however, will be able to devote but little of his time to political activities. He will resume his duties as United States district attorney for the southern district of Iowa and will at once undertake the prosecution of the trial of Attorney Fred Vollmer, Dr. Walter Matthey, Charles Wiese and A. H Miller, prominent Davenport citizens who were indicted under the espionage act charged with having brought about the notorious Wallace lecture at Davenport in July, 1917.

Murrillo shot Ramirez four times. The men were employed by the Burlington railroad

REQUIRE USE OF LESS SUBSTITUTES SOON

Washington, D C., Aug 23.—Representative Ramseyer, who conferred with food administration officials about Iowa complaints as to distribution of sugar and wheat flour substitutes, got reassuring news as to substitutes. He was advised they would soon be cut down to 20 per cent instead of 50 per cent and that a victory flour would be required of 80 per cent wheat flour and 20 per cent substitutes as a result. It is expected the complaints over substitutes will disappear, as the present plan is not to require them after about September 1, except as mixed with the standard forms of flour which the government prescribes.

Dubuque, Ia., Aug. 22.—Ouster proceedings against members of the Dubuque county board of supervisors and the county treasurer were further delayed when Judge J. J. The motions filed by counsel for the defendants call for specific charges and many of the charges contained in the original petition were thrown out on motion of attorneys for the defense. The delay will give the attorney general an opportunity to amend the petition

SOLDIER'S WIFE HELD ON SERIOUS CHARGE

Council Bluffs, Ia., Aug. 21.—Mrs. Ethel Smith, 22 years old, wife of a Council Bluffs soldier who was among the first Iowa troops to reach France, and her alleged clandestine admirer, Harold Clark, 19 years old, are held under bonds to await the action of the grand jury.

Judge Frank Capell, before whom the preliminary hearing was held, delivered a scathing rebuke to the woman. He declared that any soldier's wife who was guilty of misconduct during the absence of her husband was as disloyal to her country as to her husband.

Mrs. Smith is athletic as well as attractive in appearance and has been working as a trucker at the Union Pacific freight house, where she has been making a man's wages

Judge Capell's talk to the young man in the case made him hang his head. The court said any man, old or young, who would strike a blow at the flag by contributing to the delinquency of the wives of soldiers was beneath the contempt of honest, loyal people.

The two were arrested in the woman's rooms, it is charged. They denied wrong doing.

BANK RESOURCES ARE DOUBLED IN ONE YEAR

Washington, D. C., Aug. 19.—Rapid growth of the strength of the 12 federal reserve banks within the last year under war conditions was shown by comparison of resources and liabilities reported at the close of business August 16 with similar reports made August 18, 1917.

Total resources in the year were more than doubled, amounting to $2,048,442,000 then, and to $4,242,884,000 now This increase was caused principally by the tremendous expansion of the banks' discount business, which may be measured from the reports of only $299,000,000 bills on hand a year ago as compared with $1,497,000,000 now. Gold reserves in the year jumped from $1,374,000,000 to $1,992,000,000, and this made it possible to expand credit operations many times.

It is declared to be hardly likely that the bolshevist chiefs will touch Russian soil again without the protection of a German military force. Stockholm advices are that Petrograd is in the grip of a reign of terror. Reports are more than 30,000 arrests have been made in the last month, most of the prisoners being officers of the former army and middle class citizens.

UNREST AT WARSAW.

Washington, Aug. 21. — Dispatches from Switzerland today say deep unrest is manifest at Warsaw The streets are full of German patrols who are making numbers of arrests Houses are being searched and arrests being made at Lomza and Plozk among the supposed members of the secret association of the Polish army.

SAY ALLIES WITHDREW.

Amsterdam, Aug. 21 It is officially reported from Vienna, says the Montagow correspondent of the Reinische Westfaelische Zeitung of Essen, that the entente allied troops in the Archangel sector have withdrawn outside the range of the bolshevist artillery. Soveit troops are reported to have blown up the Baikal tunnel of the Trans-Siberian railway

Drastic Plan to Control Labor Doomed to Defeat; Unions Register Protest

Washington, D. C., Aug. 21. — Organized labor's emphatic opposition to the work or fight amendment to the new man power bill extending the draft ages was presented to the House military committee today by Frank Morrison, secretary of the American Federation of Labor.

Mr. Morrison declared that the provision authorizing withdrawal of deferred classification from men absent from work without cause was a "conscription of labor in a covert way." He suggested that special interests were secretely pressing anti-labor legislation.

After discussing problems of educating drafted youths, the committee closed its hearings and began work on the bill. It probably will be reported in a few days for immediate consideration in the House. The Senate will take up the measure Thursday.

Brand Men as Slackers.

Mr. Morrison referred to the probable international effect of the work or fight provision.

"It would make the world and our allies believe our men are slackers," he said. "It is not asked by the government, which is not exercised over the industrial conscription. Who is asking for this legislation? Is it the Colorado Fuel Company or the great steel trust?"

He asked, if in case the amendment is adopted soldiers of democracy would be used as strikebreakers.

"If enacted the amendment would be used by every unfair profiteering employer," he argued. "It is being used today by the Bethlehem company. Understand, I want it made clear that we do not protest against the men going to fight, but against placing an employer in a position to brand his employes as slackers."

Willing to Arbitrate.

Mr. Morrison said very few cases would occur where the men would refuse to work, he said, existing draft regulations could be invoked and that further legislation is unnecessary.

Representative Harrison, of Virginia, called attention to Secretary Baker's statement denying that the Senate amendment is a labor conscription plan, but Mr. Morrison insisted that it would be conscription and would be used as such by unfair employers. Representative Harrison declared if reasons for exemption of workmen cease to exist, they should return to their original draft status, and in the argument that followed so many members of the committee joined that Chairman Dent urged them to permit Mr. Morrison to conclude and postpone their arguments until the committee met in eecutive session.

Some Warm Echanges.

"It's conscription poorly camouflaged," Representative Lunn, of New York, interjected, while in a lively exchange between other members and Mr. Morrison.

Representative Nichols, of South Carolina, declared that most men are drafted to fight and that the exempted workmen would be forced to fight only when they would not work

Representative Greene, of Vermont, observed that men drafted to fight cannot strike, while workmen exempted propose to reserve the right to strike for higher wages. Secretary Morrison replied that profiteers often do not pay enough to their workmen and Representative Greene retorted that deserters from the army are shot.

After the hearings committeemen predicted that the bill would be reported shortly, substantially as submitted by the war department and without a "work or fight" amendment.

Since Secretary Baker has refused to come out flatly for the amendment, committee men believe the man power bill will go through the House faster if the amendment is left out, because it will not have to encounter the opposition of members who have branded the Thomas plan as labor conscription.

Opponents of the amendment today claimed they could easily defeat any attempt to put it in while the bill is being debated in the House.

With an agreement reached to reconvene the Senate Thursday to consider the man power bill, many senators today believed the measure could be disposed of by Saturday night.

IOWA IS CALLED ON FOR 8,000 MORE MEN

Des Moines, Ia., Aug. 21.—Three calls for Iowa Class 1 men, were issued today by Adjutant General Lasher.

The first orders 8,000, to entrain for Camp Dodge on four days beginning September 3.

Six hundred are called for special and limited service and will entrain for Fort Riley, Kan., during the same days that the first order moves.

Both the first and second orders are for white men only.

The third order calls for 123 negroes to report to Camp Dodge, September 1, but this order is held up temporarily because 1917 men were asked for. There are no blacks of the 1917 class in the state.

JAPANESE RIOTS ARE REPORTED SUBSIDING

By Associated Press.

Tokio, Saturday, Aug. 17.—The disturbances over the high price of rice are reported to be subsiding except in north Japan where they apparently are spreading. Mobs have burned several houses at Sendai. The rice exchange announces that 30 houses were burned in the Tsumiyé prefecture on Thursday.

SEIZING RICE STOCKS.

Tokio, Aug. 16.—(delayed)—The rice riots have caused police in Tokio to exercise the utmost vigilance, although this city is comparatively free from disturbances.

Lights in the main streets have been extinguished since Wednesday. The streets are deserted with the exception of rioters. Newspapers have been forbidden to publish news of the riots. The police have stopped the trains, closed the motion picture theaters, the parks and other theaters. Geisha houses are closed.

An imperial ordinance authorizes the government to requisition private rice stores for the market.

In many cities the police have shown sympathy with the rioters and have not moved against them

The rioters are charging that the farmers are responsible for the rice shortage to a great extent, declaring that 120,000,000 bushels of grain are hoarded by the producers.

The minister of marine has announced that the provisional governments report the disturbances subsiding.

HUNS RAISE KICK OVER THE USE OF SHOTGUNS

Stockholm, Aug. 21.—German war correspondents report to their newspapers that they inspected guns taken from the 77th American regiment and found them to be shot guns, each carrying five cartridges loaded with buckshot. They declare that the use of such guns is contrary to the Geneva convention.

It is well known that certain troops of all armies are equipped with shot guns for police duty behind their own lines. It is customary to use shotguns for arming patrols who guard prisoners and do similar duty because it has been found that the use of high powered fighting rifles for that purpose is dangerous.

It is contrary to the Geneva convention to use shot guns in actual combat, just as it is a violation of the convention to use explosive bullets, liquid fire, poisonous gasses and instruments of a barbarous nature, all of which actually have been employed by German troops in the fighting.

NEW AUSTRIAN BLOW AT ITALY FORECAST

Believed Drive Was Planned at Meeting of Kaisers at Grand Headquarters.

Washington, D. C., Aug. 20.—Resumption of the Austrian offensive on the Italian front is to be expected at any time, according to the military critic of the Italian newspaper Corriere d'Italia, says a dispatch received here from Rome. The military critic bases his prediction on such recent events as the closing of the Swiss frontier, the visit of Emperor Karl to the Trentino and the conference at German military headquarters.

Commenting on the conference of the German and Austrian emperors, the Italian newspapers almost universally declare that it must be taken as new proof that the hope of separating Austria from Germany "is a mad delusion."

A NERVOUS BREAKDOWN

Miss Kelly Tells How Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound Restored Her Health.

Newark, N. J.—"For about three years I suffered from nervous breakdown and got so weak I could hardly stand, and had headaches every day. I tried everything I could think of and was under a physician's care for two years. A girl friend told me about Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and she told me about it. From the first day I took it I began to feel better and now I am well and able to do most any kind of work. I have been recommending the Compound ever since and give you my permission to publish this letter."—Miss FLO KELLY, 476 So. 14th St., Newark, N. J.

The reason this famous root and herb remedy, Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, was so successful in Miss Kelly's case was because it went to the root of her trouble, restored her to a normal healthy condition and as a result her nervousness disappeared.

SURELY MUST HAVE NERVE

British "Chasing Pilots" Are Required to Do All Sorts of Stunts in the Air.

The ordeals that the "chasing pilots" attached to the aviation corps of the British forces at the front have to undergo before they are considered as proficient in their perilous work are sufficiently trying to test the nerve of the bravest flyer. As an army correspondent of the Philadelphia Public Ledger puts it, the candidate who passes the required course of aerial gymnastics must either be all nerve or possessed of no nerves at all.

At this school, he says, you will see an airplane, thousands of feet aloft, suddenly fling its nose up and begin to climb vertically as if the pilot intended to loop the loop. Suddenly it pauses, and remains for perhaps a full minute poised perpendicularly on its tail. Then, with the engine switched off, it falls helplessly, tail first, spinning giddily round and round in a way that resembles the helpless flutter of a falling leaf. Then suddenly the engine roars again, the twisting, fluttering dead thing becomes instinct with life, rights itself majestically on flashing pinions, swoops down in swift and headlong course, mounts the wind and soars up and up, as light and graceful as any bird.

Other nerve-shattering things they do, these soaring young demigods of the air—feats that seem nothing short of miraculous to the earth-bound ones who stand gazing upward in awe.—Youth's Companion.

"Where Britain Goes."

From the London Times.

Bagdad was dead to all appearances, or moribund, when we entered it on March 11 last year. Now it is a bustling hive of humanity. Thousands of workmen pass through the streets early and late. The main thoroughfare, metalled and lighted, is a constant stream of traffic, the sleepiest old woman who haunt the bazars have become adepts at dodging the Ford van.

A police force has been organized, and a fire brigade. The street lamps have given place to electric lights The water supply has been extended. Mosques have been repaired, roads metalled, schools opened, including a survey school and a ramning school for teachers. Water cars ply in the streets, sanitary squads have penetrated the most hidden purlieus of the city, the smells are becoming centrifugal. Galled, injured, sick, and starved animals are received into a home until they are fit for shaft or pack again. The markets are controlled; the grain supply has been taken in hand, and the prices are now moderate The municipality pays its way, and the Tigris is crossed by two bridges.

These are only some of the outward changes, and though most of them affect the Bagdadi and the British and Indian soldier alike, they are probably little noticed by he army of occupaion. The soldier in the street if asked if he marked much change in the city would probably say that it looked cleaner, smelt less, and seemed more alive. He might remark upon the good behavior and contented appearance of the citizens, but it is doubtful if he would associate these conditions with the work of the administration

Least of all is he likely to grasp the compleated nature of the machinery we have been getting into gear, the complex relations of laborer, tenant, landowner and state, the difficulty of adjusting their rights and of assessing property and taxes, with no revenue registers or land records to go upon Yet all this is being done, and a system is being evolved based on what is sound in existing organization. We have adapted and modified these to meet the new needs, preserving as far as possible local traditions and employing native agency. Here things are alive There are hotels—one excellent one—clubs, canteens Thre are cricke, fooball, or hockey matches every day. There is the Soldiers' club next door to the open air theater, where touring parties, with a sprinkling of professionals in most of them, come in from various fronts to give entertainments

AMERICA WILL MAKE ITS OWN GLOVES NOW

New Processes Found Enables Manufacturers to Duplicate German Work.

Washington - Technical difficulties encountered by American manufacturers in the production of high grade cotton gloves have been overcome and goods of this kind, "made in the United States," will be placed on the market this fall.

A review of the industry by the tariff commission said that the domestic product which has been evolved is of excellent quality One of the most difficult things to achieve has been the velvety suede finish, which gives the gloves the appearance of leather "Duplexing" or combining of two thickness of cloth in heavier gloves also has given trouble

Prior to 1914, no sueded cotton gloves were made in this country Ninety per cent of those imported came from Germany. Manufacturers have been experimenting in an endeavor to produce an article which would supplant the German goods for all time and apparently now have succeeded

The United States is the only country in the world in which the manufacture of work gloves is of any importance. About $12,000,000 worth of such cotton gloves are made annually in this country for home consumption. These gloves are made in several hundred different styles and are used in a great number of industries, from candy making to ship building

For the year ending June 30, 1914 imports of cotton gloves of all kinds were valued at $2,184,039 24, during the year ending June 30, 1917 only $208,565 worth of cotton gloves was brought into the United States.

The price of the German made gloves averaged 50 cents a pair to the American consumer, the price now averages $1.00 a pair Not all of the increase should be ascribed to the higher cost of production in the United States, however, as it is partly due to an increase in the general level of prices, the commission says.

From 1890 to 1909, with the exception of the years 1894 to 1897 the rate of duty on cotton gloves was 50 per cent ad valorem From 1894 to 1897 the rate was 40 per cent. An attempt was made in 1909 to encourage the manufacture of cotton gloves of the sort worn by policemen, and by soldiers and sailors when on parade. A duty equivalent to about 55 per cent ad valorem was placed on gloves of this sort by the tariff of 1909, but the total value of gloves of this sort made in this country has been small The rate of duty on cotton gloves, by whatever process made, was reduced to 35 per cent ad valorem in 1913.

GIVEN WORK THEY ARE ABLE TO DO

Many Men In National Army Singled Out to Assist In Necessary Labor.

With the American Army in England.—(by mail)—When a soldier leaves the United States he should not feel certain he is going to win glory on the battlefield in France Whether officer or enlisted man, he is subjected to further scrutiny in England and in France, and until a little corps of keen eyed and careful officers have completed the examination no one can tell into just what part of the big army machine he is going to fit.

There are in England camps where every man who passes through is "trade indexed." This is especially true of one camp where a large part of the airmen and motor transport forces arrive shortly after debarkation. The records accompanying them show what the men have been doing in civil life, and a further examination of them and a scrutiny of the demands often determine the part they are to take, some time only for temporary duty, but in some cases for an indefinite period.

From this lot are selected the men who will go into the big repair shops at once. Men experienced in electrical work are sent to stations where their service is most needed Orders for automobile experts are filled, and not infrequently the men in command of the station are called upon to supply men for following for a time at least exactly the same kind of work they were doing in the United States before their numbers in the draft were called

A big hospital is being erected at one camp. The money for the material was furnished by the Red Cross. The work is being done by the army. The construction of the buildings is not materially different from that of war hospitals being erected in the United States, and the same class of skilled labor is being used Experts in the use of cement are working there. Plumbers are doing the same sort of work they were paid to do in the United States, carpenters are employed in doing as high grade labor as could be found anywhere and the drawing of the plans and specifications was done by architects and engineers. All the men whose work is going into the building have been taken from the rank and file of those who reached camp on their way from the ports of debarkation They will be held there only so long as their work on the structure is required and then they will rejoin their organizations unless detailed for other work.

Officers engaged in fixing the trade index of the army have boasted that from the ranks of the national army there may be found men who can do any class of work required, from grinding a diamond to working on the rifling of a big gun

St. Bernard Dogs Doomed.

From the Detroit News.

The ancient ally of man, the dog, is facing a dark hour in Europe. Food must be accounted for to the last ounce Europe's millions must be fed already the dog biscuit supply is exhausted in England and France and no more material is released for their manufacture Conferences are debating now the wholesale destruction of dogs, preserving, in established kennels, only the pick of each breed to perpetuate the species.

Even a St Bernard dog cannot find a home, and so the monks, for the first time in the 10 centuries of the existence of the monastery, are killing their dogs.

To every man who has owned a dog and to every boy who has loved one—and where is one who hasn't?—it is easily credible that these dogs should fare forth on such a sublime mission of lifesaving. The quality of fidelity in a dog knows no mean, it is always complete.

The head nestled on a master's knee, the half lidded, unwinking eyes watching for the slightest motion, the slow, steady thump of a tail on the floor, contain all the eloquence of single hearted devotion which knows not what desertion means.

If the dog reaches his highest usefulness in the snow deserts of the Alps it is only because opportunity is there for singularly arduous service, requiring absolute obedience, a heroic quality of sacrifice and a willingness to undergo hardship which is humanly sublime.

The war has, indeed, reached far when it seizes in its destructive grip the heroic guardians of the passes, the dogs of St. Bernard Inflation.

From the Milwaukee Journal

Much has been said about inflation. Most people ignore the meaning of the term because inflation comes upon the country so silently and gradually that its effect is not noticed In war time there is an inevitable expansion of the credit currency outrunning the needs of the business done A cheapened medium of exchange means injustice and suffering to all those with more or less fixed incomes The cost of the war, of course, increases in the same proportion as the decrease in the value of money This in turn necessitates heavier taxation and more bond issues, and so the vicious circle runs To a large extent, these are burdens incident to the war, but they can be made lighter by consistent saving. If everyone will save to the utmost, the financial and monetary situation will not get out of hand.

Go Easy.

From the Chicago Tribune.

It's getting pretty dangerous to say things about Uncle Sam nowadays without getting tripped up on it. For instance, below is a bunch of indictments returned by the federal grand jury, some incidents leading to true bills under the espionage act being:

No. 1—William A Clark, operating a shoe shining stand, told three soldiers he had no respect for their uniforms, that this wasn't a free country. Result, he was knocked down three times and indicted.

No. 2—August Weissensel said the kaiser was "the greatest man alive" and that "the Germans will win," and he made the mistake of saying it in a barber shop which serves as a Polish army recruiting station Two Polish women heard it. One produced 15 cents and ordered the barber not to shave him and the barber readily refused to proceed. Weissensel tried to mop up the place. It was an easy victory. He came to the federal building swathed in bandages. His own son testified against him.

No 3—Ernest Hartman ridiculed the American flag before two girls in West Pullman. When they protested he knocked one of them down. The crowd which collected almost ruined him for life. What is left of him is now in the county jail. He likewise is facing an espionage indictment.

U. S. TRANSPORT BRINGS DOWN HUN PLANE.

German Hydroplane Captured by American Transport.

American transports must be on the alert for German aircraft as well as U-boats. The German plane in the photo, camouflaged to look like an American aircraft, was brought down by gunners on an American transport in the Mediterranean sea enroute for a foreign port. The pilot and observer of the plane were made prisoners and the plane was taken to a base.

Those British Strikes.

P. W. Wilson, in New York Tribune.

Much attention is being paid here to strikes in Great Britain. It is a serious matter, but it should be seen in its true proportions. At a recent date the returns show that under 1 per cent of British labor was employed. This means that taking the year as a whole there have been very few idle hours. In one or two cases strikes have broken out because continuous work has got on people's nerves, and something is to be said for granting regular leave to munition workers like that granted to soldiers. Under the iron discipline of Germany it is probable that there have been as many labor troubles as in Britain.

Our latest dispute has broken out not on the Clyde and not in South Wales, which hitherto have been the perilous areas. Apparently this is not a syndicalist trouble. The center of it is Birmingham, known hitherto as a city most outspoken for its patriotism, the stronghold of the Chamberlain family, and exclusively conservative in its parliamentary representation. Women are unaffected and nothing has shaken their resolution to beat Germany The difficulty lies with the Amalgamated Society of Engineers. The leaders of the union are against the strike. The strike is therefore unauthorized by labor itself, and it is unpopular with other unions and even with the unskilled men in the engineering trades.

Earlier in the war there were exempted industries, and chief among them was skilled engineering. Immense numbers of young men joined the union and so obtained the badge which relieved them from the duty of voluntary military service, as it then was. The union thus became, as it were, a guarantor against military service—not of course officially, but by the very fact that it had accepted so many new members. The less responsible of these workers are now trying to enforce their privilege. They insist upon being regarded as indispensible, and they dislike anything which limits their mobility Leaving certificates were therefore abolished, but since then there has arisen what has been called the embargo, which, as described here, apportions to each manufacturing concern the number of men essential to its war output. The engineers do not like this, apparently because it revives the leaving certificates in another form.

The answer of the government is simple. The right to strike is not denied. But the strikers are told that in so far as they cease work they cannot be regarded as essential, which means that they become liable to military service. One personal factor should be noted. Winston Churchill is minister of munitions and a very vigorous personality. He is not liked by labor, but in saying this I must add that the difficulty which confronts him is not of his making. Mr. Henderson, Mr. Hodge and Mr. Barnes have all tried their hand in it.

The strike will be discouraged by public opinion But every such incident affords opportunities for those who are led by their religious or their socialist convictions to advocate an early peace.

Since the foregoing was writen the Birmingham strike was practically ended.—Editor Tribune.

HOHENZOLLERNS TO CONTROL BUSINESS

That Is Plan Now Being Evolved to Meet Competition After the War.

Washington—Economic demobilization after the war, the unscrambling of the omelette made by pouring all a nation's resources into the frying pan of war, is beginning to occupy the attention of Germany's statesmen and financiers. First statements on what the public may expect, made only recently and transmitted here in official dispatches, show that the government of the Hohenzollerns plans to retain a great part of the industrial control seized under the guise of national necessity and that this control may be expected to be used as a weapon against foreign competition.

"When the government declares that a state organization will not be necessary in all directions, but that on the contrary it is hoped that a great part of the economic life will be left free, then it is undoubtedly well not to take too optimistic a view of the size of this free domain," says the Berlin Tageblatt in reporting the government's plans. "Government organization is planned definitely only for the textile industry, especially, and for groceries, rubber, fats and oils, hides and leather, and shipping space. The organizations in question will be built on the basis of the present war organizations, not, however, in the way that these will simply be taken over, but more in the way of simplified amalgamations.

"The 'Wirtschaftsstellen,' as the peace organizations will be called, will not be compulsory syndicates with financial participation, but more, in a way that all industries involved in a certain district through their cooperative associations appoint delegates, who become members of the 'Wirtschaftsstellen.' In connection with the textile industry, for instance, the spinners, weavers, garment manufacturers, wholesale and retail dealers, as well as the employes, would come into consideration. The 'Wirtschaftsstellen' must in the first place take care of money matters, that is, must divide the money which is at disposal for the enterprise in question. It should not do independent business, except in cases where the circumstances absolutely demand it. Real business might be transacted, as for instance with foreign countries, such as now the Ukraine, where it is necessary to take a common stand.

"The shipping trade is probably that which will have the freest possible position inside of this organization. The fact that the position of the German tonnage and means of transportation in the transition period is entirely in the dark has caused the steamship owners to also be drawn into the compulsory organization. This should be handled by an office, which would see that German tonnage first and foremost is used for German import purposes.

"While the least possible compulsion will be exercised with regard to steamship owners, it is the intention to make it very strict toward the textile industry. The reason lies mainly in the great shortage of raw materials. The plan is to establish offices for control of the various materials, such as cotton, wool, jute, hemp, flax, silk, etc., and these offices, apart from their main work of dividing the manufacture, should distribute the raw materials.

"A simpler thing is with regard to groceries, as there is no lack of them on the world market, but rather an overflow. The regulation should be in the hands of a board of interested parties, under state control, and in each case permit should be given in order to prevent foreign firms entering the German market by aid of inland illegitimate trade. With regard to coffee and tea, a coffee import union and a tea regulation office will be established in Hamburg. The rice organization will be more severe, as the Dutch mills are said to have amalgamated. Here a state purchasing agency will be formed."

Camouflage.

From the Christian Science Monitor.

Apparently, no other word in the vocabulary of this war has attained such currency of speech as has "camouflage," denoting the fine art of deception in military and marine activities. It is rapidly approaching that stage in popular usage when its original meaning will have vanished in a multiplicity of applications. Already the word is used indiscriminately both as a noun and a verb, and one is apt to forget that it is derived from "camouflieur," which means one who deludes by decoration, and that it had specific reference to French theatrical people, to denote their facial make up, by the attachment of false noses and the general disguise of the features. People with a genius for research, however, are discovering ancient instances that show the art of camouflage to be as old as the hills. The Odyssean wooden horse was camouflage, and Shakespeare, in Macbeth, tells how the Scottish soldiers in the woods of Birnam adopted a singular camouflage by the device of each soldier carrying a bough. Thus, the Shakespearean camouflage constituted as clever a piece of "delusion by decoration" as any reported during the present war.

Slackers at $50 Apiece.

From the Brockton Enterprise.

Showing draft registration cards to cops in New York has so worn the ink of many cards that more durable steel tablets, suitably engraved, may have to be substituted for the pasteboards. The reason for this overwork on the part of the cards is that the government is offering $50 a head for every wilful delinquent bagged for evading the selective draft law. The bounty will not be paid on the ears, scalp or other parts of the hunted animal; the policeman must bring him to the station house all in one piece and still breathing.

To the honor and glory of the nation it must be said that the bluecoated hunters are not getting rich. An occasional delinquent may be flushed and brought down, but by and large the cops are finding the pursuit of slackers pretty poor picking. A vast majority of the country's young men have manfully done their duty without seeking to evade service—all the more reason why the occasional slacker should be brought up with a rollid turn and be made to realize the enormity of his offense.

The French Woman Praised.

From the London Star.

The French woman must be reckoned with in every financial transaction of her family; and she has ability as well as energy. The French nation is noted for its saving habits, and, to the woman belongs the credit; as financiers, the French women are superior to the men. Wherever you go in France you see the women in evidence. They do more work than any other women in the world, in spite of their reputation for being gay, and they are so clever that French cooking and French styles are famous over the world. No Frenchman makes a decision without consulting his wife, because he has learned to respect her judgment. Much of the sane prosperity of France is due to her women. In certain lines of French business, particularly shopkeeping, the woman's guidance and help are considered so necessary that the man without wife, sister, or aunt will not embark in them.

THE GOVERNMENT SHOULD ANSWER

From the Philadelphia Public Ledger.

This nation is thoroughly patriotic and full of win-the-war determination down to the last Boy Scout. There is nothing we will not do or endure or pay to make the tragic sacrifice of our splendid men-at-arms tell to the last cartridge. We are not counting our troubles and deprivations over here when over there they make light of ghastly wounds and face death daily with the fine, bright eyed courage of the free born.

But, in spite of the war, we, after all, remain Americans. It is nationally impossible for us to stop thinking. There are questions the best of us will put. And there is nothing more dangerous to our complete brotherly cooperation in the great task of shattering forever the German sword than to ignore a familiar series of insistent questions that are forced to the lips of every housewife, however loyal, and every purchaser of the necessities of life, however ardent his belief in the allied cause.

We Americans will fight to a finish and we will fight with an intelligence and fixity of purpose which few of the belligerent nations can possibly equal—if we are permitted to give our intelligence free play and are not asked to endure in the dark buffetings whose cause we cannot conceive.

To come right down to brass tacks, there is one big, pressing and persistent question which every man and every woman—especially every woman—whose duty it is to make frequent purchases of the necessities of life is constantly asking, and that question is:

"Why is it that our various war authorities, who intervene dictatorially—and rightly so—in almost every other activity of life, cannot protect the domestic purchaser from what seems systematic extortion?"

We regulate very nearly everything in this country now, save and except the most important thing of all—the cost of our living expenses. It may be economically impossible to regulate that. The humble housewife who goes forth to buy the family dinner and finds that every mortal item on her list has gone up since last week is quite willing to be shown that the government can regulate what the coal man can charge for coal, what the munition maker can charge for shells, what the farmer can charge for wheat, what the railway can charge for transportation, who shall get steel, when we shall eat beef, what we shall eat in place of wheat, and a thousand other delicate points in our daily life, but cannot regulate what the grocer shall charge her for butter and eggs, or what the butcher shall ask for lamb, or how much the fishmonger shall get for fish. She is not only willing—she asks nothing so vehemently as that she shall be shown.

When the good word comes that we have met the demand for meat and that we can now eat it again, does the price of fish fall? Not so you'd notice. Once a price gets up it seems utterly unable to climb down again. It goes up joyously like a skyrocket, but it makes it dangerously dizzy even to look down.

We are going to have a fine opportunity now to judge the exact relation in these cases between supply and demand. Hoover has sent over the happy word that we need no longer deny ourselves wheat. While we were saving wheat to feed Europe—and we did it magnificently and effectively—the price for what little we were permitted to buy aviated, and the portions of wheat products served in the hotels and restaurants approached the vanishing point. Bread became a luxury. Will bread now become cheap? Will the cost of wheat products go back to the old figures? Will the portions served return to the good old wholesome sizes?

The housewife will believe it when she sees it.

Naturally the housewife asks questions. The housewife is the purchasing agent of the home. Men make money come, but women make it go—and they are compelled to make it go a very, very long way these days.

The housewife wants to know:

Why prices always go up and never come down.

Why, when the government commands her to eat certain foods, it does not take any visible steps to prevent the venders of these foods from making them so dear that she simply cannot buy them.

Why foods which are not put on the war index seem mysteriously to become as scarce and costly as those which are.

Why the substitues she is compelled to take in order to get a small allotment of what she really wants go up in price like an American aviator trying to get above a Hun raider when we are not shipping a pound of them to Europe and are presumably producing at least as much as ever.

Why the prices of articles already manufactured and in stock go up, though the merchant would have sold them gladly at the old price if they had not been "mentioned" in some way in a government order.

Why the government cannot prevent this when they know they are about to issue an explosive order

Why the government can regulate the things that the government buys but not the things that the unknown housewife buys.

Why the government can regulate the prices and the distribution of some things but not of others—apparently not the very things she, the noneconomic, the nonprofiteering, the unorganized housewife wants to buy.

It will be good tactics to answer before we start another Liberty loan campaign. For not a few people are feeling that their incomes are first taxed and then mortgaged for Liberty loans, but that the residue on which they must live is not protected from the profiteer, petty as well as prodigious, who pilfers the lean housekeeping purse of 10,000,000 hardworking families.

Not For Him.

From the New York Tribune.

The colorful war classic, anent the ebony recruit who spurned the cavalry because a horse would impede his retreat, has been prolific of sequel. Following his refusal to mount a horse, the recruiting officer suggests aviation to the applicant. Initial delight, followed by profound gloom and the following remark:

"This y'er av-yation might be awright, but not fo' me, boss. 'Spose I'm up in a aereyoplane and engine stops. I can hear white man say:

"'Niggah, you' get out and crank up dis machine!'"

Crabshaw—That isn't the reason. She reads them to me whenever she gets angry.

The railroad station and entrance to Chateau-Thierry on the Marne river has been the scene of violent fighting on the part of the allies to hold it against the Hun hordes. Chateau-Thierry is at the southern end of the great counter offensive launched July 18. It is believed that one result of the counter blow will be to decrease the danger of its capture by a possible terrific thrust by the Germans. The fact that it is a railroad center makes it a valuable military point.

SWEETS FOR IOWA MUCH RESTRICTED

PROBLEM OF EQUITABLE DISTRIBUTION OF SUGAR SOLVED BY ADMINISTRATOR DEEMS AND CHIEF M'ELROY.

One of the most difficult problems with which the United States food administration of Iowa has had to deal has been the distribution of sugar. When it became apparent that there would be a sugar shortage United States Food Administrator J. F. Deems secured the consent of W. T. McElroy of Ottumwa, Iowa, to become head of the sugar division of the administration in this state, and between them they have managed to meet every critical situation as it has arisen and to bring Iowa into line with the national program to save sugar.

No one in Iowa except the householder can buy a pound of sugar except on certificate. The retailer must buy from the wholesaler on certificate, and the commercial user of sugar must buy from the retailer on certificate.

These certificates are based on the consumption last year for all goods. Manufacturers of soft drinks, for instance, are allowed 50 per cent of the sugar used by them last year. Ice cream makers are given 75 per cent. Makers of other products using sugar are limited in a similar way. In order to secure this allotment they must make a sworn statement of the amount of sugar used last year and required this year. These certificates all go to Mr. McElroy who figures out from the amount of sugar which the state has for distribution during the month the proportionate amount which each consumer is entitled to.

This regulation does not cover householders, who are entitled to two pounds a month per person.

The certificate plan covers hotels and eating houses of all kinds, but the basis of their supply is two pounds for every 90 meals served last year instead of the percentage applied to the manufacturer of goods requiring sugar.

The theory of this plan of distributing sugar is based on equity. It is a matter of mathematics with Mr. Hoover, Mr. Deems and Mr. McElroy. There is just so much sugar to be consumed in Iowa during August and there are just so many interests and people demanding it. It is not difficult to figure out an equitable basis for its division and it is to accomplish that end that the sworn statement and certificate plan has been adopted. Food Administrator Deems is anxious that every person have his share of the supply, and every energy of the food administration will be devoted to preventing one class of consumer from securing more than its proportion, which eventually would result in others having to get along on much less than their fair share.

The business of distributing sugar entails an enormous amount of work and endless correspondence, because there are 12,200 grocers alone in this state, and thousands of users of sugar outside of householders.

STOP EGG WASTE TO SAVE MILLIONS

FOOD ADMINISTRATOR DEEMS SECURES CANDLING OF ALL EGGS SHIPPED OUT OF IOWA.

United States Food Administrator J. F. Deems has required every Iowa purchaser of eggs who sells to others than consumers to take out a license and to candle and count all eggs purchased. Heretofore, through carelessness in handling eggs, millions of dollars' worth have been wasted because they had begun to spoil before shipment. The new rule prevents the shipment of bad eggs and is an economical saving, both of money and of space in transportation.

Food Administrator Deems believes that the producer of eggs will very largely profit from these rules because they will begin to gather eggs regularly and will follow other regulations relating to egg production which are bound to result in a bigger crop and more money.

The rules which the food administration is enforcing are embodied in the state law of Iowa, and the food administration has the co-operation of the state dairy and food commission in enforcing this statute.

BUILDING UP BIG RESERVE OF FOOD

UNITED STATES WILL SUPPLY A STOCK TO FEED CIVILIZED WORLD FOR YEARS.

With a wheat crop forecast approaching the billion-bushel mark for 1918 and greatly increased acreage in all cereals, America has reached what may perhaps be its high-water mark agriculturally during the war and will be in a position to store up a reserve against the time when many men still engaged in farming may be called into the army and other war work.

The importance of this reserve was indicated by a cable recently received from the British ministry of food, asking that America continue to send all the food that can be given shipping space, to build up a like reserve in Britain against possible lean years to come.

With this demand it is impossible for the United States, even in the face of a good crop, to go back in any way to prewar habits of eating and wasting.

Enormous Wheat Crop.

A total wheat yield of 931,000,000 bushels is indicated in the recent department of agriculture forecast, based on conditions June 1. The winter wheat estimate is 587,000,000 bushels, or 40,000,000 more than the December forecast. The spring wheat yield is estimated at 344,000,000 bushels.

The total of the two will be an increase of 122,000,000, or 15 per cent over the average crop for the years 1912 to 1916, and a jump of 280,000,000 bushels, or 43 per cent over last year's yield.

The oats crop is estimated at 1,500,000,000 bushels, which is 87,000,000 bushels less than was harvested last year, but 204,000,000 bushels more than the average crop. Record crops of barley and rye are indicated in estimates of 235,000,000 and 81,000,000 bushels respectively.

Limitless Hay.

The hay crop is expected to be larger than last year, although the acreage, 69,531,000, shows a slight decrease.

The acreage of wheat this year, 58,881,000, is 28.2 per cent greater than last year, much of it from virgin land. Winter and spring wheat acreage show increases of 32.7 per cent and 21.5 per cent respectively.

Oats and barley show smaller increases.

The apple crop is estimated at 203,000,000 bushels, 16 per cent greater than last year, but 5.1 per cent less than the average. The peach crop estimate for this year falls 4.9 per cent below last year and 18.5 per cent below the average.

Newspaper Triviality.

"It is customary to gird at the modern press of Europe and America as sensational, yellow and corrupt, and to represent the captains of industry who control it as panders to base instincts," says War and Peace of London. "But, as a matter of fact, the offense of the average modern newspaper consists in none of these things, but in its overpowering triviality."

Buttons Deliberately Came Off.

Harry, age four, was investigating mother's sewing basket while she was busy. Mother told him not to take the buttons off the card, as they would be lost. The little boy continued to play with them, however, and some of the buttons came off the card. "Harry, I told you not to take the buttons off the card. Now you have disobeyed me." "But, mother," said Harry, "I didn't take 'em off. They just thelibertly came off!"

MILK FOR KIDDIES ESSENTIAL; DEEMS

UNITED STATES FOOD ADMINISTRATOR PUTS W. F. HARPER IN CONTROL OF ICE AND MILK IN IOWA.

J. F. Deems, United States food administrator for Iowa, recently named W. F. Harper of Ottumwa as chief of the ice and milk division of the food administration in this state. Mr. Harper has made a special study of the milk and ice conditions in Iowa and has been engaged all summer in so adjusting control of the ice business as to secure an abundant supply at reasonable prices for consumers, and in conjunction with the state food and dairy commissioner, controlling milk supplies so that there will be no suffering among Iowa babies this year for lack of iced milk.

Mr. Harper has held a number of hearings relative to prices fixed by ice companies for service in this state, and has recently established a reasonable basis of charges which has been satisfactory to consumers as well as to those engaged in business, the expenses of which have been materially increased by the war.

Mr. Harper has issued a card of instructions to consumers which embodies all the information which experts have discovered relative to the economical use of ice. He has asked consumers to remember that men have been taken for United States service in large numbers from ice companies. During the past week six altogether have been taken from one company. This condition affects service and consumers are asked to remember this fact. In this connection Mr. Harper directs the attention of the users of ice to the fact that the coldest place in a refrigerator is at the bottom. This has been demonstrated by experience. People who put butter and milk next to the ice on the theory that that is the coldest place are making a mistake.

Mr. Harper advises against the use of paper around ice.

Iowa people who have complaints with respect to the practices of the ice and milk companies may correspond with Mr Harper at Ottumwa, who will undertake adjustments within the powers fixed by Food Administrator Deems.

IOWA THRASHERS SAVING MUCH FOOD

FORMED INTO ASSOCIATIONS TO AVOID WASTE IN THRASHING, BY FOOD ADMINISTRATOR DEEMS.

One of the most important activities of the United States food administration for Iowa, under direction of Administrator J. F. Deems, has been the formation of associations of thrashermen in every county in the state.

More than 250,000 farmers and other workers participate in the harvest in Iowa every year, and the food administration devised the idea of amalgamating them into associations for their mutual benefit.

The primary purpose for forming the organization was to save grain. The food administration has no other interest in it. It hoped to save the wheat and all other grains fit for human consumption, in order to increase the food supply of the country on behalf of our soldiers.

Statistics show that from 3 to 6 per cent of the wheat harvest has been lost in former years by careless methods of thrashing. Iowa has a 20,000,000 bushel wheat crop this year. By saving 3 per cent by more effective methods of thrashing the farmers of the state would increase their product 600000 bushels, which at current prices would mean more than $1,250,000 to them. As a matter of fact, the saving will amount to very much more than that.

One question that has arisen among the thrashermen, with which the food administration has absolutely nothing to do, is the question of prices for thrashing. This is a matter over which the food administration has absolutely no authority and it has not permitted a discussion of the subject in any of the meetings of thrashermen which its representatives have attended. It is a matter wholly for the thrashers and the grain owners to decide. The food administration's interest in the subject has been solely for the purpose of saving the grain.

The United States food administration early issued instructions to the food administrators, giving them discretion to increase the supply of food for thrashers, in order to make the conditions of the harvest satisfactory.

FAIRS WORKING WITH DEEMS

They Will Restrict Sugar and Meat Supplies to Refreshment Stands.

The food administration has applied the rule governing hotels, restaurants and public eating houses as to sugar and wheat bread to all eating stands on fair grounds of Iowa. It has cut out the allowance of sugar for lemonade or iced tea. It permits refreshment stands to buy two pounds of sugar for each 90 meals served last year. It requires sugar bowls to be removed from tables, and requires applications for sugar to be made to W. T. McElroy, chief of the sugar division at Ottumwa. The same rules that govern the serving of beef in hotels apply to refreshment stands on fair grounds, likewise the regulations relative to wheat flour.

French Sugar Mills Destroyed

France must import sugar today, most of it from this side of the ocean, because the largest portion of French sugar beet land is in German hands. As a result, the French people have been placed on a sugar ration of about 18 pounds a year for domestic use; a pound and a half a month. This photograph shows how the German troops destroyed French sugar mills. Thanks to the French rationing system the annual consumption has been cut to 600,000 tons, according to reports reaching the United States Food Administration. Before the war France had an average sugar crop of about 750,000 tons of sugar and had some left over for export.

THE TEETH OF THE TIGER

BY

MAURICE LEBLANC

TRANSLATED BY

CHAPTER FOURTEEN. Cont(inued.)

M. Desmalions opened the envelope with an eager hand. His first glance at the pages of writing which it contained made him give a start.

"Oh, the villain, the villain!" he said. "How was it possible for such a monster to exist? What a loathsome brute!"

In a jerky voice, which became almost inaudible at times owing to his amazement, he read:

The end is reached. My hour is striking Put to sleep by me, Edmond is dead without having been roused from his unconsciousness by the fire of the poison. My own death agony is beginning I am suffering all the tortures of hell. My hand can hardly write these lines. I suffer, how I suffer! And yet my happiness is unspeakable.

This happiness dates back to my visit to London, with Edmond, four months ago. Until then, I was dragging on the most hideous existence, hiding my hatred of the woman who detested me and who loved another, broken down in health, feeling myself already eaten up with an unrelenting disease, and seeing my son grow daily more weak and languid.

In the afternoon I consulted a great physician and I no longer had the least doubt left: the malady that was eating into me was cancer And I knew besides that, like myself, my son Edmond was on the road to the grave, likewise stricken with consumption.

That same evening I conceived the magnificent idea of revenge. And such a revenge! The most dreadful of accusations made against a man and a woman in love with each other! Poison! The assizes! Penal servitude! The scaffold! And no assistance possible, not a struggle, not a hope! Accumulated proofs, proofs so formidable as to make the innocent themselves doubt their own innocence and remain hopelessly and helplessly dumb What a revenge! * * * And what a punishment! To be innocent and to struggle vainly against the very facts that accuse you, the very certainty that proclaims you guilty

And I prepared everything with a glad heart Each happy thought, each invention made me shout with laughter Lord, how merry I was! You would think that cancer hurts; not a bit of it! How can you suffer physical pain when your soul is quivering with delight? Do you think I feel the hideous burning of the poison at this moment?

I am happy The death which I have inflicted on myself is the beginning of their torment. Then why live and wait for a natural death which to them would mean the beginning of their happiness? And as Edmond had to die why not save him a lingering illness and give him a death which would double the crime of Marie and Sauverand"

The end is coming. I had to break off the pain was too much for me. Now to pull myself together * * * How silent everything is! Outside the house and in the house are emissaries of the police watching over my crime At no great distance, Marie, in obedience to my letter, is hurrying to the trysting place, where her beloved will not come. And the beloved is roaming under the windows where his darling will not appear

Oh the dear little puppets whose strings I pull! Dance! Jump! Skip! Lord what fun they are! A rope round your neck, sir, and, madam, a rope round yours. Was it not you, sir, who poisoned Inspector Verot this morning and followed him to the Cafe du Petit Nuef, with your grand ebony walking stick? Why, of course it was! And at night the pretty lady poisons her stepson. Prove it? Well what about this apple, madam, the apple which you did not bite into and which all the same will be found to bear the marks of your teeth? What fun! Dance! Jump! Skip!

And the letters! The trick of my letters to the late lamented Langernault! That was my crowning triumph! Oh, the joy of it, when I invented and constructed my little mechanical toy! Wasn't it nicely thought out? Isn't it wonderfully neat and accurate" On the appointed day, click, the first letter! And, 10 days after, click, the second letter! Come, there's no hope for you, my poor friends, you're nicely done for Dance! Jump! Skip!

And what amuses me—for I am laughing now—is to think that nobody will know what to make of it. Marie and Sauverand guilty: of that there is not the least doubt. But, outside that, absolute mystery.

Nobody will know nor ever will know anything. In a few weeks' time, when the two criminals are irrevocably doomed, when the letters are in the hands of the police, on the 25th, or, rather, at 3 o'clock on the morning of the 26th of May, an explosion will destroy every trace of my work. The bomb is in its place. A movement entirely independent of the chandelier will explode it at the hour aforesaid.

I have just laid beside it the drab cloth manuscript book in which I pretended that I wrote my diary, the phials containing the poison, the needles which I used, an ebony walking stick, two letters from Inspector Verot, in short, anything that might save the culprits. Then how can any one know? No, nobody will know nor ever will know anything.

Unless—unless some miracle happens—unless the bomb leaves the walls standing and the ceiling intact. Unless, by some marvel of intelligence and intuition, a man of genius, unravelling the threads which I have tangled, should penetrate to the very heart of the riddle and succeed, after a search lasting for months and months, in discovering this final letter.

It is for this man that I write, well knowing that he cannot exist. But, after all, what do I care? Marie and Sauverand will be at the bottom of the abyss by then, dead no doubt, or in any case separated forever. And I risk nothing by leaving this evidence of my hatred in the hands of chance.

There, that's finished. I have only to sign. My hand shakes more and more. The sweat is pouring from my forehead in great drops. I am suffering the tortures of the damned and I am divinely happy! Aha, my friends, you were waiting for my death!

You, Marie, imprudently let me read in your eyes, which watched me stealthily, all your delight at seeing me so ill! And you were both of you so sure of the future that you had the courage to wait patiently for my death! Well, here it is, my death! Here it is and there are you, united above my grave, linked together with the handcuffs. Marie, be the wife of my friend Sauverand. Sauverand, I bestow my spouse upon you. Be joined together in holy matrimony. Bless you, my children!

The examining magistrate will draw up the contract and the executioner will read the marriage service. Oh, the delight of it! I suffer agonies—but oh, the delight! What a fine thing is hatred, when it makes death a joy! I am happy in dying. Marie is in prison. Sauverand is weeping in the condemned man's cell. The door opens. * * *

Oh, horror! the men in black! They walk up to the bed: "Gaston Sauverand, your appeal is rejected. Courage! Be a man!" Oh, the cold, dark morning—the scaffold! It's your turn, Marie, your turn! Would you survive your lover? Sauverand is dead: it's your turn. See, here's a rope for you. Or would you rather have poison? Die, will you, you hussy! Die with your veins on fire—as I am doing, I who hate you—hate you—hate you!

M. Desmalions ceased, amid the silent astonishment of all those present. He had great difficulty in reading the concluding lines, the writing having become almost wholly shapeless and illegible.

He said, in a low voice, as he stared at the paper:

"'Hippolyte Fauville.' The signature is there. The scoundrel found a last remnant of strength to sign his name clearly. He feared that a doubt might be entertained of his villainy. And indeed how could any one have suspected it?"

And, looking at Don Luis, he added:

"It needed, to solve the mystery, a really exceptional power of insight to which we must all do homage, to which I do homage. All the explanations which that madman gave have been anticipated in the most accurate and bewildering fashion."

Don Luis bowed and, without replying to the praise bestowed upon him, said:

"You are right, Monsieur le Prefet; he was a madman, and one of the most dangerous kind, the lucid madman who pursues an idea from which nothing will make him turn aside. He pursued it with superhuman tenacity and with all the resources of his fastidious mind, enslaved by the laws of mechanics.

"Another would have killed his victims frankly and brutally. He set his wits to work to kill at a long date, like an experimenter who leaves to time the duty of proving the excellence of his invention. And he succeeded only too well, because the police fell into the trap and because Mme. Fauville is perhaps going to die."

M. Desmalions made a gesture of decision. The whole business, in fact, was past history, on which the police proceedings would throw the necessary light. One fact alone was of importance to the present: the saving of Marie Fauville's life.

"It's true," he said, "we have not a minute to lose. Mme. Fauville must be told without delay. At the same time, I will send for the examining magistrate; and the case against her is sure to be dismissed at once."

He swiftly gave orders for continuing the investigations and verifying Don Luis' theories. Then, turning to Perenna:

"Come, monsieur," he said. "It is right that Mme. Fauville should thank her rescuer. Mazeroux, you come, too."

The meeting was over, that meeting in the course of which Don Luis gave the most striking proofs of his genius. Waging war, so to speak, upon the powers beyond the grave, he had forced the dead man to reveal his secret. He disclosed, as though he had been present throughout, the hateful vengeance conceived in the darkness and carried out in the tomb.

M. Desmalions showed all his admiration by his silence and by certain movements of his head And Perenna took a keen enjoyment in the strange fact that he, who was being hunted down by the police a few hours ago, should now be sitting in a motor car beside the head of that same force.

Nothing threw into greater relief the masterly manner in which he had conducted the business and the importance which the police attached to the results obtained. The value of his collaboration was such that they were willing to forget the incidents of the last two days. The grudge which Weber bore him was now of no avail against Don Luis Perenna.

M. Desmalions, meanwhile, began briefly to review the new solutions, and he concluded by still discussing certain points.

"Yes, that's it * * * there is not the least shadow of a doubt. * * * We agree. * * * It's that and nothing else. Still, one or two things remain obscure. First of all, the mark of the teeth. This, notwithstanding the husband's admission, is a fact which we cannot neglect."

"I believe that the explanation is a very simple one, Monsieur le Prefet. I will give it to you as soon as I am able to support it with the necessary proofs."

"Very well. But another question: how is it that Weber, yesterday morning, found that sheet of paper relating to the explosion in Mlle. Levasseur's room?"

"And how was it," added Don Luis, laughing, "that I found there the list of the five dates corresponding with the delivery of the letters"

"So you are of my opinion?" said M. Desmalions. "The part played by Mlle Levasseur is at least suspicious."

"I believe that everything will be cleared up, Monsieur le Prefet, and that you need now only question Mme. Fauville and Gaston Sauverand in order to dispel these last obscurities and remove all suspicion from Mlle Levasseur."

"And then," insisted M. Desmalions, "there is one more fact that strikes me as odd. Hippolyte Fauville does not once mention the Mornington inheritance in his confession. Why? Did he not know of it? Are we to suppose that there is no connection, beyond a mere casual coincidence, between the series of crimes and that bequest?"

"There, I am entirely of your opinion, Monsieur le Prefet. Hippolyte Fauville's silence as to that bequest perplexes me a little, I confess. But all the same I look upon it as comparatively unimportant. The main thing is Fauville's guilt and the prisoners' innocence."

Don Luis' delight was pure and unbounded. From his point of view, the sinister tragedy was at an end with the discovery of the confession written by Hippolyte Fauville. Anything not explained in those lines would be explained by the details to be supplied by Mme. Fauville, Florence Levasseur, and Gaston Sauverand. He himself had lost all interest in the matter.

The car drew up at Saint Lazare, the wretched, sorbid old prison which is still waiting to be pulled down.

The prefect jumped out. The door was opened at once.

"Is the prison governor there?" he asked. "Quick! Send for him, it's urgent."

Then, unable to wait, he at once hastened toward the corridors leading to the infirmary, and, as he reached the first floor landing, came up against the governor himself.

"Mme. Fauville," he said, without waste of time. "I want to see her——"

But he stopped short when he saw the expression of consternation on the prison governor's face.

"Well, what is it?" he asked. "What's the matter?"

"Why, haven't you heard, Monsieur le Prefet?" stammered the governor. "I telephoned to the office, you know—"

"Speak. What is it?"

"Mme. Fauville died this morning. She managed somehow to take poison."

M. Desmalions seized the governor by the arm and ran to the infirmary, followed by Perenna and Mazeroux.

He saw Marie Fauville lying on a bed in one of the rooms. Her pale face and her shoulders were stained with brown patches, similar to those which had marked the bodies of Inspector Verot, Hippolyte Fauville, and his son Edmond.

Greatly upset, the prefect murmured

"But the poison—where did it come from?"

"This phial and syringe were found under her pillow, Monsieur le Prefet."

"Under her pillow? But how did they get there? How did they reach her? Who gave them to her?"

"We don't know yet, Monsieur le Prefet."

M. Desmalions looked at Don Luis. So Hippolyte Fauville's suicide had not put an end to the series of crimes! His action had done more than aim at Marie's death by the hand of the law: it had now driven her to take poison Was it possible? Was it admissible that the dead man's revenge should still continue in the same automatic and anonymous manner?

Or rather—or rather, was there not some other mysterious will which was secretly and as audaciously carrying on Hippolyte Fauville's diabolical work?

Two days later came a fresh sensation: Gaston Sauverand was found dying in his cell. He had had the courage to strangle himself with his bedsheet. All efforts to restore him to life were vain.

On the table near him lay a half dozen newspaper cuttings, which had been passed to him by an unknown hand. All of them told the news of Marie Fauville's death.

CHAPTER XV.

The Heir to the Hundred Millions.

On the fourth evening after the tragic events related, an old cab driver, almost entirely hidden in a huge great coat, rang at Perenna's door and sent up a letter to Don Luis. He was at once shown into the study on the first floor. Hardly taking time to throw off his great coat, he rushed at Don Luis:

"It's all up with you this time, chief!" he exclaimed. "This is no moment for joking: pack your trunks and be off as quickly as you can!"

Don Luis, who sat quietly smoking in an easy chair, answered:

"Which will you have, Mazeroux? A cigar or a cigarete?"

Mazeroux at once grew indignant.

"But look here, chief, don't you read the papers?"

"Worse luck!"

"In that case, the situation appear as clear to you as it does to me and everybody else. During the last three days, since the double suicide, or, rather, the double murder of Marie Fauville and her cousin Gaston Sauverand, there hasn't been a newspaper but has said this kind of thing: 'And, now that M. Fauville, his son, his wife, and his cousin Gaston Sauverand are dead, there's nothing standing between Don Luis Perna and the Mornington inheritance!'

"Do you understand what that means? Of course, people speak of the explosion on the Boulevard Suchet and of Fauville's posthumous revelations; and they are disgusted with that dirty brute of a Fauville; and they don't know how to praise your cleverness enough. But there is one fact that forms the main subject of every conversation and every discussion.

HER FAVORITE SONG.

From the Washington Times.

"Sons of the Flag" has swept the country from coast to coast since it has been set to music.

Perhaps you have never heard "Sons of the Flag;" perhaps you never read "Sons of the Flag" before it was set to music? But if you haven't you are of the small minority.

It was originally a poem by a Washington boy, George Morrow Mayo, of the United States navy. It attracted instant attention after the first publication, and was remarked as one of the best versifications the war has yet brought out.

Then it was set to music, and Mme. Schumann-Heink, the noted opera singer, heard it. Mme. Schumann-Heink has three sons in the service. During the last Liberty loan campaign, she devoted practically all her time to campaigning for the bonds.

And everywhere she sang "Sons of the Flag." Asked what song she preferred of all the war songs the country has heard, she answered by singing the Washington boy's composition.

All the proceeds of sales of this music go to war relief work. The author is an enlisted man in the navy.

FAMOUS NOVELIST HELPING BRITISH

Sir Hall Caine.

This portrait of Sir Hall Caine, the famous novelist and dramatist, is by the Belgian artist, Jonniaux. Caine has spent practically all of his time since the beginning of the war in spreading British propaganda in the United States. He has written hundreds of articles which have been published by many papers. He was educated as an architect but never practiced. He lived for several years with the poet-painter, D. G. Rossetti.

HOME DIARY FROM LONDON

By Margaret Walter.

Went to see the exhibition of the Red Cross pearls at the Crafton galleries today. These pearls have been given singly and in pairs for the Red Cross and altogether there are already more than 3,000 of them. The queen, Queen Alexandra, all the princesses—there are just stacks of them when you come to count them up—have given generously of their treasures. Then I guess that about every woman in England who has ever laid claim to any jewelry at all will contribute at least one pearl. And remember that a pearl necklace to an Englishwoman is almost as much a necessity as a chemise. Over here they wear their pearls no matter what sort of clothes they are going to put on, wear them morning, noon and night. A girl begins to wear her string when she gets to be 14, usually at her coming out party, and she never takes them off. In this way most families have gradually acquired beautiful picked pearls; generation by generation, the necklaces have been reassembled, the finest going to the eldest daughter and so on.

The Countess of Rothes was wearing the family pearls, a necklace 300 years old, when she sang "Lead Kindly Light" as the Titanic sunk. From this heirloom she has selected two superb pearls for the Red Cross. One magnificent pear shaped drop pearl weighs 72 grains and the largest round pierced pearl is 34 grains. There are also black and pink pearls of almost priceless worth, and some people who have felt still a desire to give after they have contributed various pearls have sent lovely diamond clasps, of modern and antique workmanship. These will be used to finish the necklaces when they are finally arranged for sale.

I liked watching the royal party examining the jewels. It was funny to me, for whom one pearl is much like another, to watch these women recognize pearls as if they were people. Princess Mary and Princess Pat went round together exclaiming at every new arrival, "Why, there's Cicely's pet, look, wasn't it sweet of her?" "If there isn't that little rascal Pam's mascot, you know the one that's seen her through all her escapades." And so on.

Every pearl, suspended on a slender silken thread, is hung against rich cream velvet and royal deep blue frames the different cases. It's a wonderful exhibition which has its pathetic side, too, for by far the greater number of pearls are sent in memory and an enormous number are anonymous gifts of women who thus commemorate their fallen heroes.

CHAPLAINS HANDLED BY WAR DEPARTMENT

London.—(by mail)—The British army has 3,294 commissioned chaplains, including 1,344 Church of England clergymen, 662 Roman Catholic, 774 of various Protestant denominations, and 14 Jewish rabbis. These figures do not include Colonial chaplains nor chaplains engaged locally and uncommissioned.

The war office administers the army chaplains' department directly and chaplains are appointed by the secretary of war on the nomination of the various denominations. In France, the principal chaplain at the outset of the war was Rev. D. [illegible], of the Presbyterian church of Ireland, ranking as a brigadier general. At the present time Bishop Gwynne, of the Church of England, is in command, with the rank of major general. Dr. Simms has been graded to the same rank, and, remains in charge of all chaplains in France belonging to churches other than the church of England.

About 100 chaplains have been killed in action or died in service, and many have been wounded or invalided home from diseases contracted while on active service. A considerable number have been made prisoners of war, though most of these have been released subsequently under the provisions of the Geneva convention.

Honors received by the commissioned clergy in the British army includes two Victoria crosses, 66 distinguished service badges, 255 military crosses and 11 foreign orders.

Another Picture.

John Gould Fletcher in the current Dial has a beautiful and delicate description of London in war time.

Taxicabs trail softly, red tail lamps; somber busses, huge bulks of shadow, glide by; massive vans, their tops hooded, talk along bearing high three dim golden lanterns; now and then, furtively, the delicate silhouette of a hansom cleaves past, like a phantom of dead years. And between them move more erratically, shuttles of the loom, pawns of the chess play, the darting throngs of men. Black shapes, shifting and passing; shadowy clumps by shaded windows. Blue or green the lights burn over theaters; brown or green or scarlet squares glow softly in the dark facades. At the corner, a tall street lamp casts a pallid cone of light to the pavement, the yellow flare of a match lights up a face; and the black jagged line of serrated chimney pots juts out against the stars of the sky.

THE FRENCH FIRESIDE.

Frances Toplitz, in New York Times.

The French love their "foyers," their own fireside, and the solidarity and separateness of their family life. They have not the boarding house or hotel habit as we have in America, and gregariousness does not suit their temperament The very enterprising do not wait for the officials to find separate lodgings for them. They usually do it themselves For the others, the less energetic, it is a matter of weeks sometimes before they can be satisfactorily placed. With a proper regard for the training of the people, the French official does try not to send a weaver to an agricultural center and a farmer to a factory town. But mistakes do happen

The French government has planned well for its now shifting population. A daily allowance is made according to age, rent is paid, or, rather, provision is made for rent whenever families decide to lodge separately That the fine program of the government is not always carried out my be due to the enormous volume of work—this placing of whole cities of people at one time and at short notice. Where the task is too big for the local authorities, the Red Cross steps in, and together the responsibilities are carried There is a fine spirit of co-operation With the Red Cross worker's understanding that she is not there to show the French people what they should do, but to help them carry out the work they have planned, rehabilitation of families can be made to count.

It is a tremendous rush and hurry all the time Things must be done quickly one must think on one's feet Getting materials, furniture, stoves, kitchen utensils, is a problem, in some things the country has been scraped to the bone It keeps the purchasing bureau on the hop. Here are thousands of people with nothing but the clothes they are standing in And eventually they are to go back to their homes homes denuded—yes and in many instances razed to the ground The few things they can take back with them will be their beginning

Give a Frenchwoman a bed, a "marmite," and a stove and she can make a home It is one of the gratifying things after a day's work to step into one of these little improvised homes of a "repat, as we, in our American hurry, have abbreviated them, and see a reconstructed family It may only be a bed, a table, some chairs, a stove, and a "marmite," but we know that in their hearts they feel that it is better than the "cantonement," and the woman, industrious from habit bustles about as if she had a complex household to take care of

You may drop into a home at almost any time and the "marmite" is on the stove A thick soup with some bread broken into it, and they have a meal. It is well not to question what goes into that soup, but when it is ready to be served it is very savory and palatable I can only recall one instance where there was that lack of provident planning, so apparent in many of our American households where the "delicatessen" store is the first aid, and there the woman apologized for having eggs, butter, red wine, and bottled water for her luncheon. Eggs and butter are almost prohibitive as to price, and one wondered how she ever did it on the allocation money—1 franc 50 centimes (30 cents) a day for adults, and 1 franc (20 cents) for each child—plus the 40 centimes an hour she earned for cleaning—8 cents an hour

War bread, loaves fully a yard long or in rings no less than two feet in diameter or in solid round loaves of similar dimensions, is ever present. It is never wrapped in paper Everybody walks along the street with his loaf of bread under his arm, and all the sanitary measures we take to have our bread wrapped and sealed, or handled with gloved hands only, would probably be scoffed at The war bread is not very good, but we may judge from the size of the loaves that it is not unpopular One does not feel any shortage of food here, except, perhaps sugar and chocolate I have not the least doubt there are many "speak easy" places in town where these can be had

DRY SWEET CORN.

Corn intended for drying should be gathered when in the "milk stage." Husk the ears, trim out any worm injuries or other defects, but do not spend time in attempting to remove silks as they are readily separated after drying Place the ears in a wire basket or shallow box having a bottom of wire netting made to fit into an ordinary washboiler, have the boiler partially filled with water and brought to boiling by the time the crate is filled and plunge the crate into the boiling water Allow it to remain in the vigorously boiling water for 8 to 12 minutes. Spread upon trays to a depth of ½ to ⅝ inch if the corn is to be dried in the sun or 1 inch if drying in a drier The temperature of the drier may be 130 to 140 degrees at the beginning and should be increased 15 to 20 degrees toward the end of the process. The grain should be thoroughly stirred several times to separate any compact masses.

If corn is dried in the sun, it should be finished by pouring into breadpans, placing in the oven of the stove, and warming to 160 to 165 degrees for two hours, with frequent stirring, as it is practically impossible to bring corn to a sufficient degree of dryness by the unaided heat of the sun Drying should in every case be continued until the grains are hard, semitransparent, and break to bits with a clean, glasslike fracture when crushed.

When corn has been brought to this degree of dryness, it may be permanently stored at once, preferably in closely woven muslin bags or heavy paper bags, tied tightly at the neck and placed within a large muslin bag which is in turn tightly tied.

BATTLE SCARRED GUNS ARE GIVEN REPAIRS

Manchester (by mail)—Big, battle scarred guns from Flanders are returned here for overhauling and repair. One, it was noted, by a party of journalists inspecting war work in this district, had been blown in two, the effect of a shell's premature explosion. The remnant of the gun had been brought here so that experts might determine what had been the shell's defect.

In the early days of the war faulty shells were responsible for a large number of guns being destroyed as a result of "prematures." So much care is now taken in the manufacture of shells that the percentage of prematures has fallen remarkably low, the figures being only one to many hundred thousands.

Chiefly for roofing automobiles an imitation glass that resembles celluloid has been invented in Europe.

TALENT VS. GENIUS.

Oliver Wendell Holmes.

The world is always ready to receive talent with open arms. Very often it does not know what to do with genius. Talent is a docile creature. It bows its head meekly while the world slips its collar over it. It backs into the shafts like a lamb. It draws its load cheerfully and is patient of the bit and the whip. But genius is always impatient of its harness; its wild blood makes it hard to train.

Talent is a very common family trait, genius belongs rather to individuals, just as you find one giant or one dwarf in a family, but rarely a whole brood of either Talent is often to be envied, and genius very commonly to be pitied. It stands twice the chance of the other of dying in a hospital, in jail, in debt, in bad repute. It is a perpetual insult to mediocrity; its every word is a trespass against somebody's vestal ideas.

CROSSING THE ENGLISH CHANNEL AFTER NIGHT

From the Paris Mail

The draft "fell in" at dusk in the great shed on the quay. There were little groups of men from almost every regiment in the forces hurridly called together from distant camps in England to throw in their weight against the German flood They had sung as they marched through the seaport town but when the dock gates clanged behind them they had entered a new life, the grim seriousness of which was only just making itself felt.

Marshaled there in the shed they stood silently while the rolls were called and the "parade states" checked before the embarkation staff officer. Then they filed out past the shipping to where lay the long, gray 20-knotter ready for the crossing

A solemn business, this embarkation. Tired after many hours in the train, the men had no sooner thrown off their equipment and adjusted their cumbersome lifebelts than they wrapped their great coats about them and made ready for the night The old hands—many of them returning after three or four wounds—found the warm, snug corners and were soon asleep But for many it was their first sea trip; and as the boat slipped quietly down the channel to the sea they watched intently the many strange sights around them.

The conducting officers of the draft gathered together in the saloon, and the senior officer was appointed O. C. troopship. He selected an adjutant and divided the remainder into watches. The rules and regulations of a night crossing were then read and explained.

On deck all was in darkness. The vibration of the decks and the slapping of the lanyards against the mast showed that the trooper had picked up her naval convoy and was "hitting it out" full speed for the French coast. Gathered in the stern a few men stood silently watching the dim outline of the coast with its headland light gradually fading In a few minutes the light, too, had been swallowed by the blackness.

Plunging into every sea alongside was a long, low destroyer, which every now and then flicked a message from its bridge to some unseen ship. There was another destroyer, its presence indicated only by the broad trail of foam lashed up by its racing propellers. They gave a sense of security, these boats. When, as the night deepened, they disappeared from time to time, the deck guards, strange to the mysteries of the sea would whisper among themselves, speculating as to the mission which had called them away. But they always returned, ready at the scent of danger to burst into a tornado of death-dealing fire.

Picking his way carefully among the sleeping forms the officer of the watch made his rounds from deck to deck. There was a sharp reprimand for the owner of a glowing cigaret. A man was roused for sleeping too comfortably without his lifebelt. A party dividing up the next day's rations was making too much noise. Someone had so far forgotten the discipline of the ship as to climb on the gun platform and discuss the working of the chaser gun with its watchful naval crew.

The night was at its blackest when a light flicked right ahead. A sudden blast from the siren brought every man to his feet. The men clung to railing as the ship heeled over in answer to a hard ported helm. A moment of tense excitement and the danger was past A great wall of dripping rust towering above the trooper's decks loomed up out of the night. There was an exchange of deep throated shouts from bridge to bridge. An officer roared, "Stand fast, men!" Then the tramp was swallowed up in the darkness as suddenly as it had appeared

An hour later the troopship was sheltering behind a friendly breakwater, and at dawn the draft was disembarked.

A Scheme Balked.

From the New York Times.

One of Germany's agents in this country proposed, it seems, the purchase of an important paper in each of 30 American cities, and professed the belief that by an aggregate expenditure in this way of from $30,000,000 to $50,000,000 the United States could be kept out of the war. This is a rather interesting revelation, but as the grandiose plan was not carried out, or, so far as known, even attempted, the world will have to endure with whatever of resignation it can command an eternal uncertainty as to whether the agent in question really thought the course of this nation thus could be determined or whether he was well aware of the futility of his proposal and merely aspired to share the gorgeous pickings there would be for the handlers of those Teutonic millions.

The one theory is about as plausible as the other, for German agents again and again have displayed an amazing inability to understand the American mind and about as often they have demonstrated an equally amazing ability to spend great sums of German money without producing any results except the enlargement of their private bank accounts

Of course, if 30 important American papers had been bought for propagandist use, they would have ceased to be important within two weeks after the secret influence behind them had begun to affect the contents of their columns. Americans keep sharp eyes on their newspapers, and they very soon discover the character and aims of the man who run them. Had 30 of our papers suddenly become pro-German, or even if they had only become coldly pro-American and pro-ally, the change would have been noted, and the consequence would have been the immediate loss of any power over public opinion they had formerly possessed.

Free people have minds of their own, and they are not guided by a "reptile press" to any appreciable degree.

Would Need Patience.

There is a great deal in putting it nicely. A prisoner was being sentenced some time ago.

"You have a pleasant home and a bright fireside, with happy children sitting around it, haven't you?" asked the judge.

"Yes, sir," said the prisoner, who thought he saw a way out of the difficulty.

"Well," said the judge, "if the happy children sit around the fireside till you return they will stay there just 42 days."—Pearson's.

The Smiths were at dinner. "I told Murray that we might drop in on them this evening," remarked Mr. Smith.

"Oh, pshaw!" exclaimed Mrs. Smith, impatiently. "You know I don't want to visit those Murrays, and I can't understand why you do."

"I don't," replied the husband. "I told him that so that we might stay at home without fear of having them drop in on us."

Packers' Costs and Profits

How much do you think it costs—

1. To dress beef, cure hides, and prepare all the numerous by-products?
2. To cool the meat for two or three days before shipment?
3. To freight it to all parts of the country in special refrigerator cars, iced daily?
4. To carry it in hundreds of branch houses, each with its refrigerating plant?
5. And to deliver it to the retailer—sweet and fresh—in less than two weeks after dressing?

Swift & Company did all this for you in 1917 at an expense of less than 2½ cents per pound of beef sold, including an average profit of ¼ of a cent a pound.

Don't buy what you don't need, but whatever you buy—buy it right. Pay enough to insure quality. The height of extravagance is buing cheap stuff.

Good trustworthy new fall suits at $22.50 to $35.00, the "top notchers" at $40 to $50. The thing we gave careful study, was, to make sure that there was real value and dependable service in every suit.

We knew that "cash behind a quantity purchase" would secure us the lowest price—but, as before said, we were careful not to beat ourselves and our customers by paying "too little."

It is easy to waste money on worthless goods—and there's more deception practiced than ever this year.

OUR BIRTHDAY

The Times Now On It's Twenty-third Year Of Business

Newspapers are a great deal like human beings—they have a birthday about once a year. This week we begin our twenty-third year and you will notice on the head rule a new figure: Vol. XXIII, No. 1.

We believe we have not lowered the standard of the paper in the past year, possibly we have raised it some, but we leave that to the readers to judge for we are a modest paper and do not like to pin roses on ourself. We aim to tell the truth as much as possible but occasionally we have to be human and diverge from the straight and narrow path of truthfulness.

The past year has been a disaster to many newspapers in the state which is due to the war, but we have managed to float on top and we will hold that position as long as possible and will give our patrons the best of service in newspaper and job work.

We also want to thank the many subscribers of the Times for their cooperation in helping to make this paper worth while and a booster for Klemme. We are here to boost for Klemme and help it on to it's position on the map.

AMERICANS ASKED TO LIMIT USE OF SUGAR

Must Use No More Than Two Pounds Per Person a Month if the Present Meagre Allied Sugar Ration Is Maintained.

Stocks Will Be Short Until Beginning of New Year—Ration May Be Enlarged Then.

Two pounds of sugar a month—half a pound a week—that is the sugar ration the U. S. Food Administration has asked every American to observe until January 1, 1919, in order to make sure there shall be enough for our Army and Navy, for the Allied armies and for the civilians of those nations.

By New Year's the world sugar situation will be relieved somewhat by the new crop. Cuban sugar of this year's crop will be arriving in this country.

Every available sugar source will be drawn on by the Food Administration during the next winter months to maintain sufficient stocks here to keep up our national sugar supply. During October the first American beet sugar will arrive in the markets. By the middle of November some of our Louisiana cane crop will be available. All of this sugar and more may be needed to keep this nation supplied on a reduced ration and to safeguard the Allied sugar ration from still further reduction. In Europe the present ration is already reduced to a minimum.

Our Situation.

The situation which the United States faces in its efforts to maintain a fair distribution of sugar to the Allied world is as follows:

Sugar supplies throughout the country, in homes, stores, factories and bakeries are at a low ebb. We must make increased sugar shipments to the Allies.

Production of American beet and Louisiana cane crops have been disappointing.

Porto Rico crops have been curtailed.

Immense sugar stocks in Java cannot be reached on account of the shipping shortage; ships are needed for troop movements and munitions.

Army and Navy sugar requirements have increased as well as those from the Allies.

Most industries using sugar have had their allotment reduced by one-half; some will receive no sugar.

Households should make every effort to preserve the fruit crop without sugar, or with small amounts of sugar. Later, when the sugar supply is larger, the canned fruit may be sweetened as it is used.

OVERDRAFT AGREEMENT OF HANCOCK COUNTY BANKS

To The Patrons of the Banks of Hancock County:

The Superintendent of Banking, acting in harmony with the Comptroller of the Currency at Washington, has demanded that the Banks refuse payment of checks unless the Depositor has sufficient funds to his credit to meet the same

The Bank will have no discretion in the matter, and our patrons are requested to assist the Banks in carrying out the above order, as we will be compelled to refuse payment of all checks that will cause overdrafts.

We further agree not to solicit business from customers of other Banks whom we know are dissatisfied with their banking connections because they are refused overdraft privileges.

This Resolution to become effective on the 10th day of September, 1918.

We trust that every depositor will keep himself fully informed as to the amount of his bank balance, so that no inconvenience or embarrassment need result to anyone.

ENGLISH M. E. CHURCH

J. M. Howdeshell, Pastor

In spite of the fact that men and women in the church and out of it are lifting their puny weak hands and voices against the propagation of the doctrine of entire sanctification as a second crisis in the Christian experience as preached by the Wesleys and their co-workers, the revival of holiness moves on at a tremendous rate. The holiness camp meeting has become a permanent fixture in the religious life of this nation. From the northern lakes to the southern gulf and the Virginia beach to the California shore, this continent is dotted over with camp grounds where thousands of people gather every year to hear the preaching of a full redemption. In these camps thousands are converted each year. Other thousands are truly sanctified and tens of thousands in the church and out of it are thoroughly convinced that God provides for holiness in the Gospel, and will require holiness at His judgment bar. Holiness is a Bible doctrine, and God will have it preached. If the pulpit becomes so anxious for popularity, big salraies and numbers in it's ranks that it is afraid to preach holiness; God will leave it to itself and call some fishermen from Galilee to go into brush arbors, tents and elsewhere to gather in the lost sheep of the house of Israel. Yes, friends, holiness is spreading and the holiness folks are the cleanest, happiest people on earth, and thank God we have a heaven to go to heaven in. There is just one key to the door of heaven, and that is a pure heart. Let us remember that God has said, "Without holiness no man shall see the Lord." Heb. 12:14. Then do not allow yourself to think that with your unbelief, your unregenerated heart, your sneers, criticisms, and fault findings with holiness preaching that you can stop this great movement which God has launched for the regeneration of sinners, and the sanctification of believers.

Preaching service at 10:30 o'clock a. m. I have something of very much importance to say to you at this service. Be sure and be there.

Sunday School at 11:30 o'clock. Do not forget this important service. We have not shouted it from housetops ourselves that we have the best Sunday School from every standpoint that there is in the county, but many others from larger churches have told us so many times of the greatness of our Sunday School that we are now brave to say, "Come and see for yourself," and if we are mistaken we shall gladly confess our faults!

Epworth League at 8:00 o'clock in the evening. Topic—The Stewardship of Life. Leader, Mrs. Herbert Bailey.

Preaching service at 8:30 o'clock.

Letters From Our Boys In Service

Hqs. Co. 1st Regiment, F. A. R. D.

Camp Jackson, S. C., Aug. 17, 1918

To the Ladies of Klemme:

I received the comfort kit a few days ago and wish to thank you very much for the same. I was just in need of some of the many articles which it contained. The Eas'm is a mighty fine thing for a person that is on his feet most of the day, especially down in this hot climate.

Just a few lines aobut South Carolina and the Camp and I will ring off.

Two months ago the 13th, I landed in this camp, with the rest of the Iowa boys that were at Madison. We were sure disappointed for a while, but everybody got down to business right off the reel and have made good.

The camp when full will contain about forty-five thousand soldiers and they are preparing to make it large enough for one hundred thousand and claim it will be the best camp in the south when completed. Have an aviation field a short way from our drill grounds, also observation ballons. These are necessary in artillery in order to tell the gunners just where their shells are falling.

I have been doing office work most of the time since I landed in this camp, but if it was not so hot would sooner be out on the field with the rest of the boys. It sure gets hot here, was 140 out on the drill grounds a few days ago and has been just as hot since. August and the fore part of September are the hottest months so the people state here.

The crops are good so an old darkey told me the other day. I asked him what they raised down here in all this sand. "Everything," he said, but all I have seen so far are pine trees and cotton. The cotton crop will be a bumper if nothing happens to it.

Wishing to thank the ladies of Klemme again for the comfort kit, I remain,

Yours truly,
Cpl. P. Grange.

SHARE OUR SUGAR WITH THE ALLIES

British Get Two Pounds a Month. French Pound and Half, Italians One Pound.

GERMAN SUPPLY PLENTIFUL.

All Nations Permit Use of Sweetening for Home Preserving Purposes.

America's new sugar ration of two pounds a month per person is equitable when compared with the sugar ration enforced by rigid governmental order in England, France and Italy, nations with which we are sharing sugar.

Each Allied nation—in the matter of sugar consumption—is sharing on nearest possible equal terms the hardships imposed by greatly altered conditions of transportation.

Formerly classed as a luxury, sugar is now a war time essential. The fair and just division of this essential is in the hands of the various Allied food controllers.

The United States Food Administration has asked this nation to observe a voluntary sugar ration of two pounds per person a month.

In the other countries at war with Germany sugar is one of the scarce articles on every menu—whether in the households of both rich and poor, or in the hotels.

England today has a sugar ration of two pounds per month per person. In France the ration is a pound and a half and in Italy it is one pound a month. And the prices in allied countries are from two to three times as high as in America.

If you go to a hotel in England or France these days and order tea or coffee they serve absolutely no sugar with it. If you want sugar you must bring it with you.

In England it is allowable to use one-seventh of an ounce of sugar in the preparation of each luncheon. In France many persons carry little saccharine tablets about with them for use in hotels and in England rich and poor must take their sugar with them if they wish to have sweetened tea while visiting friends.

Before the war started France had 625,000 acres devoted to sugar production. By 1917 the French sugar acreage had decreased to 180,000 acres. Today the French man or woman with a sugar card has no assurance whatever that he or she will be able to actually buy sugar. To buy it, one must first find it.

Italy Has "State Sugar."

Especially drastic regulations govern the use of sugar in Italy. Its manufacture, distribution and sale are closely controlled, and in part actually taken over by the state.

Saccharine is permitted to be sold and used as a substitute for sugar and the government manufactures a mixture of saccharine and sugar called "State Sugar," which is largely used

German Sugar Ration Adequate.

Germany, before the war, produced a great surplus of sugar and exported large quantities. Today the Germans have virtually gone out of the export business, but have plenty of cheap sugar for home use.

Wholesale prices prevalent in the Allied nations, according to information received by the United States Food Administration are as follows: England, 10 cents a pound; France, 12 cents; Italy, 26 cents.

While these high prices are being paid abroad the American wholesale price is being held at 7½ cents.

Easy.

THE KLEMME TIMES

RAY A. JORGENSON, PUB.

KLEMME, IOWA

According to the original contract which Barnum made with Jenny Lind, she contracted to sing at 150 concerts in the United States and Havana for $1,000 a concert, the contract providing, however, that if Barnum made a clear profit of $75,000 from the first 75 concerts, Miss Lind should, for the remaining 75 concerts, receive, in addition to $1,000 a concert, one-fifth of the profits, but that, on the other hand, if the first 50 concerts fell short of Barnum's expectations, she should have half of the gross receipts from the remaining 100 concerts. Before the concerts began, however, that contract was, at Barnum's instance, recinded and a new contract made which resulted in Miss Lind receiving in profits from the concerts which she gave under it almost twice as much as she would have received under the original contract.

The first serious difficulty between the United States and Austria arose 65 years ago as a result of the Koszta incident, which strained relations between the two countries almost to the breaking point. Martin Koszta, a Hungarian patriot, after taking part in the uprising of 1848 and subsequent years, came to America and declared his intention of becoming a citizen In 1853, while on a visit to Smyrna, he was seized and imprisoned on board an Austrian war vesel He had with him an American passport, and claimed the protection of the United States warship St Louis, then in the harbor of Smyrna Captain Ingraham demanded that Koszta be released, but he was not freed until after the decks of the St. Louis had been cleared for action.

After the close of the performance creditors attached the scenery and wardrobes. Signor Rosi has been more than six years in Japan and is personally popular Deep regret is expressed by the public at his misfortunes, because he has generously loaned his theater gratuitously for many charitable performances.

One of the most amusing tricks in fire works is the serpent's egg trick, where a little pellet when lighted turns into a horrible snake, many, many times the size of the pellet. How awe inspiring it is to the youngster! Most people have no idea what in the world causes the snake to appear. The explanation is simple. Mercury sulphocyanid burns with a voluminous ash. The little pellet is nothing more than some mercury sulpho-cyanid. The heat causes the ash to move off so quickly from the burning pellet that, it writhes and distorts itself into the shape of a miniature snake.

Montana is the latest state to report wonderful discoveries of manganese ore. There is great excitement in that state over an alleged marvelous discovery at a mine where already about 1,000,000 tons of this precious ore are in sight. In view o fthe many exaggerated reports concerning manganese ore that have been circulated in the United States since are war began, the report may mean little more than some of the others.

DES MOINES CONCERNS PAY HIGH PRICE FOR COAL

Des Moines, Ia., Aug. 30.—C. L. Herring, head of the Polk county fuel board, declares that local manufacturing concerns and public service corporations are being compelled to pay $2.80 for steam coal here, whereas steam coal is being sold very much cheaper elsewhere. He declares they are afraid to buy outside the city for fear they would be cut off by the local mines in case of a pinch.

"The truth is that the national fuel administration never intended that the maximum figure named by it should be the prevailing price of steam coal," says Director Herring. "They set it high to encourage production, figuring that high priced coal is better than none at all. As to whether the price is fair to consumers, it may be stated that a Mason City firm—I have the name and correspondence—is buying steam coal at $1 per ton.

"I know further that an Albia mine has offered the Des Moines Electric Company 10,000 tons of steam coal at $1.25. I have quotations from other Iowa towns showing that the operators there would be glad to dispose of their steam coal at $1.25

Waterloo, Ia., Aug 30.—Fred Ritter, 48 years old, an assemblyman in a factory here, has won his fight to enlist in the army.

Ritter called first at the naval training office, passed his physical examination, but was rejected when he said he was born in Alsace-Lorraine.

Later, at the army recruiting station, Ritter had better luck. He stated that while he was born in Alsace-Lorraine, it was at a time when this province was under control of France. He contended that inasmuch as he was born on French soil he did not need naturalization papers.

"I was born just a few months before Alsace-Lorraine was captured by the Germans in 1870," he told the recruiting officer.

When the matter was taken up with superior authorities Ritter's contention was adjudged to be correct, and he was allowed to enlist He joined the signal corps.

SOLICITING OF WAR CONTRACTS IS WRONG

Governor Harding In Washington Interview Tells How Middle West Is Suffering.

Washington, D. C., Aug. 29.—Governor Harding, of Iowa, who is in Washington, in an interview assailed the system of personal solicitation of war contracts. He declared that as a result all the war contracts are being gobbled up by the big fellows in the east, while Iowa and the middle west are getting none. Governor Harding said Iowa could not keep up its standard of agricultural production unless something was done to stop moving labor out of the state, that many of her 350 factories were idle, that several big mines had been idle two days a week the last month, and that both Iowa and the whole middle west face a serious situation.

The Fort Des Moines hospital has a capacity in so far as space is concerned to care for 1,159 men, and is one of the larger of the military hospitals classed as general hospitals. However it will require a considerably larger staff and much more equipment if the hospital fills up to capacity, as it doubtless will if the war continues.

The extension of the British line north of the Scarpe has br the attackers to within striking distance of a good part of the Hi burg line, back of which is open country with the terrain and in excellent condition for the movement of tanks and horses.

The British made steady progress again today, especially on the new section of the front, around Bapaume and astride the Somme. German resistance again was stubborn. However, it is beginning to look as though the enemy was fighting rear guard actions with the hope of holding up the British until he can move his material to the rear.

No Fresh Troops Thrown In.

No fresh German divisions have been identified in the recent fighting. The strategy of the German high command now is to leave battered divisions to fight rear guard actions, and incidentally to have a large part of the remnants of these formations chewed to pieces by the British fire.

Elements of nearly 30 German divisions, many of which have been badly hit and crippled, are striving to hold off the British. There are signs of even greater confusion behind the German lines. Companies of various regiments have been thrown in almost any place. The strength of a large number of these companies has been whittled down until they hardly contain 25 men, according to prisoners, many of whom have passed through the collecting cages.

The number of captured Germans, it is said, runs well into the thousands.

Troops of Field Marshal Haig today are advancing astride the river Scarpe and are pushing forward to the south of Bapaume. Elsewhere along the British front their progress continues.

There has been heavy fighting at Longueval and on the adjacent ground where the Germans launched a heavy counter attack with fresh forces brought up especially for the purpose from Sedan.

In the face of this counter attack the British fell back to the edge of Longueval.

In the course of the night the New Zealanders swept around Bapaume to the north and reached the railway just north of the Bapaume-Cambral road.

The Germans are offering stiff resistance in the neighborhood of Thilloy, to the south of Bapaume.

Fighting in Bapaume.

Reports have been received from the advanced lines that British patrols have again entered the outskirts of Bapaume and that there has been street fighting between the British and Germans on the edge of the town.

The British have penetrated the Hindenburg line at one point to the east of Heninel, which is between Bapaume and the Scarpe river and hard fighting is reported to be in progress here. The British advanced lines are now reported to be east of Monchy-Le-Preux. German rear guards are fighting to retain their hold on Pelves, on the south bank of the Scarpe, the British having reached the edge of the town.

North of the Scarpe progress is being made by the British on both sides of the road to Douai. As Haig's forces advanced south of the river the Germans soon found that the ground north of the stream was extremely dangerous. There they are being forced back, leaving their rear protected with a large number of machine guns and are employing the same tactics that they generally are using along the rest of the battle front.

The British advance gives evidence of temporary slowing up at various places along the front.

Many more prisoners and guns and another German battalion commander have been taken. The officer was taken in the fighting around Beugnatre, north of Bapaume.

The total number of machine guns taken from the Germans in the present drive must now run way up in the thousands.

London, Aug. 27.—British forces are established in the northern outskirts of Bapaume, according to the official statement issued at the war office today.

London, Aug. 27.—Canadian troops, after capturing Wancourt, carried their lines east of Guemappe, Field Marshal Haig announced today.

London, Aug. 27.—British forces in the great battle in northern Picardy are making progress toward the village of Beugnatre, two and a half miles northeast of Bapaume, according to the official statement issued at the war office today. There is hard fighting around Croisilles further north, the statement says.

Since last Wednesday the British have taken 21,000 prisoners, the statement says.

By Associated Press.

British pressure is being maintained all along the front from the Scarpe to the Somme and an advance through the Hindenburg line south of the Scarpe appears as one of the possibilities of the near future.

On one section of the battle field the British are on the Hindenburg line, but apparently have not progressed east of it on a front of any great width. Important gains have been made astride the Arras-Cambrai road and another push like that of Monday's will place the northern wing of the British attacking army on the ground virtually unscarred by the fighting.

Flank Picardy Salient.

German resistance continues to be stubborn.

Each extension northward of the fighting lines adds to the difficulties and dangers of the Germans within the Picardy salient. An advance of several miles south of the Scarpe or the winning of the Hindenburg line on a front of any width would outflank virtually all the German gains made in Picardy this year. Behind the advancing British line astride the Scarpe are the hills around Arras from which hundreds of guns pour a devastating fire on the hard pressed Germans. Several miles in the rear of the Hinden-

BERLIN COMMUNIQUE.

Berlin, Aug. 26.—The supplemental official statement from German headquarters this evening reads:

"The British attacks have extended to north of the Scarpe

"On both sides of Bapaume and north of the Somme there have been various engagements. Enemy attacks in the main have failed. At some points counter attacks still are in progress. Longueval and Montauban, temporarily lost, have been recaptured.

"Between the Somme and the Ancre, apart from local engagements north of the Ancre, the day has been quiet. Partial engagements occurred north of the Aisne."

PRAISE BRITISH STRATEGY

By the Canadian Press.

HE VOLUNTEERS TO BRING UP A TRUCK LOAD OF AMMUNITION AND MATERIAL OVER A ROAD SWEPT BY ARTILLERY AND MACHINE GUN FIRE

QUICK WON MEDAL OF HONOR IN CUBA IN 1898 WHEN HE SIGNALED TO A U.S. WARSHIP FROM A HILLTOP, THOUGH IN A HAIL OF SPANISH BULLETS

The title of hero of two wars may rightly be given to John Henry Quick, who also bears the title of Sergeant Major in the U S Marines

Quick got into the Spanish-American war as quick as he could when it broke out At one time during his service in Cuba the enemy lay in ambush for the American forces Aid of the U S S Dolphin was needed

Quick risked his life to stand on a prominent crest of land near the enemy and flash signals to the ship informing her commander where to fire to rout the enemy Despite the fact that bullets sputtered and fell around him he stood there nonchalantly as if in camp and wigwagged the message.

Congress awarded him a congressional medal of honor for his conduct.

When America got into the world war Quick got in, too. On June 6 he volunteered to assist in taking a truckload of ammunition and material into the town of Bourecshes, France, over a road swept by artillery and machine gun fire thereby relieving a critical situation For this he was highly commented and cited by General Pershing

Great Britain's Share.

Louis Tracy, a Member of the British War Mission, in the Washington Star.

New York and many other great cities in the United States love a procession, and it is a startling fact to note that if the dead and wholly war shattered youth of the British empire could march down Fifth avenue in platoons of 20 men in a rank the pallid host could not pass from Central park to Washington square in 10 long summer days. America is proud, and very properly proud, of the great army she has poured into France. It is 1,000,000 in round numbers. But Britain has already lost 1,000,000 in dead and grievously wounded, while 2,500,000 have been smitten by the pestilence called Germany.

It has been estimated that Britain has fought on 17 fronts during the last four years. One can readily enumerate most of them, for her troops have been to the fore in Belgium, France, Italy, Serbia, Greece, Russia, Palestine, Mesopotamia, China and North, East and West Africa, to name only the main theaters of the war. She and her colonies have raised 7,500,000 soldiers, and of this total England's (not Great Britain's) proportion is 60 per cent. In this regard I must remove a misapprehension, or, to be candid, nail down a Hun lie, which has found credence in some quarters. I shall not labor the point It should suffice if I state with absolute authority that one man in every seven and a half of the population of England is in the army The same ratio holds good of Scotland. Wales has contributed one man in every 10 and a fifth, Ireland one man in every 26 and a third, and the overseas dominions one man in every 15

The ministry of munitions handles 50,000,000 articles per week, and sends abroad 60,000 consignments per week. In addition to over 90 national arsenals, Great Britain has now 5,046 government controlled factories, all working day and night on munitions and supplies. In October, 1917, about 2,000,000 men and about 700,000 women were engaged in munition work proper. In July, 1917, the number of women employed in government work of all kinds stood 1,085,000. According to the board of trade Labor Gazette of November 16, 1917, the number had risen to 1,302,000 before the latter date. Women do 66 to 20 per cent of all the machine work on shells, fuses and trench warfare supplies, and have contributed 1,450 trained mechanics to the Royal Flying corps. In one way or another about 5,000,000 British women are working for their country in her need, many of whom never worked in their lives before.

Turning to the fleet, what shall I say, what can I say that will be at all adequate to the theme, of the work done by the British navy? It would be almost ludicrous, in a review of Britain's share in the war, to dismiss in a sentence the absolutely vital part borne by the fleet did I not feel assured that every intelligent man and woman in the United States knows as well, if not better, than I that the civilised world owes its existence today to the unparalleled services rendered by the navy. Britain's ships have kept open the ocean highways and penned the Hun in his few protected harbors. The navy has tripled its personnel and doubled its fighting armament. It has transported over the face of the waters 13,000,000 of men, 2,000,000 of horses and mules, 500,000 vehicles, 25,000,000 tons of explosives, 51,000,000 tons of oil and fuel, and 130,000,000 tons of food and other stores.
